A similar view was expressed by the same learned Judge in Maung Tun Thein v. Maung Sin (2). In an earlier case reported in U Maung Nge v. P. L. S. P. Chettiar Firm (3) a Bench of that Court of which Dunkley, J. was a member held:

"A creditor whose attachment has been raised and who avails himself of the right given by O. XXI, r. 63, can sue on his own behalf alone for having the alienation declared void, without mention of any other creditors or other debts."

In that case the plaintiff alleged that the deed of transfer was a bogus one and was brought about for the purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors. In that case an earlier ruling in R. R. O. O. Chettiar Firm v. Ma Sein Yin (4) was followed. The same question came up for consideration before the Bombay High Court in Guljar khan v. Husen Khan Vaidkhan (5). A learned Single Judge held:

"A suit brought under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., by a judgment-creditor need not in all cases be filed on behalf of the plaintiff and all other creditors. There is no reason why the creditor should be compelled to prove that the document was made with intent to defeat and delay creditors generally if he only wants a declaration in a limited form that the transfer is void as against him....."

In Shrimal Kasturchand v. Hira Lal Hansraj (6) it was held:

"A judgment-creditor who has been defeated at the instance of an intervener in proceedings taken in execution of his decree need not necessarily file a representative suit under s. 53, T. P. Act."

This question was lately considered in two unreported cases in this Court. In S. A. No. 1178 of 1935 decided on December 1, 1938, the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the suit property was attachable and saleable for the recovery of amounts due under the decree in his favour. The plaintiff's case was that the sale-deed set up by the defendant was a mere paper transaction and that no money had passed from the transferor to the transferee and that the sale-deed was entirely fictitious. It was further stated that the plaintiff was entitled to bring a suit for his own benefit and for the benefit of other creditors. The learned Judges quoted with approval the case in Guljarkhan v. Husen Khan Vaidkhan (5) and held that in the circumstances of the case the suit was maintainable. This case was followed in S. A. No. 1980 of 1936. In my judgment there is no statutory provision to prevent the plaintiff from instituting the present suit on his own behalf. In the result I affirm the order of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family business—Business carried on by member in partnership with stranger—Presumption that it is joint family business—Maintenance—Mother, right of—Priority over personal debts of her sons.

Under Hindu Law, there is no presumption that a business carried on by a member of a joint family in partnership with a stranger is joint family business. The presumption of Hindu Law that, where a nucleus is proved, all properties standing in the name of its members, were acquired out of the family funds and belong to the family, cannot be extended to cases of partnership with strangers. 118 Ind. Cas. 145 (1), Vadilal v. Khushal (2) and 43 Ind. Cas. 9 (3), relied on.

The mother has got a right of maintenance over the joint family property and it must have priority over the personal debts of her sons or step-sons.

F. A. from the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, First Class, Ferozepore, dated September 1, 1938.

Messrs. Durga Das Jain and Balmokand Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Parkash Chand Jain, for the Respondent (Plaintiff).

Young, C. J.—In execution of a money decree obtained by the Beopur Sahayak Bank Ltd., Meerut (defendant No. 1) against Rup Chand (defendant No. 2), bungalow No. 105, situate in Ferozepore Cantonment, was attached. Mst. Khillo (plaintiff), step-mother of the judgment-debtor objected, alleging that the bungalow was her exclusive property and that Rup Chand had no interest in it. The execution Court dismissed the objection. Mst. Khillo then instituted the present suit, under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., against the Bank and Rup Chand, for a declaration that the bungalow was owned and possessed by her for her lifetime and was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the aforesaid decree. She based her claim on two alternative grounds. Firstly, she alleged that in 1919 arbitrators were appointed to partition the family property between her sons and step-sons, Hira Lal, Rup Chand, Phool Chand, Lakshmi Chand, Mehr Chand and Dip Chand, sons of Chiranji Lal; and in the award, this bungalow was allotted to her for her lifetime, in lieu of maintenance, and it was directed that after her death it would devolve on her sons in equal shares, subject to the condition that Rup Chand could become its exclusive owner on payment of Rs. 30,000 for distribution among the various sons of Chiranji Lal. She maintained that the award had been given effect to and that she was the owner of the bungalow for her life. In the alternative, she claimed that under Hindu Law she was entitled to maintenance out of the family estate, and there being no other joint property now in existence, there was a charge for her maintenance on the bungalow, and that this charge had priority over the debt in question, which had been raised by Rup Chand from the Bank for his personal purposes and not for the benefit of the joint family.

The Bank traversed these allegations and averred that there had been no partition in 1919, nor had the bungalow been allotted to the plaintiff and that the loan had been raised by Rup Chand for the benefit of the joint Hindu family and therefore it had precedence over the plaintiff's right of maintenance. At the trial, the plaintiff attempted to prove the partition of 1919 by producing a copy of an award, alleged to have been delivered by the arbitrators on September 19, 1919. The original award was stated to have been lost. The copy showed however that the original award had not been registered and proper stamp duty had not been paid on it. The learned Judge therefore held that the copy was inadmissible in evidence, and that oral evidence could not be led to prove its terms. He accordingly rejected the plaintiff's claim based on the alleged partition.

On the alternative claim, he found that the Bank had failed to prove that the debt in question had been raised by Rup Chand for the benefit of the family and therefore the plaintiff had a charge for her maintenance on the bungalow. He held that having regard to the status of the family Rs. 100 per mensem would be the proper maintenance payable to the plaintiff. He therefore passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a declaration that the bungalow carried a charge of Rs. 100 per mensem, till the plaintiff's death, on account of her claim for maintenance and that it could be sold subject to reservation of this charge in execution of the decree obtained by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2. From this decree the Bank has appealed, and the first contention raised on its behalf is that it had been proved that the loan in question was raised by Rup Chand from the Bank for joint Hindu family business. It appears that the family was in affluent circumstances in the lifetime of Chiranji Lal and for some years after his death, when it carried on a prosperous business at Ferozepore and Hapur in the United Provinces. Chiranji Lal died in 1911 and his sons continued to live jointly till at least 1919. During this period Rup Chand managed the ginning factory and other business at Hapur. In 1918, he entered into partnership with two strangers, Banarsi Das and Nathu Lal, to do business in Bombay under the name and style of Banarsi Das-Rup Chand. Rup Chand's share in the capital of this firm was Rs. 10,000 half of which (i. e. Rs. 5,000) he raised from the defendant Bank on July 3, 1918.

The Bank contends that Rup Chand entered into the partnership on behalf of the joint Hindu family. It is common ground that if this fact is proved, the Bank's debt and the decree passed thereon would be binding upon all the members of the quondam joint family, including the plaintiff, and her right of maintenance would have no priority over the decree. If, however, Rup Chand had joined the Bombay firm in his personal capacity, then the other members of the family, or the joint family property, would not be liable and Mst. Khillo's right of maintenance would take precedence over it. The onus to prove that Rup Chand entered into the partnership with the strangers, on behalf of the family, is clearly on the Bank. Under Hindu Law, there is no presumption that a business carried on by a member of a joint family in partnership with a stranger is joint family business. It is well-settled that the presumption of Hindu Law that, where a nucleus is proved, all properties standing in the name of its members, were acquired out of the family funds and belong to the family, cannot be extended to cases of partnership with strangers: see Mulla's Hindu Law, para. 234 (4) and Mirzamal Bhagwan Das v. Rameshar (1), Vadilal v. Khushal (2) and Gangayya v. Venkataramiah (3). It therefore lay on the Bank to prove that the partnership was entered into on behalf of the family or that the loan was otherwise applied for family purposes. The learned Judge has held that the Bank has failed to discharge the onus, and after hearing Counsel and examining the record we agree with this conclusion. The only evidence produced by the Bank is that of its mukhtar-i-am, Raghubar Dayal (D. W. No. 2) who deposed that at the time when the loan was raised Rup Chand told him that he was borrowing on behalf of the family firm. But the books of the Bank do not support this statement. If what this witness is now saying is true, there is no reason why the account should have been opened in Rup Chand's personal name and not that of Ohiranji Lal Rup Chand or the joint family. Further, we find that no demand for the principal or for interest was ever made by the Bank from the other members of the family. It is admitted that interest was paid by Rup Chand alone. The pro-note was renewed from time to time and all the renewals were by Rup Chand and none else. It is also significant that when the account was not adjusted, the Bank instituted the suit against Rup Chand only: no other brother was impleaded as a defendant, and the decree also was passed against him. There is, therefore, nothing to indicate that the loan had been raised for the benefit of the family.

The most valuable piece of evidence relating to this point would be the books of the joint family at Ferozepore and Hapur for the year 1918. Rup Chand stated that these books were with his elder brother Hira Lal. Hira Lal, when examined as a witness for the plaintiff, admitted that he had those books. But the Bank did not ask him to produce them. Nor was any effort made to get the books of the Bombay firm Banarsi Das-Rup Chand, from the heirs of Banarsi Das, in whose possession they were stated to be. In these circumstances, the Bank cannot be held to have discharged the onus of proving that the loan in question had been raised by Rup Chand on behalf, or for the benefit, of the joint Hindu family, or that the share in the Bombay business was ever regarded as an asset of all the brothers. This being so, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff has got a right of maintenance over whatever is now left of the joint property and that it must have priority over the personal debts of her sons or step-sons. The bungalow in question, therefore, cannot be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the Bank against Rup Chand, without reservation of her rights. The next question for consideration is what is the proper amount of maintenance for which Mst. Khillo has a charge on the bungalow. The learned Judge has fixed it at Rs. 100 per mensem. But after considering the evidence produced by the parties, and having regard to the circumstances of the family, we think that this is excessive. In our opinion Rs. 50 per mensem is the proper charge for her maintenance. We therefore reduce the amount to Rs. 50 per mensem. We accordingly, accept this appeal in part and, in lieu of the decree of the lower Court, grant the plaintiff a declaration that she has got a charge of Rs. 50 per mensem for her maintenance on bungalow No. 105 at Ferozepore Cantonment, and that it shall be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the Bank against Rup Chand, subject to this charge. Having regard to all the circumstances, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307—Reference under—High Court, if can go into evidence irrespective of whether there was any misdirection or misunderstanding of law.

The Court in a reference under s. 307, Criminal P. C. is entitled to go into the evidence irrespective of whether there was any misdirection or misunderstanding of the law or not. 108 Ind. Cas. 225 (1), relied on. 117 Ind. Cas. 173 (2), explained and distinguished. 139 Ind. Cas. 885 (3), referred to.

J. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Saran, in his letter No. 19-Cr., dated Chapra, January 3, 1940.

The Govt. Pleader, In support of the Reference.

Mr. S. C. Chakravarty, Against the Reference.

Meredith, J.—This is a reference under s. 307 of the Criminal P. C. by the learned Sessions Judge of Saran. Two persons Dullu Kuer and Rachheya Teli, were tried before him with the aid of a jury—Dullu Kuer upon a charge under s. 457 of the I. P. C. and Rachheya Teli upon charges under ss. 457 and 380 of the I. P. C. The jury after retiring for twenty minutes, returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty in the case of both accused persons. The learned Sessions Judge was not prepared to accept this verdict, and remarked that he considered it perverse and unreasonable, and that he was clearly of opinion that it was necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of both the accused persons to the Hon'ble High Court.

After the verdict of the jury, in accordance with the provisions of s. 310 of the Criminal P. O. a previous conviction for an offence under s. 396 of the I. P. O. in the year 1931, upon which he had been sentenced to undergo eight years' rigorous imprisonment, was proved against the accused Dullu Kuer, and was admitted by him.

At the opening of this case a preliminary point was taken by Mr. Chakravarty on behalf of the accused persons. He argued that the Court in hearing a reference against the verdict of a jury under s. 307 of the Criminal P. O. has only the same powers that it would have in hearing an appeal from the decision of a jury and, therefore, the Court cannot go into the evidence at all, having regard to the provisions of s. 423 (2) of the Criminal P. O. unless it is first shown that there has been a misdirection, or that, the jury has misunderstood the law as laid down by the Judge. This argument is based on the wording of s. 307, cl. (3), which provides that :

"In dealing with the case so submitted, the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto, it shall, after considering the entire evidence, and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session."

It is urged that the use of the words "subject thereto" indicates that the direction to consider the entire evidence and so on only can have effect in a case where that could be done in exercise of the ordinary appellate powers, which are limited in the case of jury trials by the provisions of s. 423 (2) of the Criminal P. O.

This view, in my opinion, ignores the specific character of the directions laid down in the latter part of the clause, but I do not consider it necessary to examine this question in detail, because that has been already done by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Shera (1). This precise point was the subject of the reference to the Full Bench, and after a full discussion of the matter the Full Bench decided that the Court in a reference under s. 307 was not limited in the way suggested, and was entitled to go into the evidence irrespective of whether there was any misdirection or misunderstanding of the law or not. If I may say so with respect, the view taken in that case appears to me the sensible view of the section and the reasoning entirely sound. There is nothing I could usefully add to it. Mr. Chakravarty drew our attention to a ruling of this High Court, Ramdas Rai v. King Emperor (2) but this ruling does not really support the proposition which he has attempted to put forward. It was not a case of a reference under s. 307, but a case where the Judge had refused to make a reference, and where the Court was merely hearing an appeal from the decision of the jury. In such a case it was laid down very rightly that the Court would not consider the evidence in the absence of misdirection or misunderstanding of the law by the jury. The Court refused to treat the appeal as a reference by the Judge, merely because the Judge, though he had not made a reference, had observed that he disagreed with the verdict of the jury, and considered that the accused ought not to have been convicted. The implication was that had the Court found it advisable or possible to treat the matter as a reference, then it might have gone into the evidence and come to its own finding, but that was not the case. The ruling, therefore, provides no support for Mr. Chakravarty's contention. On the other hand, another ruling of this High Court, King-Emperor v. Rafi Mian (3) is directly against him. That is all that it is necessary to say with regard to this preliminary objection, which cannot succeed. (The learned Judge then discussed the facts and the evidence and then proceeded).

It appears to me that the verdict of the jury in this case was, having regard to the state of the evidence, a wholly unreasonable one, and I am somewhat at a loss to understand it. It is true that Ganesh admitted that he had once undergone four years' rigorous imprisonment for dacoity, and Budhu Kuar admitted that he had been eight years in jail for an offence under s. 304 of the I. P. O. but, as the learned Judge rightly observed, this was merely a reason for treating the evidence of these witnesses with caution and seeking corroboration; it could be no reason for rejecting it altogether out of hand. Actually there was ample corroboration. There is no reason at all for not believing the evidence of the various villagers. As I have noticed, the first information was lodged without any delay at all and the witnesses had gone to the thana, and were also examined then and there, so that there was no real opportunity for concocting a case. Moreover, the injuries found on the persons of the accused and Ganesh were entirely consistent with the prosecution story, while the defence version left the injuries upon Ganesh at least entirely unexplained. The traces of trampling in Ganesh's courtyard, which were found by the Assistant Sub-Inspector, also corroborated Ganesh's story. In short, the evidence in the case was overwhelming and left no doubt at all that these two accused persons were actually caught red-handed while committing theft at night in the house of Ganesh.

In these circumstances I would accept this reference, set aside the verdict of acquittal of the jury, and convict Dullu Kuar under s. 457 read with s. 75 of the I. P. O. and Rachbeya Teli under ss. 457 and 380 of the I. P. O. It is not alleged that Rachbeya Teli has any previous conviction. The theft was a petty one, and in the circumstances I would sentence him under each section to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment, these terms to run concurrently. I would sentence Dullu Kuar under s. 457/75 of the I. P. O. to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment.

KHIMOHAND—PLAINTIFF

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 19, 20, 51, 14 (2) (c)—Income-tax paid by company, whether on behalf of share-holders—Certificate under s. 20, when no income-tax is payable, if necessary—S. 51, if applies—Tax by company on profits distributed—Tax, if can be deducted from dividends—Words "assessed to income-tax" in s. 14 (2) (a), meaning explained—Company—Dividend—Arrears of dividend and interest thereon are not debt—Company's obligation to pay them, nature of—Second preference share declared "subject to income-tax"—"Subject to tax" in declaration; meaning of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 116, 120—Claim for dividend duly declared and made payable but in part withheld—Article applicable—Cause of action—Running of time—Expression, "writing registered" in Art. 116, if includes document registered under Companies Act (VII of 1913).

In the case of a company the tax has to be paid by the company direct and not on behalf of the share-holders, and this is rendered clearer by the provisions as to return of income and assessment of companies contained in ss. 22 and 23 of the Income Tax Act. [p. 392, col. 2.]

The provisions of s. 20 are no doubt mandatory but they only apply where the company is liable to tax. A certificate to the share-holders under s. 20 is not necessary where no income-tax is payable by the company. The penalty imposed by s. 51 on a failure to furnish a certificate under s. 20 only arises where the failure is without reasonable cause or excuse, and the fact that the certificate would be untrue as no income-tax was payable by the company would provide reasonable cause for not issuing it. [ibid.]

Section 20 clearly recognizes a right in the company to deduct tax where tax has been or will be paid on the profits distributed. Income-tax has to be discharged out of profits before any distribution can be made, and where tax has been paid, the company must apportion the burden amongst the different classes of share-holders, according to their legal rights. No doubt deduction of tax at the standard rate is a rough and ready method of apportionment, but to pay dividends in full to the preference share-holders would be to give them a tax free share and throw the whole tax onto the ordinary shares. [p. 392, col. 2; p. 393, col. 1.]

Where, however, no income-tax is payable by the company and there is no burden to adjust, there is nothing in the Act to justify the company in making any deduction in respect of income-tax from the dividends paid. Gimson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (14), distinguished. [p. 393, col. 1.]

A company is not assessed to income-tax within the meaning of cl. (a) to s. 14 (2), where it has submitted a return of its total income as required by s. 22 and the return has been dealt with by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23, and the result of the assessment is that nothing is found to be payable by way of income-tax. The words "assessed to income-tax" must be given their ordinary and natural meaning and they do not cover the case where a company is assessed to no income-tax. [p. 393, col. 1.]

There is a distinction between the current dividends on the second preference shares and the arrears of dividend and interest thereon payable under the scheme of arrangement. The arrears of dividend remain arrears of dividend and can only be paid out of profits. Such arrears or the interest thereon do not become a debt due from the company different in character from the obligation to pay current dividends. [p. 391, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the dividends on the second preference shares are declared "subject to income-tax" it cannot be said that there is no declaration of dividend except after deduction of tax at the standard rate. The words "subject to tax" mean no more than subject to tax properly deductible; and where no tax is properly deductible, the words have no effect on the amount of dividend declared. Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (2), Neumann v.

Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) and Cull v. I. R. C. (4), distinguished. [p. 393, col. 2.]

Cause of action for a dividend duly declared and made payable but in part improperly withheld is an action in debt and is governed by Art. 116, Lim. Act, or else by Art. 120, and, therefore, the claim for dividends falls under Art. 116 since the whole contract arises under the Articles of the company. Time runs under Art. 116 from the date of the breach of contract and not from the date of the knowledge of the breach. The breach occurs in each year when the Income-tax Authorities inform the company that no income-tax is payable by the company for that year. [p. 393, col. 2; p. 394, col. 2.]

"Writing registered" in Art. 116 includes a document registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the Companies Act. In the General Clauses Act "registered" is defined as meaning registered in British India under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents. The Companies Act, though no doubt not primarily concerned with the registration of documents, is nevertheless the law in force relating to the registration of certain documents affecting companies. Therefore, the claim for dividends falls under Art. 116. Where the whole contract arises under the Articles of the company registered under the Companies Act. 48 Ind. Cas. 803 (6) and 127 Ind. Cas. 305 (7), relied on, 94 Ind. Cas. 515 (9), dissented from, 110 Ind. Cas. 33 (8), doubted. [p. 394, col. 2.]

Mr. M. C. Setalvad (Advocate-General), Sir Chimantlal Setalvad and Mr. G. N. Joshi, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. F. J. Coltman and Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Defendant.

Beaumont, C. J.— This suit is brought by the plaintiff on behalf of herself and all other holders of the second preference shares in the Tata Iron and Steel Co. Ltd., against the company claiming in effect to establish that the company were not entitled to deduct from dividends on the second preference shares income-tax for the years 1922-23 to 1934-35 inclusive on the ground that in those years the company's income was assessed at nil and the company was exempted from payment of income-tax. The suit was heard by a Bench of three Judges because it was represented to me that large sums were at stake and that an appeal would almost certainly be preferred to the Privy Council, and that the questions at issue depended on documentary evidence, and raised only matters of law. The plaintiff in para. 21 raises a case of fraudulent misrepresentation but that claim was abandoned at the outset of the case, and thereupon the defendant company abandoned their contention that the suit is not maintainable as a representative suit.

The facts are not in dispute and can be stated shortly. The company was incorporated in the year 1907 with a capital divided into six per cent. cumulative preference shares, ordinary, and deferred shares. In 1916, the capital was increased by the creation of further ordinary and deferred shares, and in 1918 there was a further increase of capital by the creation of second preference shares. Those second preference shares were created by a special resolution of the company passed on November 7 and 22, 1918, which provided that such shares were to rank next after the existing preference shares and were to confer on the holders thereof the right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum on the capital for the time being paid up on such shares, and, subject only to the right of the holders of the existing preference shares of the company, were to rank in a winding up, both as regards capital and dividends up to the commencement of the winding up, whether declared or not, in priority to the ordinary and deferred shares of the company, but were not to confer any further right to participate in profits or surplus assets. Immediately after the passing of the above special resolution, another special resolution was passed amending Art. 133 of the company's Articles of Association (which dealt with dividends) so as to incorporate the right of the holders of second preference shares to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum. The Article as amended did not mention income-tax. On December 23, 1918, the company issued to its share-holders a circular stating (inter alia) that income-tax upon the second preference share dividends would be payable by the holders of such shares.

On May 26, 1919, the plaintiff applied for the allotment to her of three second preference shares and these were duly allotted to her and a certificate under the seal of the company was in due course issued to her. In my opinion it is clear from the terms of the special resolution creating them and from the amended Art. 133 that the second preference shares were not issued tax-free. No obligation is cast upon the company as between themselves and the holders to pay the income-tax in respect of the dividends on the shares. Even if the circular of December 23, 1918 can be treated as part of the terms of issue (which I doubt), it does not, in my view, carry the matter any further. As from April 1, 1922, down to March 31, 1926, the dividends on the second preference shares fell into arrear and the accumulated arrears of such dividends amounted on the last mentioned date to a sum of Rs. 29-12-4 on each second preference share. In the year 1926 a scheme of arrangement was arrived at relating to the arrears of dividend on the second preference shares which scheme was subsequently sanctioned by the Court. The effect of the scheme was that a sum of Rs. 3-12-4 for each second preference share was to be paid in respect of arrears of dividend up to March 31, 1926, and that the balance of the said arrears, viz. Rs. 26 per share, together with simple interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum from April 1, 1926, on the said amount or balance thereof from time to time was to be paid out of the fifty per cent. of the surplus profits remaining in each year after paying the fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the first preferential shares and also after paying the fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum calculated from April 1, 1926, on the second preference shares until the whole of such arrears should have been paid off, the remaining fifty per cent. of such surplus profits to be distributed among the holders of ordinary and deferred shares according to their rights under the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the company. In January 1927, Art. 133, was again amended by special resolution so as to incorporate the provisions of the scheme as to dividends.

Subsequently the company made profits out of which the current dividends on the first and second preference shares and the arrears of dividend on the second preference shares were ultimately discharged. But such dividends and arrears of dividend were in all cases paid by the company less income-tax although for the years 1925-26 to 1934-35 inclusive the company was not in fact, liable to pay and did not pay any income-tax, and the question which arises is whether for these years the company was entitled to deduct tax from the dividends payable to the second preference shareholders. It was argued that there might be a distinction between the current dividends on the second preference shares and the arrears of dividend and interest thereon payable under the scheme of arrangement, but in my opinion, no such distinction exists. The arrears of dividend remained arrears of dividend and could only be paid out of profits, and I am not prepared to accept the argument on behalf of the plaintiff that such arrears or the interest thereon became a debt due from the company different in character from the obligation to pay current dividends. The position with regard to income-tax during the years in question was that the company made substantial profits in a commercial sense out of which dividends could be, and were paid. But owing to the operation of s. 10, Income-tax, as such profits were not liable to income-tax. Section 10, provides :

"(1) The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'Business' in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by him.

(2) Such profits or gains shall be computed after making the following allowances..... :—" of which (vi) is material, viz. :

"In respect of depreciation of such buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture being the property of the assessee, a sum equivalent to such percentage on the original cost thereof to the assessee as may in any case or class of cases be prescribed," and under proviso (b) it is enacted :

"Where full effect cannot be given to any such allowance in any year owing to there being no profits or gains chargeable for that year, or owing to the profits or gains chargeable being less than the allowance, the allowance or part of the allowance to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall be added to the amount of the allowance for depreciation for the following year and deemed to be part of that allowance, or if there is no such allowance for that year, be deemed to be the allowance for that year, and so on for succeeding years ;"

In making the assessments for the years 1926-27 to 1934-35 the Income-tax Authorities took the commercial profit of the company as appearing in the balance-sheet, and after normal income-tax adjustments, made deductions in respect of depreciation which wiped out the whole of the profit. Accordingly the taxable profit was assessed at "nil" and the company was exempted from payment. Notwithstanding this fact however the company during the years in question declared preference dividends less income-tax and to the dividend warrant in each case they appended a certificate stating :

"We hereby certify that income-tax on the entire (100) per cent. profits and gains of the company, of which this dividend forms a part has been or will be paid by us to the Govt. of India."

The plaintiff contends that the company were not entitled to deduct from her dividend income-tax for a year in which no tax was payable by the company. The company, on the other hand, maintain that they were entitled to deduct tax at the standard rate every year, and that the fact that the company itself was not liable to tax in the particular year is irrelevant, since dividends are frequently payable out of a different fund to that which is assessed to incometax. If such deduction was authorized the authority must be sought either in the contract between the company and the second preference share-holders, or under some statute. The only relevant statute appears to be the Income Tax Act, and as that Act is concerned with securing revenue to Govt., one would not expect to find therein authority to a company to retain for itself income-tax in respect of its shares with no obligation to pass the amount on to Govt. However, I will notice what appear to me to be the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act. Unders. 14 (2) of that Act it is provided that the tax shall not be payable by an assessee in respect of "(a) any sum which he receives by way of dividends as a share-holder in a company where the profits or gains of the company has been assessed to income-tax."

Mr. Colman for the company has argued that if once the company is assessed to income-tax the share-holder is saved from any assessment on himself in respect of dividends although the income of the company out of which the dividend is paid may not have been subject to income-tax, and for that he relies on a decision of the Privy Council in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust, Ltd. (1). In that case, however, the company had been assessed to tax in respect of part of its income, and a question arises as to whether the decision would apply to a case in which the company had been assessed to no income-tax; whether, that is to say, the profits or gains to the company can be said to have been assessed to income-tax when they have been assessed to no income-tax. However, that question cannot be determined in this suit since it arises between a share-holder and the revenue authorities who are not parties to the suit.

Section 18 of the Act provides that in the case of salaries and interest on securities (which are described in s. 8) the person responsible for payment shall at the time of payment deduct income-tax, and sub-s. (6) provides that the sum deducted is to be paid to the Central Govt. But there is no provision which entitles a company to deduct income-tax from dividends on shares. Section 19 of the Act provides:

"In the case of income chargeable under any head other than 'salaries' or 'interest on securities,' and in any case where income-tax has not been deducted in accordance with the provisions of s. 18, the tax shall be payable by the assessee direct."

It is therefore, in my opinion, clear that in the case of a company the tax has to be paid by the company direct and not on behalf of the share-holders, and this is rendered clearer by the provisions as to return of income and assessment of companies contained in ss. 22 and 23 of the Act. Section 20 provides that the principal officer of a company shall, at the time of distribution of dividends furnish to every person receiving a dividend a certificate to the effect that the company has paid or will pay income-tax on the profits which are being distributed, and on such certificate a share-holder may recover a refund of income-tax under s. 48 where the company has been charged at a rate greater than that applicable to his total income for the year. The provisions of s. 20 are no doubt mandatory but in my opinion they only apply where the company is liable to tax, and I cannot think that the officers of the company in this case were justified, as against their preference share-holders, in giving year after year a certificate that income-tax had been or would be paid on the profits being distributed when in fact no income-tax was being charged on such profits. The penalty imposed by s. 51 on a failure to furnish a certificate under s. 20 only arises where the failure is without reasonable cause or excuse, and the fact that the certificate would be untrue would seem to provide reasonable cause for not issuing it.

In my opinion the scheme of the Income Tax Act is that a company is assessed to income-tax on its profits and pays the tax direct. There is no express provision enabling a company which has paid tax to deduct from dividends the amount of such tax, and the Advocate-General, for the plaintiff, has argued that even in such a case no deduction is permissible. I am not prepared to agree with his argument. Income-tax has to be discharged out of profits before any distribution can be made, and where tax has been paid, the company must apportion the burden amongst the different classes of share-holders, according to their legal rights. No doubt deduction of tax at the standard rate is a rough and ready method of apportionment, but to pay dividends in full to the preference share-holders would be to give them a tax-free share and throw the whole tax on to the ordinary shares. Section 20 clearly recognizes a right in the company to deduct tax where tax has been or will be paid on the profits distributed. However, in the present case no income-tax was payable by the company and there was no burden to adjust, and I can see nothing in the Act to justify the company in making any deduction in respect of income-tax from the dividends paid.

I now turn to a consideration of the contract between the company and the second preference share-holders to see if such deduction is authorized thereby. The material contract is embodied in Art. 133 of the Articles of Association as amended to incorporate the provisions of the special resolutions creating the second preference shares and the scheme of arrangement to which I have referred. The Article does not mention income tax, and Mr. Coltman argues that as the second preference shares are not to be tax-free the company is only bound to pay $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in each year less income-tax at the standard rate. His contention is that the company was assessed to income-tax for the years in question, though no tax was payable, and that therefore under s. 14 (2) (a) the preference share-holders cannot be assessed in respect of their dividends, and if no deduction is made by the company the holders will get their dividends free of tax. In my opinion this argument is unsound. The contract is that the company is not to be liable for income-tax on preference dividends, but there is no contract by the preference share-holders with the company for payment of the tax. There is no justification for reading into Art. 133 any such words as "less income-tax at the standard rate." To do so would impose serious hardship on the preference share-holders in the event of s. 14 (2) (a) of the Act being amended so as to throw upon share-holders direct liability for payment of the whole or part of the tax on their dividends. Moreover if a company escapes liability for income-tax in any year I do not see why the preference share-holders should not be entitled to share in the company's good fortune. In my opinion their contract with the second preference share-holders requires the company to pay a full dividend of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in every year when profits permit, but in any year in which the company is liable to income-tax, it can deduct tax at the standard rate, leaving the share-holder to claim a refund from Govt. in a proper case; but when no tax is payable by the company, there is no right to deduct.

I would notice one other argument of

Mr. Coltman. The dividends on the second preference shares were declared "subject to income-tax" and it is argued that there was no declaration of dividend except after deduction of tax at the standard rate, and that a share-holder has no cause of action for part of a dividend which has not been declared. In my opinion there is no substance in this argument. I think that the words "subject to tax" mean no more than subject to tax properly deductible, and as in this case no tax was properly deductible, the words have no effect on the amount of dividend declared. Mr. Coltman has referred us to a good many English cases, particularly Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (2), Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) and Cull v. I. R. C. (4). Those cases contain some valuable observations upon the applicability of English income-tax to dividends on shares and to that extent are helpful, but the actual decisions have no bearing on the case before us. The last two cases related to what is known as "grossing up" for purposes of sur-tax, and involved the construction of r. 20 of the All Schedules Rules and s. 7, Finance Act, 1931, which have no counterpart in India. Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (2), related to the right of a company to deduct from dividends on its preference stock income-tax at the full rate applicable to the United Kingdom although it had obtained a refund in respect of colonial income-tax under s. 43, Finance Act, 1916. The case turned on the construction of the latter section, which has no application to India. In my opinion no useful purpose would be served by discussing the English cases in detail.

There remains for consideration the question of limitation. In my opinion the plaintiff's cause of action is for a dividend duly declared and made payable but in part improperly withheld. That is an action in debt. The Advocate-General has argued that the amount of tax retained by the company was held by it as an agent and that Art. 89 applies, but in my opinion this is not so. The company did not hold the dividend in a fiduciary capacity: In re

Severn and Wye and Severn Bridge Railway Co. (5). There is in the Indian Lim. Act no Article barring generally an action in debt though many particular actions in debt are covered, and it is suggested by the Advocate General as an alternative argument that the residuary Art. 120 applies. Mr. Ooltman however relied on Art. 115 which covers a suit for compensation for the breach of any contract express or implied not in writing registered. On the other hand the Advocate-General contends that if the suit is one for compensation for breach of contract, the contract is one "in writing registered" and Art. 116 applies. The only direct authorities upon the question to which we have been referred are two conflicting decisions of the Madras High Court. In Ripon Press and Sugar Mill Co. Ltd. v. Venkatarama Chetty (6), it was held that a suit for a dividend fell under Art. 116, since the contract was contained in the articles which had been registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, a view with which Sir Amberson Marten, C. J. in Govind Narayan v. Ranganath Gopal (7), agreed but with which Crump, J., in Maneklal Mansukhbai v. Suryapur Mills Co. (8), disagreed. In Venkata Gurunatha Rama Seshayya v. Sri Tripurasundari Cotton Press, Bezwada (9), it was held that "writing registered" in Art. 116, referred to registration under the Indian Regis. Act only, and that a suit for a dividend fell under Art. 120, since the words of Art. 115, were not applicable to such a suit.

In the absence of any authority, I should have thought that neither Art. 115, nor Art. 116, was applicable to a suit for an ascertained debt, and that Art. 120, applied. But the Privy Council in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinath Jiu Thakur (10), following a long line of Indian cases and having regard particularly to the consideration always shown to registered documents by the Indian Legislature, held that a suit for rent due under a registered lease fell under Art. 116. Whether this Court was right in Maneklal Mansukhbai v. Suryapur Mills Co. Ltd. (8), in holding that it followed from the Privy Council's decision that all actions for debt under an unregistered contract not otherwise provided for in the Lim. Act fell under Art. 115, I doubt. But the Privy Council's decision certainly shows that a suit for a debt under a registered contract falls under Art. 116. Upon the whole, though with some hesitation, I think that "writing registered" in Art. 116, includes a document registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the Companies Act. In the General Clauses Act "registered" is defined as meaning registered in British India under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents. The Indian Companies Act, though no doubt not primarily concerned with the registration of documents, is nevertheless the law in force relating to the registration of certain documents affecting companies. In my view, therefore, the plaintiff's claim falls under Art. 116, since I think that the whole contract arises under the Articles. If Art. 116, is not applicable, I would say that Art. 120, applies and the period is the same under both articles.

Time runs under Art. 116, from the date of the breach of contract. In my opinion, the breach occurred in each year when the Income-tax Authorities informed the company that no income-tax was payable by the company for that year. It is true that there is no evidence that this fact was communicated by the company to the plaintiff, as it should have been under Art. 138 (b) of the Articles of Association, but as there is no case of fraudulent concealment, this omission does not in my opinion affect the date from which time runs. The suit was filed on October 1, 1935 and from the agreed statement, Ex. H the plaintiff's suit is barred except for the years of assessment 1931-32, 1932-33, 1933-34, and 1934-35. There was no dividend for the year 1930-31.

Broomfield, J.—In praying for a declaration "that the holders of second preference shares in the defendant company are entitled to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum without any deduction therefrom in respect of income-tax," irrespective of whether the company pays income-tax, the plaintiff is obviously putting the case too high. It is true that the special but the only evidence before us is the state of his account on the material date. A sum of Rs. 5,500 was paid into it from some source through another bank just before he drew this cheque and the bank clerk who gave evidence as to the cheque for Rs. 11,000 said he would return and show where this sum of Rs. 5,500 came from. He never did return, and the matter was allowed to rest there.

Mrs. Sofaer, however, says this, that it was partly with this Rs. 11,000 that the Chartered Bank's claim against the estate was paid off. After the transaction, Murrayfields belonged to Mr. Meyer subject to the mortgage held by Mr. Jamnadas. Then she says that in about a year and in pursuance of the agreement she repurchased it from Mr. Meyer, on her own behalf entirely, and not as executrix. She took two mortgages with Mr. Jamnadas as mortgagor for Rs. 17,000 with the house as security and for Rs. 4,000 with some other property as security, as part of the purchase price of Rs. 38,000; the balance of Rs. 17,000 she found in cash and paid to Mr. Meyer. Now Murrayfields belongs to her, subject to these mortgages, and no one who has obtained a decree against her late husband's estate can attach it. Of course, it is necessary to test this story. We have only very scanty evidence of what the estate was worth, but it was no doubt heavily indebted to the bank. In a recital to a deed dated July 14, 1933, it is stated that Mr. Sofaer was "possessed of considerable property (part from his share and interest in the said firms of Monook and Cohen and of Saul Sofaer and Company) situate in Rangoon," and it is said on behalf of the appellants that it is not true at all. Still it is plain that if the estate was a valuable one the Chartered Bank may have been paid off by Mrs. Sofaer having recourse to estate properties, in addition to paying something from her own pocket, and adding to the total the sum of Rs. 20,000 paid by Mr. Meyer which he had borrowed from Mr. Jamnadas. The learned trial Judge observed that there was no proof that the sum of Rs. 11,000 paid to Mr. Meyer from his account in the Imperial Bank found its way into the hands of Mrs. Sofaer or of the Chartered Bank, and Mr. Meyer was not called as a witness. We do know that Mr. Jamnadas advanced Rs. 20,000 and that Mrs. Sofaer received this sum. Where she obtained the rest of the money wherewith to pay off the Chartered Bank, in the opinion of the learned Judge; had not been proved.

And then he asked, where did she get the money to buy Murrayfields back again? As regards the cash payments to Mr. Meyer she was quite unable to show how she had made them. She has certainly been involved in most elaborate business transactions connected with this house, but when pressed to explain them professed her inability to fill in any details. Her story may be summarized by saying that she was very well to do. She had extensive house rents coming from Bassein, and she had paid a debt of Rs. 26,000 paid to her personally by Monook and Cohen in which her late husband was a partner. Her husband made her generous gifts and though he died a poor man she was by no means without resources. She was penniless when she married him in 1915, but her estate had increased substantially through his gifts whereas he died on the verge of insolvency.

This naturally became the subject of inquiry. It was not an easy inquiry, because Mrs. Sofaer, who gave evidence, assured the Court of her ignorance of accounts and business matters. So far as her duties as executrix of her husband's estate were concerned she repeatedly referred Counsel to her brothers, two gentlemen named Mordecai, who were partners with her late husband. They were sitting in Court, but they did not see fit to give evidence in these proceedings. It is not too much to say that she gave no satisfactory answers as to the efforts made to realize the estate; but her correspondence with Mr. E. S. Meyer of Bassein, her late husband's manager, shows that she was by no means unacquainted with accounts and business affairs. She was cross-examined on a number of matters. A sum of Rs. 8,000 paid to Mr. Sofaer during his last illness, was, according to her, presented to her by her husband. A further sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid to her personally by Mr. Meyer's brother, she declared, as moneys due from the collection of her rents in Bassein. No account was furnished, and the matter was dismissed in the vaguest way. When the learned Judge discovered that this Mr. Meyer had been the manager of a branch of the business of Saul Sofaer and Company, in which the Mordecais and the late Mr. Sofaer were partners, and that a criminal prosecution had been filed against him for misappropriation and withdrawn by the brothers Mordecai at just about the time when he had paid Mrs. Sofaer personally this sum of Rs. 10,000, I am not surprised that he remarked that it was curious. Mrs. Sofaer protested that there was no connection between the two matters, but she never proved to the satisfaction of the Court how this ex-manager owed her personally Rs. 10,000.

Then the business of the Mandalay Branch of Saul Sofaer and Company was sold. Mrs. Sofaer simply could not tell what had happened to the money given for it, or what share of it if any found its way into the estate. She asked the Court to believe that the estate was practically valueless, and she assessed its value for probate at about Rs. 9,000. She continually suggested that her brothers were looking after the estate, though she was the executrix. They were in Court, but furnished no sort of explanation. A number of other matters were raised in cross-examination, Mrs. Sofaer always declaring that she had a good deal of property and that various assets, which it was suggested belonged to the estate, were hers, and hers alone. The learned Judge did not believe her. He thought that the evidence adduced to show that Murrayfields was now her property was unconvincing. What the respondents say is that it has never been shown that she paid off the Bank so far as Rs. 20,000 (that half of the debt which was not advanced by Mr. Jamnadas on the security of the property by way of Mr. Meyer) out of her own moneys at all, though there is some evidence that Rs. 7,000 was paid by her, out of what moneys it is difficult to say with certainty. As for her re-purchase, they say that Mr. Jamnadas in effect was taken security for a debt of Rs. 21,000 and that payment of the remainder to Mr. Meyer by Mrs. Sofaer has not been proved. If this is correct, what is the position? Mrs. Sofaer as executrix, on this showing, parted with Murrayfields for Rs. 20,000 and paid off the Bank with this sum and other sums which may have been drawn largely from the estate. Then she had the house re-transferred to her in her own name, not as executrix, by simply extending Mr. Jamnadas's security. In that way she believed herself able to defy the creditors of her late husband's estate.

Her learned Counsel said that the case against her was based on conjecture and surmise, and on the assumption that suggestions put to her in cross-examination and denied were true. I cannot see that is so. The burden of proof lay upon her to show that this property had been duly applied by her in the satisfaction of other claims. The question is whether the story she told stood the test of cross-examination in the absence of corroborative evidence such as might have been supplied by her brothers and by Mr. Meyer. Then it is objected that the question of whether Mrs. Sofaer administered the estate properly ought to have been tested by an administration suit. The case in Saratmani Debee v. Bala Krishna (1), was cited in this connection. There Maclean, C. J. said: "Section 234" (which is the present s. 50)

"no doubt enables the Court to call for an account of the property which has come into the hands of the executor: but that section only applies to an account of the property which has actually come to the hands of the executor."

And Khushkrohai Nasarvanji v. Hormesha Phirozsha (2), was a similar case in which it was held that a representative was liable only in respect of property actually received by him or taken into his disposition. Murrayfields did come into Mrs. Sofaer's hand as executrix. And the learned Judge does not hold that she has proved it is now in her personal capacity. It must not be forgotten that a decree-holder has rights which he may work out in execution proceedings, and the cumbrous method of filing an administration suit when he desires to attach property prima facie in the hands of the judgment-debtor as such may not appeal to him. The case in V. Zollikofer and Co. v. Chettyar Firm (3), has been cited as authority for the proposition that the respondents cannot avoid the mortgage to Mr. Jamnadas. Was it then effected for the benefit of the estate? The learned Judge came to the conclusion that Mrs. Sofaer being desirous of ultimately residing herself at Murrayfields put it out of her possession as executrix, and obtained Rs. 20,000 indirectly from Mr. Jamnadas, as soon as she knew she could get the property back in her own name substantially free from any other encumbrance and that she has not shown she re-purchased it with her own money to make up the balance. In my opinion, the evidence given is by no means inconsistent with this inference, and I cannot say that the learned Judge was wrong in failing to be satisfied that the mortgage was effected for the benefit of the estate or that the transactions between the appellant and Mr. Meyer were genuine. This means that

FIRM NATIONAL TILES Co.—

DEFENDANTS

Partnership—Summary suit against firm—Partners served individually—Leave to defend granted to some only—Decree, if can be passed against those to whom leave is refused and against firm also—Individual partners, if can be sued along with firm.

In a summary suit against a firm where several partners have been served individually and leave to defend is granted to some and not to others, a decree can be passed against those partners to whom leave is refused, and also against the firm. [p. 374, col. 1.]

Individual partners may be sued personally along with the firm and a decree can be passed against the firm and against an individual partner. Taylor v. Collier & Co. (11), relied on. [p. 376, col. 1.]

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Kimatrai Bhojraj, Srikrishindas H. Lulla and Dipchand Chandumal, for Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 respectively.

Judgment—This is a suit under the Summary Chapter filed by the firm of Fatehchand Khubchand against "Firm of National Tiles Co., by their partners: (1) Seth Sugnichand Dayaram, (2) Seth Fatehchand Asudomal, (3) Seth Kanayalal, T. Talreja, all Hindus, adults, merchants, residing in Karachi," for recovery of a sum of Rs. 4,353-2-9 being the amount of three hundis with interest thereon. Along with the plaint the plaintiffs filed an application purporting to be under O. XXX, r. 3, Civil P. O., praying that the summonses be served on three persons as partners those specified in the heading of the plaint. On being served, the three alleged partners applied under O. XXXVII, r. 3, Civil P. O., for leave to defend. The matter was heard and disposed of by me on December 8, last. Sugnichand Dayaram who denied partnership and pleaded inter alia that he was only a sub-partner of Fatehchand Asudomal for a time was granted leave to defend. The application by Fatehchand Asudomal was disposed of thus:

"No ground has been made out by him for leave to defend. The application for leave by him is dismissed. There will therefore be a decree against defendant No. 2 for Rs. 4,353-2-9, costs of the suit and interest at 6 per cent. from date of suit till payment."

To Kanayalal Talreja leave to defend was granted subject to his furnishing security in a certain amount within a fortnight. The security was not furnished and thus he came to be in the same position as Fatehchand Asudomal, but no decree has so far been passed against him. The wording of the summons served on each of these parties is to be noted; two copies of the one served on Sugnichand Dayaram are on the record. The summons reads:

To defendant No. 1 aforesaid.,

"Whereas the plaintiffs abovenamed have instituted a suit against you under Chap. XXXVII, Civil P. O., for Rs. 4,353-2-9 principal and interest You are hereby summoned to obtain leave from the Court

There is no reason to suppose that the summonses on Fatehchand and Kanayalal were in any way different. It is also to be noted that in their applications for leave to defend and their affidavits in support thereof Sugnichand, Fatehchand and Kanayalal describe themselves throughout as defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3; they have been so described and dealt with in my order of December 8, last after I had heard the learned Advocates at great length. In short in the whole record as it stands to-day the only reference to O. XXX, Civil P. O., and the provisions thereof is that in the heading of the application filed with the plaint to which I have referred above.

Now on December 8, 1938 while I was dictating my order or just as I had concluded my dictation it was suggested by one or other of the learned Advocates that no decree could be passed against Fatehchand to whom leave was being refused, any decree to be passed should be against the firm of National Tiles Co. I told the stenographer to make a note of the point on the margin of the transcript when submitted to me for correction. The transcript when I saw it needed little or no correction and so I signed it without observing the marginal note made by the stenographer which read "Perhaps decree may be ordered against the firm the National Tiles Co." A few days later the office prepared and submitted a decree in accordance with my order of December 8, in respect of defendant Fatehchand Asudomal and this I signed as a matter of routine.

The case was next called in Court on December 22, 1938 and again on January 18, 1939 and at one or other of these hearings Messrs. Lulla and Kimatrai, Advocates for Fatehchand and Sugnichand, drew my attention to the fact that I had not considered the point raised on December 8, whether the decree should be against Fatehchand Asudomal or against the firm of the National Tiles Co. I then agreed to hear arguments on the point and if necessary to reconsider my order of December 8, 1938 in the light of the arguments. The points now argued before me have by consent been put in the following form: (1) in a summary suit against a firm where several partners have been served individually and leave to defend is granted to some and not to others, can a decree be passed against those partners to whom leave is refused, or must the decree be against the firm and (2) what is the effect of any of the partners served individually denying that he is a partner. In Mulla's Civil P. O. Edn. 10 at p. 936, the following passage occurs:

"Where a suit is brought against a firm in the firm name, the decree must be against the firm in the firm name. From this it follows that if one of the partners fails to appear, no decree can be passed against him separately for want of appearance; and if any one partner does appear, no decree can be passed against the firm for want of appearance, the appearance of one partner being the appearance of the firm, it can never be said that a decree against a firm is ex parte against one of the partners because he has not appeared. As soon as a decree is passed against a firm the assets of the firm are liable to satisfy it. The firm name is only a compendious way of describing in the writ the partners who compose the firm and a plaintiff who sues a firm sues the partners. But though the decree against the firm makes them all liable as to the partnership property, it can only be decided in execution proceedings whether a particular partner is personally liable to satisfy the decree."

In Naraindas & Co. v. S. M. Qureshi (1), Rupchand, A. J. C. dealing with the description of the parties in the title of the plaint in a suit against a firm held:

"Where a suit is against a corporation, or a firm, it need not be mentioned in the title of the plaint as to who is to be served with the summons and where and how, but the plaint should be accompanied by a separate application under O. XXIX, r. 2, or O. XXX, r. 3, Civil P. O., as the case may be duly stamped, stating where and in what manner and on whom the plaintiff wishes the summons to be served."

My attention has been drawn to the provisions of O. XXX, rr. 3, 6 and 8, Civil P. O. and Mr. Lulla has argued on the basis thereof and of the passage in Mulla referred to above that where a suit is filed against a firm and several partners therein are individually served they are each entitled to defend the suit on behalf of the firm; they cannot defend it on behalf of themselves individually. The plaintiff in such a case is not entitled to a decree against any individual partner. He is entitled only to a decree against the firm after he has beaten down all the defences raised by the individual partners on behalf of the firm even though these defences are between themselves contradictory and inconsistent. He has further argued that in the case of a suit against a firm if any partner is served individually the firm has been served. If the partner served comes to Court and denies that he was a partner the plaintiff has two alternatives; either he may ignore the denial of partnership by the person served and apply for service on the firm by a summons on any other party alleged to be a partner or any person having at the time of service, control or management of the partnership business, or he may ask the Court to determine the question whether or not the partner appearing and denying partnership is a partner, not for the purpose of obtaining a decree against him but for the purpose of establishing that the firm has been duly served. In support of his contentions Mr. Lulla has relied on several authorities both English and Indian. In Jackson v. Litchfield & Sons (2), it was held that where in a suit against a firm one of the partners who had been served failed to enter an appearance, the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment against that partner individually but must proceed with the action and having obtained judgment against the firm may then under O. XLVII, r. 8 issue execution against such partner. In Ellis v. Wadeson (3), it was held in a suit against a firm that a personal defence raised by a partner in the firm who had been served could not be allowed. In Davies & Co. v. Andra & Co., (4), it was held that "a person who is served with a writ of summons which is issued against a firm must, if he is in fact a partner, enter an appearance in his own name under O. XII, r. 15, but he cannot enter a conditional appearance which states that he does so having been served as a partner, but denies that he is a partner. If the person so served is not in fact a partner, he need not enter an appearance at all, the question whether he is a partner or not only arising when the plaintiff, having obtained judgment against the firm, seeks to issue execution under O. XLII, r. 10, against such person's goods."

resolutions of November 7 and November 22, 1918, creating the second preference shares, said nothing about income-tax, and the Memorandum and Articles of the company as amended in consequence of these resolutions are also silent about it. But that does not mean that the dividends were not liable to tax. There is a presumption that dividends, which are payable out of profits, are liable to income-tax, in the absence of express words to the contrary in the contract between the parties. Indeed the learned Advocate-General has conceded that the dividends cannot be regarded as tax-free. What he challenges is the company's right to deduct income-tax from dividends. But if the company pays income-tax and cannot deduct the tax paid from the dividends they would in fact be tax-free, since the company is assessable to income-tax in respect of them and not the share-holders.

Although there is no statutory provision for the deduction of ordinary income-tax from dividends in the Income Tax Act of 1922, ss. 20 and 48 clearly contemplate that deductions will be made in practice and could hardly have been enacted if the practice had not been recognized as legal. Moreover, dividends being payable out of profits, and only out of profits, if the profits in the hands of the company are burdened with a tax the company has not only a right but a duty to distribute the burden fairly and equally between the various classes of share-holders. One way of doing that obviously is to deduct the appropriate amount of income-tax from each dividend before payment. Clear authority on that point, if authority is needed, is to be found in Purshottamdas Harkisondas v. Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (11), where Marten, J. followed and applied the decision of the House of Lords in Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General (12). Lord Halsbury pointed out in that case that income-tax is not part of the expenditure by which profits are earned but actually a part of the profits. It follows that each shareholder is entitled to an aliquot part of a fund which includes the income-tax payable by the company and out of which that income-tax has to be paid, and therefore he can only get his dividend less his proportionate share of the tax.

But, though the first claim is untenable, the claim for a refund of the tax deducted in years when the company paid nothing is prima facie reasonable, and it obviously cannot be defeated by any plea of distributing the burden, for there was none to distribute. In the written statement the defendant company has relied on the terms of a circular to the share-holders inviting subscriptions for the second preference shares which stated, inter alia, that income-tax would be payable by the holder of the shares. This somewhat loose and inaccurate expression presumably meant that income-tax would be deducted before the dividends were paid. Similar statements were made in the resolutions of the Board of Directors sanctioning the issue of the shares, and whenever a dividend was declared it was stated to be "less income-tax." Learned Counsel for the defendant argues that the contract implied between the company and the share-holders was that the latter would be entitled to receive their dividend of seven and a half per cent. "without immunity from income-tax" or "less income-tax." But the question is what is to be understood by these expressions. "Without immunity from income-tax" is meaningless when there is no liability to tax, "less income-tax" is ambiguous. You may infer a contract that the company will pay the dividends less a proportionate amount of the income-tax payable by the company, if any. In fact such a contract must be implied, for the reasons already given. Mr. Coltman however wants us to infer a contract that the company would pay the dividends less income-tax at the standard rate, irrespective of whether the company paid income-tax or not. That means, in effect, that the share-holders would not be entitled to get seven and a half per cent. on their shares but six and a half or six or whatever the sum may work out at.

I can see no good reason for inferring a contract of that kind. It is, to say the least of it, extremely doubtful whether the circular in question or the directors' resolutions can be regarded as forming part of the contract. But in any case statements intimating that income-tax would be deducted are capable of the interpretation that it would be deducted if and when payable and not otherwise, and if that interpretation is possible it must be preferred to one which, as between the second preference share-holders and the company, appears to lead to an inequitable result.

Mr. Coltman devoted a considerable part of his argument to an attempt to show that the deduction of income-tax from the second preference dividends was justified by the scheme of the Income Tax Act of 1922, not directly but inferentially. This Act was concerned with the liability of persons, whether individuals or bodies of persons, corporate or other, to pay tax to Govt. on their incomes. It was not concerned, except incidentally, with any question of the rights and liabilities of share-holders and companies inter se. In the present case, however, the dispute is as to the rights of share-holders as against the company. We have not to determine, and cannot determine in the absence of Govt., any question relating to the liability to pay income-tax to Govt. or the right to a refund or anything of that kind. Nor can our decisions on the questions in issue be affected by the fact that some of the second preference share-holders appear to have obtained benefits, by way of refunds from the Income-tax Authorities, which they could not have obtained if no deductions from their dividends had been made.

We were much pressed with arguments based upon s. 14 (2) (a) of the Act, according to which, if a company is assessed to income-tax, the individual share-holder who receives a dividend is not liable to pay tax thereon. According to Mr. Coltman's contention a company is assessed to income-tax within the meaning of this clause if it has submitted a return of its total income as required by s. 22 and the return has been dealt with by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23, whether or not the result of the assessment is that anything is found to be payable by way of income-tax. Section 14 (2) (a) has been construed by the Privy Council in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) and it has been held that the words "assessed to income-tax" must be given their ordinary and natural meaning. In the case before the Board a company had been assessed to tax and had paid tax on a part of its income only, but it was held that it had been assessed to income-tax according to the ordinary and natural meaning of the words and therefore the conclusion followed that the share-holder was not liable to pay tax on dividends received by him. That was so although no tax had been paid by the company on the profits from which those dividends were paid because they had accrued outside British India. But it would not appear to follow from this that the words 'assessed to income tax' according to their ordinary and natural meaning cover the case where a company is assessed to no income-tax.

Mr. Coltman relied on an observation of Sir George Rankin in the judgment in the case just cited that if a company has been assessed to income-tax at all it has "presumably been assessed upon its total income within the meaning of the Act." But how does that help the argument? Assuming that there is such a presumption, and assuming further that there is a presumption that if a company is assessed to income-tax it pays or will pay income-tax (though Sir George Rankin did not say that), the dictum is obviously no authority for Mr. Coltman's contention, which is that because a company submits a return for the purposes of assessment it is assessed to income-tax within the meaning of s. 14 (2) (a), although the company's assessable income is nil. Moreover, even if that proposition were admitted, it would not be a necessary corollary that under the Indian Act the company has any right to deduct income-tax in such a case. Even if it be conceded for the sake of argument that it makes no difference, from the point of view of the share-holder's liability to the revenue, or freedom from liability, whether the company actually pays income-tax or is merely assessed, why should it follow that the company is entitled to deduct income-tax which it does not pay? The Judicial Committee in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) was not concerned with any question of the company's right to deduct income-tax from dividends, and the case is no authority for the proposition that a company which does not pay income-tax is entitled to make such a deduction for its own purposes.

The English cases cited in support of the defendant company's claim to be entitled to deduct income-tax from dividends, whether the company itself pays income-tax or not, are not in my opinion in pari materia; firstly, because they are almost all cases between individual share-holders and the revenue relating to the former's liability to taxation, and, secondly, because they turn upon the construction of statutory provisions not to be found in the Indian Law. Under the English Law deduction of income-tax from dividends at source is authorized by statutory rules which, as the result of a series of Finance Acts, permit deduction from dividends at the standard rate although the company is not itself liable to assessment in the particular year. The history and development of the English Law in this respect is explained in detail in the judgment of Lord Tomlin in Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3). It is possible that the practice followed by the defendant company is permissible by the Law of England. But it has to be justified by the Law of India, which contains no similar provisions. That is to say it has to be justified in this country by showing that it is in accordance with the contractual relations between the parties.

One point sought to be made on behalf of the defendant company was that the company was exempted from payment of income-tax by reason of the accumulation of depreciation allowance, and it was urged that the benefit of this allowance enured to the company and not to the share-holders. In the period of 1923 to 1935 the ordinary share-holders were paid one rupee per share only, whereas the preference share-holders were paid their dividends nearly in full, that is to say after deduction of income-tax. Mr. Coltman argued that if income-tax had not been deducted, or if the preference share holders were to recover the income-tax deducted as the result of these suits, the result would be that they would get the whole benefit of the depreciation allowance (by reason of which the company was exempted from payment of income-tax) to the detriment of the ordinary share-holders. Actually, so far as the period referred to is concerned, it made very little difference to the ordinary share-holders because, in spite of the payment of the dividends to the preference share-holders being made less income-tax, the profits were insufficient to pay the ordinary share-holders anything except one rupee per share in a single year. But of course in the long run it must be true that the more the company has to pay to the preference share-holders the less it will be able to pay to the ordinary share-holders. However, it is difficult to see the relevance of this. No doubt when the question is whether a share-holder is entitled to a refund vis a vis the revenue, the fact that an allowance is admissible only to the company and not to the share-holder is very material, and that was the main ground of decision in Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (2). But that point does not arise here, and the answer to the other part of the argument seems obviously to be that you cannot justify an illegal deduction from the dividends of one set of share-holders by saying that it will enable you to give another set of share-holders a benefit to which they are not entitled.

As regards limitation, I agree with some hesitation that Art. 116 governs the case. There is direct authority for this in Ripon Press and Sugar Mill Co. Ltd. v. Venkatarama Chetty (6), and though that case has been overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Venkata Gurunatha Rama Seshayya v. Sri Trupurasundari Cotton Press Bezvada (9), the basis of the latter decision, viz., that the contract between the company and its members is not such a contract as is contemplated by Arts. 115 and 116, can hardly, with all deference to the learned Judges who decided the case, be regarded as convincing. As to the effect of the Privy Council decision in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinath Jiu Thakur (10) I prefer the reasoning in Maneklal Mansukhbhai v. Suryapur Mills Co. Ltd. (8). Marten, C. J., then doubted whether the Memorandum and Articles of a company could be said to be a "contract in writing registered" within the meaning of Art. 116, and Crump, J. held that it could not. But Marten, C. J., afterwards changed his opinion on that point: Govind Narayan v. Rangnath Gopal (7). The matter is not free from doubt, but on the whole I think that "registered" in this Article need not necessarily mean registered under the Regis. Act. Having regard to s. 21, Companies Act, the Memorandum and Articles may be treated as the whole contract between the parties, and that being "in writing registered" the Privy Council ruling is directly in point.

Under Art. 116 (and it would be the same under Art. 115 or Art. 120) the starting point of limitation is the breach of the contract which gave the right to sue. Then the question is, when did a breach of contract occur? Not at the moment when the company deducted income-tax from the dividends, for it could not assume, or at any rate it was not bound to assume that no income-tax would be payable until the result of the assessment was known. It has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that time did not begin to run against the preference share-holders even then, because under Art. 13-B of the Articles of Association of the company notice is required to be given when a dividend becomes payable, and the share-holder may prefer a claim within three years of the notice. In this case no notice was given that the sums deduced on account of income-tax were payable to the shareholders, for the obvious reason that the company did not recognize any such claim. But the absence of such a notice can hardly be said to have prevented the shareholders from claiming what was due to them, and I think the retention of the money became wrongful, i. e., the contract was broken, on the dates when the company was informed of the result of the assessment in each year. Time runs from the date of the breach of contract, not from the date of knowledge of the breach; Halsbury, Vol. XX, para. 758, Edition 2. There is no question of fraudulent concealment, that part of the plaintiff's case having been given up.

Kanla, J.—I agree with the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice. The principal disputes between the parties are on five points. The plaintiff contends that whether the company paid income-tax or not, the holders of the second preference shares are entitled to receive from the company Rs. 7-8 0 per annum, per share, without any deduction whatsoever by way of income-tax. The second contention is that the defendant company is entitled to deduct income-tax only if it was assessed to and paid income-tax in respect of the profits out of which the dividend is declared. The third contention is that in respect of Rs. 26, by reason of the arrangement specially made, it ceased to retain the character of a dividend and became a debt due by the defendant company to the holders of the second preference shares. It is fourthly contended that in any event the interest on the sum of Rs. 26 is a debt and does not bear the character of a dividend. The last contention is about limitation.

In order to determine the rights of the second preference shareholders it is necessary to consider the terms of the resolution passed by the company for the issue of these shares. Apart from the circular issued, the resolution states that the second preference shareholders shall have a right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. on the capital for the time being paid up on such shares. The Articles of Association, which contain the contract between the parties in respect of the payment of dividends, also state that the profits of the company, which it shall from time to time determine to divide in respect of any year or period, shall be applied in paying a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum on the capital paid up on such shares to the close of such year or other period. The resolution and the Articles of Association do not refer to any income-tax. The effect of accepting the plaintiff's contention will be that the company should bear the burden of the tax on the dividends paid to the second preference shareholders. The words of the resolution and the Articles of Association do not contain any such obligation. The circular letter issued to the shareholders expressly states that income-tax on the dividends will be payable by the shareholders. Therefore unless words to the effect that the company shall bear the burden of the tax on these dividends (for including which there is no justification) are read into the resolution and Articles of Association the plaintiff's contention cannot be accepted. A similar contention of the shareholder was rejected in Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General (12) and in Purshottamdas Harkisondas v. Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (11). In the years in which the company's profits are charged to income-tax and the company pays income-tax the position is clearly stated by Lord Phillimore in Bradbury v. English Sewing Cotton Co. (13) in these terms (p. 769):

"A joint stock company is under the Income Tax Act, 1842, treated as a person and is directed to make a return of its profits or gains according to Sch. D upon a conventional figure, arrived at by taking an average of the three preceding years, and is liable to be assessed and taxed thereupon.

If the principle of its being a distinct person, distinct from its shareholders or the aggregate of its shareholders, had been carried to a logical conclusion, there would have been no reason why each shareholder should not, in his turn, have to return as part of his profits or gains under Sch. D, the money received by him in dividends.

Their taxation would seem to be logical, but it would be destructive of joint stock company enterprise, so the Act of 1842 has, apparently proceeded on the idea that for revenue purposes a joint stock company should be treated as a large partnership, so that the payment of income-tax by a company would discharge the quasi-partners. The reason for their discharge may be the avoidance of double taxation, or to speak accurately, the avoidance of increased taxation. But the law is not founded upon the introduction of some equitable principle as modifying the statute; it is founded upon the provisions of the statute itself; and the statute carries the analogy of a partnership further, for it contemplates a company declaring a dividend on the gross gains, and then on the face of the dividend warrant making a proportionate deduction in respect of the duty, so that the shareholder whose total income is so small that he is exempt from income-tax or pays at a lower rate, can get the income-tax which has been deducted on the dividend warrant returned to him."

These observations explain the scheme under which income-tax paid by a company on its profits enures for the benefit of share-holders in respect of dividends paid out of the profits determined to be distributed. The words of the circular letter negative the contention that the company will bear the burden of the income-tax on dividends paid to the second preference share-holders. The scheme of the Income Tax Act, which is in accordance with the observations quoted above, prevents the share-holder being taxed as an assessee again in respect of the dividends received by him by reason of s. 14 (2) (a). This wider contention of the plaintiff must therefore be rejected. The contention of the plaintiff in respect of Rs. 26 and interest on the same has been fully dealt with by the learned Chief Justice and I have nothing more to add.

The second contention is the principal one on which elaborate arguments were advanced on behalf of the defendant company. The right to deduct income tax rests either on a contract or under an Act of the Legislature. The Income Tax Act, s. 18, permits deductions to be made by certain parties under certain circumstances. It gives the principal officer of a company a right to deduct tax from dividends under certain circumstances only. It is common ground that the right to deduct income-tax, in the ordinary course, from dividends paid to share-holders, is not included under s. 18, Income Tax Act. Section 18 (6) provides that all sums deducted in accordance with the provisions of the section shall be paid within the prescribed time by the person making the deductions to the Govt. of India or as the Central Board of Revenue directs. It is common ground that in the present case the amounts deducted by the company from the dividends in dispute have not been paid to the Govt. of India or according to the directions of the Central Board of Revenue. There is no other section in the Act which permits a company to deduct income-tax from dividends distributed to its share-holders.

It was argued on behalf of the company that the scheme of the Act was such that there was an inferential right to deduct the tax in respect of dividends distributed to the share-holders. For this purpose the company relied on the obligation of the principal officer of the company to furnish annual returns and also to supply information regarding dividends distributed to the share-holders. Section 20 provides that the principal officer of every company shall at the time of distribution of dividends furnish to every person receiving the dividends a certificate of the fact that the company has paid or will pay income-tax on the profits which are being distributed and specify such other particulars as may be prescribed.

It was pointed out that the words of the section were imperative and under s. 51 a penalty was prescribed if default was committed in furnishing a certificate. It was therefore contended that the company was to be assessed on the profits shown in the return. Once it was assessed it was obliged to issue a certificate under s. 20 and by reason of that, under s. 14 (2) (a) the share-holders were absolved from payment of all income-tax. It was also pointed out that by virtue of the certificate issued, the share-holders would be entitled to get a refund under s. 48 if the rate of tax payable by them was less. It was therefore contended that once the company was assessed to tax the company had a right to deduct income-tax at the standard rate fixed for the company from the dividends payable to the share-holders. In support of this contention reliance was placed on several English decisions. I shall consider them presently.

In my opinion this contention of the defendant company as put forth by them is unsound. Income Tax Act is an Act for the recovery of tax by the Govt. and not by any other person. When amounts are permitted to be deducted by way of income-tax, s. 18, sub-s. (6) provides that the same should be paid to the Govt. Before an absolute right to deduct income from a share-holder is established, a clear and irresistible inference from the scheme of the Act must be deduced. On a consideration of the different sections mentioned above it appears that when a joint stock company pays income-tax on its profits according to the Income Tax Act, and out of the profits determined by the directors to be divisible, dividend is paid, the company has a right to deduct income-tax at the standard rate and issue a certificate under s. 20 of the Act. Where, however, the company does not pay tax on its profits and thus divisible profits which are distributed to the share-holders have not been reduced by the payment of any income-tax in any shape or form, I do not find any justification in the words of the Income Tax Act to permit the company to deduct any tax from the dividends distributed to the shareholders. In the words of Lord Philimore the divisible profits which are distributed have not been reduced and the partners are entitled to receive the profits coming to their share without deduction therefrom of any amount. If a portion of the income of a company is exempted from income-tax and the company declares a dividend, it was held in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) that Govt. may lose a certain amount. It was pointed out that while the company's profits were not chargeable to tax to the full extent, the shareholders, by virtue of the certificate issued to them under s. 20 of the Act, would be able to get a refund on the full amount of the dividend received by them, which notionally would include a portion of the profits exempted from charge. According to their Lordships of the Privy Council that was a matter for the Legislature. It may be that by reason of a lacuna, the shareholders may also escape taxation on income to that extent by reason of the provisions of s. 14 (2) (a). But that cannot give the company a right to deduct income-tax when it has paid none. That decision does not support the defendant's contention. Questions between the company and Govt., or between shareholders and the Govt. are not for determination in this suit; Govt. is not a party here and their rights are in no way affected by the discussion contained in this judgment. In dealing with the English cases relied on by the defendant company it should be remembered that in England there is General-Rule 20 which runs in these terms :

"The profits or gains to be charged on any body of persons shall be computed in accordance with the provisions of this Act on the full amount of the same before any dividend thereof is made in respect of any share, right or title thereto, and the body of persons paying such dividend shall be entitled to deduct the tax appropriate thereto."

Section 7 (1), Finance Act, 1931, runs in the following terms :

"The provisions of r. 20 of the General Rules, which authorize the deduction of the appropriate tax from any dividend paid by a body of persons, shall, in relation to a dividend paid by any body of persons, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, be construed as authorizing the deduction of tax from the full amount paid out of profits and gains of the said body which have been charged to tax or which under the provisions of the Income Tax Acts, would fall to be included in computing the liability of the said body to assessment to tax for any year if the said provisions required the computation to be made by reference to the profits and gains of that year and not by reference to those of any other year or period."

Sub-ss. (2) and (3) also deal with the modes of computation. Having regard to these fundamental distinctions between the English and Indian law the English cases are not helpful in determining the point in issue. I propose to notice them only with a view to find out, if without these additional powers given to the company to deduct income-tax under the English Statute and General Rules, there is anything in those decisions to support the present contention of the defendant company. It should first be observed that all the cases relied on by the defendant company are between the taxing authorities and the assessee and there is not a single case in which their present contention has been upheld.

In Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (2), the Scottish company incorporated under the Companies Act and carrying on business in the United Kingdom and Colonies having paid United Kingdom income-tax at the rate of 5s. per pound alleged that they had paid 1s. 6d. per pound on that part of their income which was earned in the colonies and obtained a rebate in respect of its colonial profits by a corresponding deduction of the United Kingdom income-tax. It was held that the company in paying the dividend for the then current year on its preference stock was entitled to deduct from that dividend United Kingdom income-tax at the rate of 5s. and was not bound or entitled to deduct at the net-rate to be ascertained by taking into account the amount of tax re-paid to the company under s. 43, Finance Act, 1916. That decision was on the construction of s. 43 of the Act which permitted the assessee who had paid the tax to claim a refund of the United Kingdom tax. The decision is perfectly logical because the company as such had paid the United Kingdom tax of 5s. on the whole profits which included the profits earned on business done in the colonies. These profits of the colonial business were already charged with a tax of 1s. 6d. by the colonial authorities. Under the circumstances that portion of the profits was subject in fact to a charge of the colonial tax of 1s. 6d. and United Kingdom tax of 5s. When the refund of 1s. 6d. was obtained it obviously ensured for the benefit of the company, and the preference shareholders from whose dividends income-tax at the rate of 5s. only was deducted could not in law or equity be considered entitled to the deduction. The point has nothing to do with the present controversy as it turned on the construction of s. 43, Finance Act, 1916.

In Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General (12), the facts were that by s. 17, Gas Companies Act, 1877, it was enacted that except as in the Act provided the profits of the Ashton Gas Co. to be divided amongst the share-holders could not or should not exceed the rate of ten pounds per cent. per annum on the ordinary share capital. The company paid the dividend in full, without deducting the tax, and attached to the dividend warrant a certificate that tax on the profits, of which the dividend formed a part had been or would be paid to the proper officer for receipt of tax. The Attorney-General and the Corporation of Ashton brought an action against the Gas Company and it was held that the profits ought to be calculated as inclusive and not exclusive of the amount payable in respect of the profits proposed to be divided. Lord Halsbury, L. C. in delivering the judgment clearly pointed out that the effect of paying ten per cent. without deduction of income-tax in effect amounted to a payment of ten per cent. plus the amount of income-tax due thereon, but which under the certificate the share-holder was exempted from paying. The result was that instead of ten per cent. he got ten per cent. plus the tax. That was clearly outside the scope of s. 17 of the statute and therefore the action of the company was not justified. That case again has nothing to do with the present case as in that case the company had paid the full tax chargeable on its profits. It was not a case where the company had not paid any tax at all on its profits.

Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) was strongly relied upon by the defendant company. In that case a company owning real property in the City of London was assessed to income-tax under Sch. A. The profits of the company largely exceeded the amount at which it was assessed and on which it paid income-tax. Out of the surplus of rents received over and above the amount of income-tax paid, the company distributed a dividend amounting in case of one individual share-holder to £4,275. It was held that by virtue of r. 20 of the General Rules applicable to Schs. A, B, C, D and E in the Act of 1918 and of s. 38 (2) and s. 39 (2) of the Act of 1927, the share-holder was obliged to include this sum in his return for the purpose of an assessment to sur-tax, as being part of his income—taxed income—although free from tax under Sch. D. It is obvious that the case has no application to the facts here. It was decided on a construction of General Rule 20, which finds no place in the Income Tax Act. The observations in that case are in respect of the liability of the individual share-holder to the Income-tax Authorities and do not confer on the company itself a right to deduct income-tax when it had paid none. Indeed the facts show that in respect of the amount which was not charged to income-tax the company distributed the amount without deducting any income-tax. I do not see how this case helps the defendant company.

Mr. Coltman on behalf of the company urged that partial assessment of profits as in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) is equivalent to "assessed to income-tax" even though the assessment is that the company has not to pay any income-tax on the profits at all. For this contention there is no authority. On the other hand Lord Tomlin's observations in Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) show a distinction when the assessment by reason of the rules, is nil. The point was not further developed in Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) as the facts did not require that discussion. In my opinion there is no justification for the extension of the statement found in Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) in India so as to include a case where a company on assessment is ordered to pay no tax, i. e., is declared exempted from income-tax. Income-tax Commissioner, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust Ltd. (1) is a good answer to the plaintiff's claim in respect of the accounting year 1934-35 (where admittedly a portion of the company's profits came to be taxed) but not to the present contention.

On the other hand in Gimson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (14) an assessment to super tax under the Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 7 was made upon the appellant for a certain year in respect of a dividend paid to him by a limited company in which he was a share-holder; the dividend was paid partly out of capital and partly out of money which was income in the hands of the company, but in respect of which income-tax had not been payable by reason of the rules relating to the measurement of income. The revenue authorities claimed super-tax in respect of so much of the dividend as was paid out of income of the company, but in respect of which income-tax had not been payable. It was held that a share-holder in a company was only liable to pay super-tax in respect of a dividend which had been subject to income-tax, and that as the income of the company out of which this dividend was payable had, by reason of the application of the rules relating to the measurement of income not been subject to income-tax, the appellant was equally not liable to super-tax in respect thereof. Kowlatt, J. in the course of his judgment stated as follows (p. 252*):

"Now what has been done in this case in assessing the appellant to super-tax is this: The 35l. received by the appellant in respect of this part of his dividend, which was the appellant's aliquot proportion of what the company had earned from this source or of what they had to divide from this source, was treated as increased by a sum of 9l.; which the Commissioners called the appropriate addition for income-tax, that is to say, that the 35l. really represents 44l. of profits divided by the company on which 9l. has been deducted for income-tax. That is simply stating what is not the fact. There is no evidence to support that. It is a simple statement as to something which is a disputable fact, and the Attorney-General really did not contend to the contrary. What he did contend was, that although the assessment of 44l. could not be maintained, nevertheless the assessment could be maintained if the figure was 35l., and he said that although income-tax had not been charged upon 35l., he would maintain his right to say that it ought to have been charged, either that it ought to have been charged in the hands of the recipient by direct assessment, or that it ought to have been treated as tax bearing income paid by the company out of funds not themselves taxed, so that the company ought to have deducted the tax and ought to have paid it over, and that as they had not done so they were liable to a penalty under s. 33, Finance Act of 1924".

It may be noticed that the last part contains the contention that although the company had not paid and was not liable to pay tax the company ought to have deducted the tax from the dividend distributed out of the portion. The judgment proceeds as follows (p. 252*):

"That brings me to the point in the case, which is this. The Commissioners have held that the dividend received from a company is itself a tax bearing subject-matter, and that it is not a subject-matter which represents merely the division to the individual of a fund which has suffered tax so that the tax attaches in the hands of the company, and that the receiver of the dividend has nothing whatever to say to the income-tax as regards that. The matter became of extreme importance in the first instance in cases where a subject having a small income was entitled to recover back tax. The rule which governs the method of estimating the income in such a case is exactly the same rule as that which governs the method of estimating income for the purposes of super-tax, and if the Commissioners are right in this case in assessing the appellant to super-tax in the sum of 44l., we should arrive at this extraordinary result, that if the income of the appellant was a small one he could recover back income-tax which the revenue authorities had never received and which represented sums which did not exist, which would be quite wrong.

I have always regarded it as fundamental that an individual whose income comes to him straight and is small recovers the tax which he has suffered and no other, and that an individual who pays super-tax pays it in respect of a fund which has super-tax, and no other, so if the appellant had received this money not from the company but direct, by himself holding the source of income from which it was derived, and had not been liable to income-tax in respect of that sum of money by reason of the rules relating to the measurement of income for the purposes of income-tax, his income would not be a subject-matter on which he could recover back tax in case his income was small or on which he would pay super-tax in case his income was a large one. The case of a company is somewhat different, but in essence it is the same and the Attorney-General very properly referred to what I said in Inland Revenue Commissioner v. Blott (15), which is a material case. A share-holder can only recover back tax which the money he received has suffered, and he can only be liable to pay super-tax in respect of a dividend which is taxable."

This case does not uphold the contention urged by the defendant company even under the Income Tax Act and rules applicable in England. This decision has been quoted with approval by Lord Tomlin in Neumann v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3). Under the circumstances it appears that even under the English Law the position taken up by the defendant company is not supported by authority. In any event the Income Tax Act does not justify by its terms or even inferentially such a right in a company. If there is no such statutory right is there a right under the contract between the parties? In the course of his argument Mr. Coltman contended that the contract between the company and the share-holders was to pay Rs. 7-8-0, less income-tax at the standard rate. The suggested addition has to go a lot more. It should include the case when the company is not ordered to pay any tax at all. No authority is cited to support the contention which would justify the inclusion of any such term in a contract between a share-holder and a company. The circular letter issued to the share-holders in substance is against the terms of the contract suggested by Mr. Coltman. In terms it says that income-tax upon the dividends will be payable by the holders of the shares.

As I have pointed out, if by reason of the company's distributable profits being free from income-tax the company is not liable to pay income-tax, as pointed out in Gimson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (14), the dividend when paid to the share-holders is also not liable to be charged to income-tax. If so, there appears to be no justification for a company to say that although the Govt. is not entitled to tax the profits of the company and although when these profits when distributed to the share-holders are not liable to be taxed, the company shall deduct income-tax and thus acquire money which it has no right to receive and is under no obligation to pay or account to anyone. Barring general arguments, nothing is cited to support this contention. The inferential right of the company to deduct income-tax, when it has in fact paid income-tax, has been recognized and is not sought to be disturbed, but when it is sought to be extended so as to permit a company to make a profit for its own benefit and not for the benefit of the Govt. in the name of income-tax, I think it is but right that a clear authority should be called for before that right can be recognized.

It was urged that the company gave to the share-holders a certificate under s. 20 and that enabled them to recover a refund under s. 4, Income Tax Act. If this is sought to be argued as a defence it must mean that although the company has deducted from the share-holders a sum as income-tax, they are given a document by which they will be able to recover the same from the Govt. There is no such defence in the written statement or the issues and I do not think it is proper to permit Counsel to raise it in the course of his argument. The contract as suggested by Mr. Coltman would mean that the company had power (presuming it had) to give the share-holders a document which would absolve the share-holders from their liability to pay the tax. The company will therefore deduct from the dividend what the share-holders would have to pay by way of tax. This contention is open to two objections. The first is that there is no initial contract between the company and the share-holders that the company shall give a certificate under s. 20, Income Tax Act. Section 51 of the Act provides that when there is a reasonable cause or excuse the company is absolved from the obligation to give a certificate. Moreover, even if such a certificate were granted I do not see how the refund section can be applicable when in fact the Govt. have not received any tax at all from anyone. Without an initial payment there can be no refund as pointed out in Gimson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (14). The second objection is that having regard to s. 14(2) (a) it is not established that on receipt of a dividend warrant (with or without a certificate) the share-holder is under a liability to pay tax under the circumstances existing in this case. Indeed, it may be disputed if the company was justified at all in issuing certificates in the terms they were given. I therefore think that there being no contract and no statutory right the company was not justified in deducting income-tax from the dividends declared for the years in which the company had in fact paid no tax. The assessment orders put in as exhibits show that the company was exempted from paying all tax from 1925-26 up to 1933-34. Therefore for those years the right to deduct amount on the ground of income-tax must be rejected.

On the point of limitation I agree with the learned Chief Justice. There is no evidence to prove that the plaintiff became a holder of her preference shares upon the terms of the circular letter of December 23, 1918. The contention of the defendant company that the plaintiff's husband was a share-holder and as such had received the circular does not help the defendant company. The fact that he held a general power-of-attorney also does not help the company. The knowledge of the circular acquired by him was not acquired in his position as an agent and the knowledge acquired in another capacity cannot be fastened on to the plaintiff.

Beaumont, C. J.—With regard to the order we propose to make a declaration in these terms: Declare that the defendant company not having in fact paid income-tax in respect of profits of the defendant company during the accounting years 1925/26 to 1933/34 (both inclusive) were not entitled to make any deductions in respect of income-tax upon the dividends paid or payments made towards the liability of Rs 26 and interest thereon to the plaintiff and all persons who were from time to time during the said years holders of the second preference shares. With regard to payment the plaintiff asks for an order that the defendant company do pay to her sums of Re. 0-5-5, Re. 0-2-8½, Re. 0-13-6½ and

Rs. 2-8-7½ per each second preference share held by her in respect of dividends declared in July 1931, July 1932, August 1933 and September 1934, and there is no difficulty in making an order in those terms, but the plaintiff also suggests that we should extend the order for payment to the holders of other second preference shares represented by her in the suit. It is, I think, clear that we cannot do that, because some of these holders may be persons against whom the defendant company may have some right of set-off. Mr. Coltman has argued strenuously that in a representative suit the Court cannot make any order for payment. No doubt the rule is established that as against a representative defendant the Court will not make an order for payment. But no authority has been cited to us—nor do I know of any—which shows that the Court cannot in a proper case make an order for payment on behalf of a representative plaintiff. I think, however, all we can do is to make an order in general terms in this form.

Order that the defendant company do pay to the other holders of the second preference shares represented herein by the plaintiff such sums as they may be entitled to having regard to the above declaration, and to the equities existing between themselves and the company with liberty to apply. If we do not make that order the difficulty is this. We are told that there are something like 20,000 holders of second preference shares. If instead of making an order for payment we were to say that we cannot make such an order and that limitation will continue to run as against the holders of second preference shares other than the plaintiff those holders of second preference shares will now have to start suits against the defendant company, we might have 20,000 suits against the defendant company with 20,000 applications for stay pending an appeal in this suit to the Privy Council. In our view we ought to avoid such a contingency, and we think that an order in the terms we have suggested will do no injustice to the defendant company, and will, on the other hand, save limitation from running. Payment will carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of judgment and not before (Art. 136). The plaintiff is entitled to the costs of the suit.

SAMBHOO AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTSversusPARASHRAM—DEFENDANT—*RESPONDENT

Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, s. 129 (3)—Dispute as to right of way — Enquiry and order passed by Tahsildar—Appeal heard by Sub-Divisional Officer exercising powers under s. 32—Subsequent civil suit—Starting point of limitation.

A dispute regarding a right of way which provided access to certain survey number was enquired into by the Tahsildar who was empowered to do so by Govt. Notification at the instance of the defendant and the Tahsildar passed his order on January 10, 1934, in defendant's favour. The plaintiffs thereon preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner which was heard by the Sub-Divisional Officer, who decided it on March 14, 1934. An appeal to the Commissioner was decided on June 13, 1934, and a revision application made to the Local Govt. was decided on December 12, 1934. The decision having been given against the plaintiffs they filed a suit on March 11, 1935, in terms of s. 129 (3) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928:

Held, that although the Tahsildar exercised the powers under the Berar Land Revenue Code under s. 129 his decisions did not have the force of the decisions of the Deputy Commissioner. The order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer exercising powers under s. 32 became that of the Deputy Commissioner and the period on one year was to be computed from the date of the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer. The suit was, therefore, in time.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, dated April 14, 1936.

Mr. V. K. Rajwade, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. K. Sheorey, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is plaintiffs' appeal from the judgment of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, in Civil Appeal No. 64-A of 1935 decided on April 14, 1936. The only point which arises for determination in this appeal is whether the suit was within time.

There was a dispute regarding a right of way which provided access to Survey No. 71. It was enquired into by the Tahsildar Malkapur at the instance of the defendant Parashram, and the Tahsildar passed his order on January 10, 1934 in defendant's favour. The plaintiffs thereon preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner which was heard by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Khamgaon, who decided it on March 14, 1934. An appeal to the Commissioner was decided on June 13, 1934 and a revision application made to the Local Govt. was decided on December 12, 1934. The decision having been given against the plaintiffs they filed a suit on March 14, 1935 in terms of s. 129 (3) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928. Both the Courts below held that the cause of action arose on the date on which the Tahsildar's order was passed, that is to say on January 10, 1934 and that the suit having been filed more than one year after that date was barred by time.

The terms of sub-s. (3) of s. 129 of the Berar Land Revenue Code go to show that it is the decision of the Deputy Commissioner which is the starting point of limitation of one year prescribed therein for instituting a civil suit. The question is whether Tahsildar's order should be deemed to be the order of the Deputy Commissioner for the reason that he was empowered by a notification of the Local Govt. to enquire into and decide the right of way over the boundaries contemplated in s. 129 of the Berar Land Revenue Code. The notification invests all Tahsildars with powers under the Code specified in schedule appended to that notification. The Tahsildar is thereby authorised to enquire into and decide such disputes but that does not invest him with powers of the Deputy Commissioner so as to make his decision a decision of the Deputy Commissioner. There is a clear and unmistakable difference in the Notification afore-mentioned and the notification No. 593-27-XII dated February 7, 1929 which confers on the Sub-Divisional Officers the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under s. 32 (1), cl. (1) to hear appeals from orders passed by Tahsildars, and Naib-Tahsildars under the Code. Whereas in the first notification the expression is "invest all Tahsildars with powers under the Code", the expression in the other notification is "to confer on all Sub-Divisional Officers the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under s. 32" etc. The meaning is clear beyond any controversy. While the Tahsildar exercised the powers under the Code under s. 129 in this case his decisions did not have the force of the decisions of the Deputy Commissioner; the Sub-Divisional Officer who exercised the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under s. 32 stood in the shoes of the Deputy Commissioner, and his decision took effect as if it had been made by the Deputy Commissioner himself. As between the two orders, viz., that passed by the Tahsildar and that passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer it is the latter order which becomes that of the Deputy Commissioner, as will be clear by a reference to s. 32 of that Act. As the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer exercising powers under that section became that of the Deputy Commissioner it became appealable to the Commissioner, and in this case an appeal was actually filed from the Sub-Divisional Officer's order as if it was the Deputy Commissioner's order. The Sub-Divisional Officer's order was passed on March 14, 1934 and the period of limitation of one year must be computed from that date. The plaintiffs would thus have time to file a suit up to March 14, 1935. They filed the suit on March 11, 1935. It must therefore be treated as having been filed within time.

The lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is remanded to the trial Court for trial on merits. The appeal thus succeeds with costs in all the Courts. Counsel's fees Rs. 20.

Criminal Reference No. 34 of 1939

ROBERTS, C. J. AND DUNKLEY, J.
THE KING—PROSECUTOR

versus

KYAW AYE—ACCUSED

Whipping Act (IV of 1909), s. 3—Offence under s. 380, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Sentence of whipping, if can be substituted for order of detention in Borstal School passed by trial Court—Burma Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act (III of 1930), s. 25—Order under—Nature of.

In a case of an offence under s. 380, I. P. O., a Magistrate has two alternatives before him. He may send an offender to prison or, in lieu thereof, he may either cause him to be whipped or send him to Borstal; but the power to order a person to be whipped is only in lieu of another punishment under the Code and once an order of detention in Borstal has been passed there is no power to alter this order to a sentence of whipping. Where a Magistrate has ordered detention in Borstal School of an offender, the Sessions Judge has no power to substitute for it a sentence of whipping as that would be enhancing the sentence. 163 Ind. Cas. 74 (1), 163 Ind. Cas. 144 (2) and 165 Ind. Cas. 575 (3), relied on.

Per Ba U, J.—(In order of reference) the order passed under s. 25, Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act, has not the same legal effect as an order passed under s. 562, Criminal P. O., as it affects the offender directly in his person and deprives him of his liberty unlike an order under s. 562, Criminal P. O. It is, therefore, a punishment within the meaning of s. 3, Whipping Act, and s. 53, I. P. O.

Cr. Ref. made by Ba U, J., in Criminal Revision No. 125-A of 1939, dated April 28, 1939.

Order of Reference

Ba U, J.—Respondent Kyaw Aye, aged 18, was tried and convicted on a charge of cattle theft under s. 380, I. P. C., and ordered to be detained in the Borstal School for four years. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge of Bassein confirmed the conviction but set aside the order of detention and in lieu thereof gave him 20 lashes. The question is whether the sentence of whipping given in lieu of the order of detention in a Borstal School amounts to enhancement within the meaning of s. 423 (1) (b) (3), Criminal P. C. The learned Govt. Advocate submits that it does. His contention is that though whipping can be given under s. 3, Whipping Act, in addition to or in lieu of any punishment to which an offender is liable, it cannot be given in lieu of an order of detention in a Borstal School as the order of detention is not a punishment. An order of detention passed under s. 25, Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act, according to the learned Govt. Advocate has the same legal effect as an order passed under s. 562, Criminal P. C. He contends that punishment as used in s. 3, Whipping Act, means the kind of punishment as set out in s. 53, I. P. C. There are six kinds of punishments as set out in that section, namely, (1) death : (2) transportation : (3) penal servitude : (4) imprisonment, rigorous or simple : (5) forfeiture of property : (6) fine.

If the order passed under s. 25, Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act, has the same legal effect as an order passed under s. 562, Criminal P. C., it cannot then be punishment in lieu of which whipping can be given. In my opinion, it does not have the same legal effect as an order passed under s. 562, Criminal P. C. The object underlying the infliction of punishment is to make the offender suffer either in person or in purse or in both so that he may not follow his errant way in future and at the same time to make others understand that they will be dealt with similarly if they commit any offence against society. This being recognized not to meet the case of a person having the first lapse in his life from the path of rectitude, s. 562, was introduced. Under the said section, a person who has his first lapse in life need not be sentenced to punishment. Provided certain conditions set out in that section are fulfilled, he may be given a chance of reforming himself by being let off on recognizances for a certain period of time. If he does not behave himself well within that period, he can be re-called and sentenced to any kind of punishment as prescribed in s. 53 of the I. P. C.

The order thus passed under s. 562, is what I may call an order putting a man on probation of good conduct for a certain period of time. It does not affect him either in person or in purse, but the order passed under s. 25, Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act affects the offender directly in his person. Though he is not sent to jail, he is detained according to his age either in a Borstal School or a training school. It thus deprives him of his liberty. To be deprived of one's liberty is in effect a punishment. Detention in a Borstal or training school lies midway between rigorous and simple imprisonment. A man sent to rigorous imprisonment has to do hard manual labour whereas a man sent to simple imprisonment is allowed to pass his time in idleness. In the case of a boy sent to a Borstal or training school he is neither asked to do hard manual labour nor allowed to pass his time in idleness. He is taught some useful trade so that he may become a useful citizen on his release. Such being the case, I am of opinion, that an order passed under s. 25, Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act is a punishment within the meaning of s. 3, Whipping Act. That this is so is in my opinion, proved by what s. 10 of the aforesaid Act says. Under the said section whipping can be given in lieu of the order of detention in the case of a boy under 16 years of age. Further I may point out that the learned authors of the Law of Crimes, Ratanlal and Thakore are also of opinion that detention in a reformatory is a punishment within the meaning of s. 53, I. P. C. They say "to the six kinds of punishments mentioned in the section two more are added by subsequent enactments, namely, whipping and detention in reformatories." (See p. 85 of their book, 14th Edition.) As this is, however, an important point, I refer the following questions for decision by a Bench, full or otherwise as the learned Chief Justice may decide :

(1) Whether whipping can be given in lieu of an order of detention in a Borstal School.

(2) If so, how many stripes should be regarded as equivalent to a particular period of detention.

I may note that the sentence of whipping in this case has been carried out.

Mr. U Myint Thein, Govt. Advocate, for the King.

Order of Division Bench

Roberts, C. J.—In this case two questions have been referred for our decision. The first is whether whipping can be given in lieu of an order of detention in a Borstal School, and the second, if so, how many stripes should be regarded as equivalent to a particular period of detention. The facts out of which this question arises are concerned with a matter in which the respondent and another were tried for an offence under s. 380, I. P. O. and the Fourth Additional Magistrate of Bassein passed an order against the respondent of four years' detention in the Borstal Institute. The learned Sessions Judge thought that this was unsuitable and substituted for it a sentence of twenty lashes of whipping which we regret to learn, has been carried out. Now, under s. 3, Whipping Act, whoever commits, among other offences an offence against s. 380, I. P. O., may be punished with whipping in lieu of any punishment to which he may, for such offence be liable under the said Code, that is to say, the Magistrate who tried the case might have decided to order whipping in the case of this respondent; but what in fact he decided to do was to send him to be detained in the Borstal Institute. How then, did the learned Sessions Judge pass a sentence of whipping? He could only do so by invoking s. 3, Whipping Act, and he could only pass a sentence of whipping in lieu of any punishment to which the respondent might be liable under the said Code, that is to say, he could only pass a sentence of whipping in lieu of a sentence of imprisonment; but the respondent had never been sentenced to imprisonment, and in order to give the learned Sessions Judge power to sentence him to whipping he must notionally re-convert the order sending him to the Borstal Institute into a sentence of imprisonment. He has no power to do so as that would be enhancing the sentence. It is clear that a Magistrate, in such a case, has two alternatives before him. He may send an offender to prison or, in lieu thereof, he may either cause him to be whipped or send him to Borstal; but the power to order a person to be whipped is only in lieu of another punishment under the Code and once an order of detention in Borstal has been passed there is no power to alter this order to a sentence of whipping.

The authorities which bear upon the point are numerous and clear. In Emperor v. Ah Hwa (1), it was pointed out that an order for detention in the Borstal Institute in substitution of a sentence of imprisonment is not enhancement, that is to say, it is a lesser sentence than that of imprisonment. It follows that a sentence of imprisonment must always be an enhancement of an order for detention in a Borstal Institute. This authority was followed in Tha E v. Emperor (2). The latter decision was referred to by a Full Bench in King-Emperor v. Ismail (3). In the circumstances the sentence which has been carried out was an illegal one. As it has been carried out the records will be sent back to the learned Sessions Judge for future guidance in matters of this kind.

DIWAN SINGH—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 522 (3), 433, 438—S. 522 (3), applicability—Whether gives right of appeal against order passed under s. 522—Court of reference in s. 522 (3), what is—Court having power to report case under s. 438, if Court of reference.

Sub-s. (3) of s. 522, Criminal P. O., only applies to the Court which is dealing with the original matter either as a Court of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision in relation to that matter. It does not give any sort of right of appeal by itself against an order passed under s. 522. 135 Ind. Cas. 679 (1), relied on.

A Court of reference in sub-s. (3) of s. 522, Criminal P. O., can only be interpreted as meaning a Court which has the power to refer and that is only a Court empowered under s. 433. A Court which has power to refer the case for orders to the High Court under s. 438 is not a Court of reference. 145 Ind. Cas. 327 (2), explained.

Or. R. from the order of the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, dated August 3, 1939.

Mr. Mohammad Aslam Khan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Respondent.

Order.—This case involves a question of law for which no direct authority has been cited before me. The learned Magistrate heard and decided a criminal case against the petitioner for criminal trespass and convicted him. He apparently held that the trespass was merely of a technical nature, as he only sentenced the petitioner to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a small fine. There was no appeal against this order. The learned Magistrate was later moved under s. 522, Criminal P. O., to restore possession to the complainant in the original case. The learned Magistrate refused to restore possession as he was of opinion that the conduct of the complainant was not entirely satisfactory and that he had deliberately given wrong boundaries in his application to the Civil Court and by this means had been put in possession of the whole baithak to which he was not entitled. The learned Magistrate in view of this declined to exercise his discretion to make an order under s. 522 and left it to the complainant to get his rights by application to a Civil Court. As I have said there was no appeal to the learned Sessions Judge. A revision petition was however put in by the complainant for enhancement of sentence and whilst this was pending another petition was put in to the learned Sessions Judge to pass the order under s. 522 which the learned trial Court had declined to pass. The learned Sessions Judge entertained these petitions. He did not however report them for the orders of the High Court. He took action himself and passed orders granting this application apparently believing himself to be entitled to act under sub-s. (3) of s. 522, Criminal P. O. He dismissed the other application for enhancement.

There is one thing that I am clear about in this case and that is that sub-s. (3) of s. 522, only applies to the Court which is dealing with the original matter either as a Court of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision in relation to that matter. It does not give any sort of right of appeal by itself against an order passed under s. 522. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has drawn my attention to a case reported in Ghazan v. Bhag Bhari (1) in which the same view was held by another Judge of this Court. It is clear to me therefore that as far as sub-s. (3) of s. 522 is concerned the learned Sessions

Judge was neither a Court of Appeal nor a Court of confirmation nor a Court of Revision. His power with regard to the revision petition before him for enhancement of sentence was limited to reporting the matter to the High Court and he could not revise the order himself. It has been contended on behalf of the respondent that he was a Court of reference, the argument being that s. 438, Criminal P. O., gives him the power to refer the case for orders to the High Court. Reliance has been placed upon a judgment reported in Fida Hussain v. Sarfaraz Hussain (2). There is one remark at the end of the judgment which might be construed as meaning that the Judges took it for granted that a Court reporting the case for orders under s. 438 was a Court with power to act under sub-s. (3) of s. 522. The matter however does not appear to have been put explicitly before the Bench and to have been definitely considered by them, as the real question which was involved in that case was whether a Court which could take action under sub-s. (3) of s. 522 had to do so within a month of its order or could do so at any time without limit.

It is true that a case reported by a Sessions Judge under s. 438 is frequently loosely described as a reference but when it comes to interpreting a statute one cannot gain any support from the mere fact that a term is habitually loosely used. One has to look at the statute itself. Looking at the statute itself I find that a Court of reference can only be a Court such as is described in s. 433 of the Code where the word 'refer' is definitely used. No such word is used in s. 438 where the word 'report' is used instead. There would have been no difficulty in using the word 'refer' in s. 438 in place of the word 'report' had it been the intention of the Legislature to include a Court acting under s. 438 in the category of Courts of reference. It was contended that the Legislature which amended the statute in 1923 by adding sub-s. (3) to s. 522 intended to include a Court acting under s. 438. If however this was their intention they have not carried it out by the language which they have used. In my opinion a Court of reference in sub-s. (3) of s. 522 can only be interpreted as meaning a Court which has the power to refer and that as far as

I can see from the Code, is only a Court empowered under s. 433, Criminal P. O.

The order of the learned Sessions Judge therefore appears to me to be without jurisdiction and I must and do set it aside. It was argued before me that I should not set it aside as substantial justice has been done. I am not however really satisfied that substantial justice would be done by the learned Sessions Judge's order. The learned Magistrate had a discretion to pass an order under s. 522 or not and if he was of opinion, and he was the best judge of this, that the complainant had not come into Court with clean hands and had himself been guilty of some malpractice in his proceedings with relation to the case, I think that the order which he passed refusing to take action under s. 522 was not unjustified. As a result therefore I set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge in this case and restore the original order of the learned Magistrate. In other words the petition is accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), s. 115—Interpretation and scope of—"Formal defect", meaning of—Defect, should not affect merits of case—Withdrawal allowed on ground not contemplated by r. 1 (2)—Order amounts to exercising jurisdiction not vested in Court and is revisable under s. 115.

Clause (a) of O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), Civil P. C., is illustrative of the "grounds" referred to in cl. (b), and although the "grounds" need not be ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a), they must be "at least analogous" to it. The ground in cl. (a) requires that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect; whereas the grounds contemplated in cl. (b) need not necessarily be fatal to the suit, but must be analogous to a formal defect. [p. 413, col. 1.]

The expression "formal defect" must be given a wide and liberal meaning, and must be deemed to connote every kind of defect which does not affect the merits of the case, whether that defect be fatal to the suit or not. This expression includes misjoinder of parties or of the matters in suit, rejection of a material document for not having a proper stamp and the erroneous valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (11), relied on. [p. 413, col. 2.]

Where the plaintiff prays for an injunction on the basis of his being the owner of the site which he claims to be an accretion to his land as an alluvion and the suit is dismissed for want of proof, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to withdraw the suit in appeal in order to file another suit claiming title to the site in suit on the ground of adverse possession as there is no defect of form in the suit but a defect of substance arising out of his inability to prove the title on which he based his claim. Allowing the withdrawal of the suit on grounds not contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) amounts to the exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court under r. 1 (2) and its order can be corrected in revision under s. 115. 119 Ind. Cas. 773 (24), relied on.

O. R. App. against an order of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 6 of 1938.

Mr. B. D. Belvi, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for the Respondents.

Lokur, J.—This is an application in revision against the order of the Assistant Judge of Belgaum allowing the withdrawal of a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit. The original plaintiff, who died during the pendency of the suit, filed the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chikodi for an injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing him in removing the trunk of the babul tree which he has cut down. He alleged that the tree stood on his land survey No. 12c/1 of Badakatul and had been in his enjoyment for 40 years. The land is bounded by a stream on its east and the defendants who are the inamdars of the village contended that the tree was not standing on the plaintiff's land but in the bed of the stream of which the flow had been wrongfully diverted by the plaintiff by artificial means. The plaintiff claimed that the said portion of the bed was an alluvion and as such was an accretion to his land, while the defendants contended that the new land in the bed of the stream was not an alluvion since it was formed as a result of the plaintiff's wrongful construction of a fencing in the bed of the stream, and that even if it were an alluvion, they, as the inamdars of the entire village, were entitled to it. The trial Court held that the new land was not an alluvion, that the plaintiff had wrongfully encroached upon the bed of the stream, of which the inamdars were the owners, and that the plaintiff could become entitled to it only by being in adverse possession thereof for the statutory period. The trial Court observed that adverse possession had not been specifically pleaded in the plaint, and that even if the plaintiff be allowed to prove his title by adverse possession, the evidence adduced was insufficient to hold it proved. The suit was, therefore, dismissed with costs, and in the appeal filed by the deceased plaintiff's sons, they applied for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit, on the ground that "the case of adverse possession and declaration was not embodied in the plaint," "through oversight." In spite of the respondents' objections, the application was granted and the suit was allowed to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit. The respondents (the original defendants) have now come in revision. The question that arises in this case is whether the ground on which the withdrawal of the suit has been allowed is such as is contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-r. (2), Civil P. O., 1908. Under that sub-rule, withdrawal of a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter may be permitted to the plaintiff, where the Court is satisfied

"(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim."

In the present case there was no formal defect fatal to the suit, and the permission for withdrawal was granted for a reason said to fall under cl. (b). It is contended for the petitioners that "other sufficient grounds" mentioned in cl. (b) must be ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a). On the other hand it is urged for the opponents that there is no such limitation on the expression used in cl. (b), and that the suit may be allowed to be withdrawn on any ground whatsoever, provided the Court deems it to be sufficient. There is a sharp conflict of judicial opinion on this point, and it is necessary to go to the root of the principle and the history of the legislation on this subject. In cl. (b) the nature of the "grounds" which may be regarded as sufficient is not specified, and ordinarily general words in a statute, like all others, ought to be deemed to carry their full and natural meaning, and uncalled for restrictions ought not to be imposed on their plain and ordinary meaning. An exception to this is however recognized in the accepted canon of interpretation that if a general word is preceded by particular and specific words of the same nature as itself, it takes its meaning from them, and is presumed to be restricted to the same genus as those words. But this doctrine of ejusdem generis is by no means of universal application, and should not be applied where there are adequate grounds to show that the natural and wider meaning is intended. To quote from Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (Edn. 8, p. 293):

"If it can be seen from a wider inspection of the scope of the legislation that the general words, notwithstanding that they follow particular words are nevertheless to be construed generally, effect must be given to the intention of the Legislature as gathered from the larger survey."

In Kali Ram v. Dharman (1) and in Sadeq Reza v. Asaf Kader (2) an unrestricted meaning was given to the words "other sufficient grounds" and sub-r. (2) (b) was so interpreted as to give the Court authority to permit the withdrawal of a suit on any ground, which appeared to it to be sufficient, whether that ground was in the nature of a formal defect or not; but the earlier rulings to the contrary were not discussed in these two cases. In Kannuswami Pillai v. Jagathambal (3) Sadasiva Ayyar, J. differed from the earlier rulings in Aiya Goundan v. Gopanna Manrادیار (4), Khorda Co., Ltd. v. Durgā Charan Chandra (5) and Mabulla Sardar v. Rani Hemangini Debi (6) and expressed his opinion that there was nothing clearly indicated in the section itself from which it could be inferred that the Legislature intended to allow withdrawal with permission only in the cases where the suit was bad by reason of a formal defect or something analogous to a formal defect. His opinion was however obiter, since the decision ultimately turned on the finding that the ground, whether analogous to a formal defect or not, was insufficient. The other Judge in that case, Oldfield, J., expressly stated that he was not disposed to reconsider the principle referred to in Aiya Goundan v. Gopanna Manrادیار (4) and that it was not necessary to decide whether in that case the Court had jurisdiction to allow the withdrawal of the suit by the plaintiffs, since, even if it had the plaintiffs had not been honest and deserved no consideration. In the three cases referred to by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., and also in Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (7), it was held that the sufficient ground referred to in cl. (b) must be ejusdem generis with the defect referred to in cl. (a). In Buta Singh v. Hardit Singh (8) this was taken as "settled law." In Jagmohan v. Ram Khelawan (9), Boys, J., took the same view and observed that "any other sufficient ground" must be ejusdem generis with a formal defect. The Oudh Court also has taken the same view in Tikai Chobay v. Firm Sheo Dayal Ramji Das (10). Several other rulings to the same effect were cited at the bar, but a review of them shows that the decision in each case depended mostly on its own facts, and the grounds were in fact insufficient, but the doctrine of ejusdem generis was resorted to in order that it might be held that the permission granted was ultra vires, and therefore liable to be interfered with in revision. As already stated, the application of the doctrine must depend upon "the intention of the Legislature as gathered from the larger survey" of the scope of the legislation.

Before the Civil P. C. was enacted in 1859, suits were allowed to be withdrawn on certain recognized grounds, such as those mentioned in the leading case in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (11). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down in effect that there was no power in the Courts in India, similar to that exercised by Courts of Equity or Common Law in England, to dismiss a suit with liberty for the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for the same matter, or to enter a non-suit, and that such power of Indian Courts was limited to questions of form, as in the case (1) of misjoinder of parties, or of the matters in suit, (2) where a material document had been rejected for not having a proper stamp, and (3) if there had been an erroneous valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. Their Lordships proceeded to observe (p. 170*) :

"In all those cases the suit fails by reason of some point of form, but their Lordships are aware of no case in which, upon an issue joined, and the party having failed to produce the evidence which he was bound to produce in support of that issue, liberty has been given to him to bring a second suit . . ."

*Page of 13 M. I. A.—[Ed.]

Although the suit with which their Lordships were dealing was of the year 1856, their decision was pronounced in 1869. In the interval the Civil P. C. of 1859 was passed, and s. 97 of that Code empowered the Court to allow the withdrawal of a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit for the same matter, if the plaintiff at any time before final judgment satisfied the Court that there were "sufficient grounds" for permitting him to withdraw. The section contained no words corresponding to those in cl. (a) of O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-r. (2) of the present Code, and Courts began to make very free use of the power given to them, regardless of the nature of the grounds. In Joy Kishen Mookerjee v. Raj Kishen Mookerjee (12) it was held that permission under s. 97 could be granted where the plaintiff stated that it would be out of his power to adduce evidence existing in certain records, within the period fixed by the Court for hearing the case. The suit was allowed to be withdrawn by the Appellate Court on a similar ground in Khaton Koonwar v. Baboo Hurdoot Narain Singh (13), Phear, J., observed (p. 163) :

".....instead of passing a final decree against him (plaintiff) now on the ground of there being no evidence to support his case, it is right in the interest of justice to allow him to withdraw his suit with permission to bring a fresh suit to enforce his claim against the defendants."

This case was decided in 1873 and the decision was clearly opposed to the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (11), but s. 97 of the Code was regarded as not recognizing that principle. But next year in Muddun Ram Doss v. Israil Ali (14) under similar circumstances Kemp, J. followed Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (11) and held that the plaintiff could not be permitted to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit, after issues had been joined, and he had failed to produce evidence to support his claim. In view of this conflict of decisions, the words as to the suit failing by reason of some formal defect were first added in the corresponding s. 373, Civil P. C., of 1877 and the same wording was retained in the Code of 1882. In Mahipati v. Nathu (15), Scott, C. J. thought that this change was introduced to abrogate the view taken by Kemp, J. of the Bengal High Court in Muddun Ram Doss v. Israil

Ali (14) just cited. He observed (p. 726*): "The words of the Code of 1882 are different from the words construed in that case by Kemp, J., for the Court is authorized to permit withdrawal not only where the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect but also where there are sufficient grounds for permitting the plaintiff to withdraw."

With great deference we think that this view misinterprets the purpose of the addition of cl. (a). If sufficiency was to be the only test of the grounds on which the withdrawal of a suit could be permitted, then the words in cl. (a) would be superfluous. It is a well-recognized canon of construction that a statute ought to be so construed that if it can be prevented, no clause, section or word shall be "superfluous, void or insignificant": The Queen v. Bishop of Oxford (16). The obvious object of the addition was to give effect to the ruling of the Privy Council and not to override it as the earlier rulings referred to above though s. 97 of the Code of 1859 did. Although the expression "sufficient grounds" necessarily included the ground that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, the latter was specifically mentioned in cl. (a) by way of an illustration. The fact that it is mentioned in a separate clause by itself does not indicate that it absolutely restricts the following clause, but it provides an illustration of the grounds to be considered sufficient in a general way. The "grounds" though not ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a) must at least be analogous to it. In the Code of 1903, the only change made in the wording of cl. (b) was the addition of "other" before the words "sufficient grounds". In Burathgunta Pentadee v. K. P. Rajamma (17), the addition of the word "other" was held to suggest that the "sufficient grounds" must be ejusdem generis with the "formal defects" under cl. (a). This view was accepted by Beasley, J. in Naimathulla v. Abdul Razack (18). With respect, we do not think the word "other" suggests anything of the kind. It simply means "other than" the ground mentioned in cl. (a). By way of analogy, it may be pointed out that in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (19), their Lordships of the Privy Council interpreted the words "any other sufficient reason" appearing in O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil P. C., 1903, as meaning "a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously," and that interpretation is binding upon us. In our opinion, there is a distinct difference between the Latin phrase ejusdem generis and the words "at least analogous," the former being more restrictive than the latter. On the principle of ejusdem generis the meaning of a general word is wholly restricted to the same genus to which the preceding word or words belong. The expression means "of the same kind," whereas "analogous," according to Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary means "bearing some correspondence with or resemblance to; similar in certain circumstances, or relations."

When this distinction is borne in mind it is easy to reconcile the seemingly conflicting decisions of our High Court. In Bai Kashibai v. Shidapa Annapa (20) the question of interpretation did not arise, since it was held on merits that failure to produce documents was not a sufficient ground for the withdrawal of the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit. In Narandas Raghunathdas v. Shantilal Bholabhai (21) Marten, J. made certain obiter dicta admittedly not required for the disposal of that case, expressing his dissent from the ruling in Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (7) which had held that cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (2) must be read together and that "other sufficient grounds" in cl. (b) must be ejusdem generis with "some formal defect" in cl. (a). He did not however mean to lay down any definite ruling, but casually observed (p. 385*):

"I am very reluctant, speaking for myself, to fetter what appears to me to be the plain words of the Act, and although it may be that one has to read sub-ss. (a) and (b) together I am as at present advised by no means satisfied that the ejusdem generis rule applies."

In other words, though in his opinion the ejusdem generis rule does not apply, cls. (a) and (b) have to be read together, that is to say, cl. (a) is illustrative of the "grounds" mentioned in cl. (b). In Lala Punjushet v. Motiram Budhu (22) although Macleod, C. J. says that he agrees with the construction put upon O. XXIII, r. 1 (20) 37 B 682; 21 Ind. Cas. 23; 15 Bom. L R 823.

by the decision in Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (7) he does not go so far as to say that the doctrine of ejusdem generis should be applied. Following Chhajju Ram v. Neki (19), he held that the sufficient ground mentioned in cl. (b) should be "analogous to a formal defect." In the more recent case in Bai Mahakore v. Bhikhabhai Sankalchand (23) the learned Chief Justice has fully discussed both these cases, and has expressed his agreement with the view taken by Marten, J. in Narandas Raghunathdas v. Shantilal Bholabhai (21). As regards the application of the ejusdem generis rule, he says (p. 117*):

"To my mind the language of the rule is quite plain, and there is no scope for the introduction of the ejusdem generis rule. The Court must be satisfied either that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the order asked for. If the 'sufficient grounds' within cl. (b) are to be analogous to the grounds specified in cl. (a), it would seem that cl. (b) must be confined to cases in which the Court thinks that the suit must fail, and on that reading cl. (a) would deal with suits which must fail for some formal defect, and cl. (b) with suits which must fail for some defect which is not formal but is of a similar nature. It seems to me that to read the clause in that way is to ignore the plain language in which it is expressed. I have no doubt whatever that cl. (b) is not limited to cases in which the Court thinks that the suit must necessarily fail."

The learned Chief Justice however has added that "the two clauses must be read together" and one has in cl. (a) an illustration of the sort or reason which the Legislature thought would be sufficient, and in that way cl. (a) may, to some extent, limit the generality of the words in cl. (b). With great respect we concur in this view, which is exactly what we mean by saying that cl. (a) is illustrative of the "grounds" referred to in cl. (b), and although the "grounds" need not be ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a), they must be "at least analogous" to it. The ground in cl. (a) requires that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect; whereas the grounds contemplated in cl. (b) need not necessarily be fatal to the suit, but must be analogous to a formal defect. To determine what grounds are analogous to formal defects, it is necessary to know what defects are to be deemed "formal." The instances of defects "of form" cited by the Privy Council in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (11) include misjoinder of parties or of the matters in suit, rejection of a material document for not having a proper stamp and the erroneous valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. This shows that the expression "formal defect" must be given a wide and liberal meaning, and must be deemed to connote every kind of defect which does not affect the merits of the case, whether that defect be fatal to the suit or not.

Applying this test to the facts of the present case, it is evident that the ground on which the opponents are allowed to withdraw the suit, is a defect of substance, as distinguished from a defect of form. They prayed for an injunction on the basis of their being the owners of the site which they claimed to be an accretion to their land as an alluvion. They adduced all their evidence and failed to prove that the site was an alluvion. Their suit was dismissed. Then they wanted in appeal to be permitted to withdraw the suit in order to file another suit claiming title to the said site on the ground of their adverse possession for over twelve years. There was no defect of form in the suit, but a defect of substance, arising out of their inability to prove the title on which they had based their claim. They joined issues with the petitioners on that basis, and allowed the suit to be fully tried to the end. It was only when they found that the trial Court did not uphold their title as claimed by them that they sought to withdraw the suit in order to start the litigation afresh and ask for the same relief on a different basis. In allowing the suit to be withdrawn on this ground, the Assistant Judge acted without jurisdiction, and his order can be corrected in revision under s. 115, Civil P. O., as was done in Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman (24). It is urged that the Assistant Judge, in the exercise of his discretion, has held the ground alleged by the plaintiffs for withdrawing the suit to be sufficient, and his discretion cannot be interfered with in revision. It was so held in Ishar Das v. Aya Ram (25) but in the present case there being no such ground as is contemplated by cl. (b) of sub-r. (2), the question whether it was sufficient did not arise, and in considering that question and holding the ground to be sufficient, the learned Assistant Judge exercised a jurisdiction which did not vest in him under the sub-rule. His order must therefore be set aside and the appeal heard and disposed of on its merits, as if the suit has not been withdrawn. The Rule is made absolute. The order allowing the plaintiffs to withdraw the suit is reversed and their application for permission to withdraw the suit is rejected. The appeal is remanded for being heard and disposed of according to law. The opponents shall pay the petitioners' costs and bear their own.

MOHAMMAD YOONUS (PETITIONER)

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Muhammadian Law—Will—Formalities necessary—Letter and telegram giving instructions to solicitors for cancelling certain provision in will held could be admitted to probate—Cutchi Memon—Will—Law applicable.

No writing is required under Muhammadian Law to make a will valid and no particular form even of verbal declaration is necessary as long as the intention of the testator is sufficiently ascertained. Where, therefore, the testator having decided to make certain alteration in the will and after receiving the draft codicil, instructed his solicitors to amend it by inserting a provision cancelling the provision he had made in the will with regard to the school fees of his grandchildren, by a telegram and a letter, the letter and the telegram containing instructions from part of will and can be admitted to probate. 49 Ind. Cas. 637 (1) and Mazhar Hussain v. Bodha Bibi (3), relied on.

The provisions of the Muhammadian Law with regard to wills apply to a Cutchi Memon. 49 Ind. Cas. 637 (1), relied on.

Mr. P. K. Janakirama, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. A. Rangachari, V. Subramaniam, D. Narsaraju and V. Satyanarayana, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—Hajee Sir Ismail Sait, a member of the Cutchi Memon community and a resident of Bangalore, died on April 24, 1934 in the Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Arogyavaram, Chittoor District. He was survived by a widow, five sons (the appellant and respondents Nos. 1 to 4) and a daughter (respondent No. 5). He had sixteen grandchildren, who are respondents Nos. 6 to 21. He left a will dated March 19, 1934, and the present appeal arises out of an application which was made by the executor for the grant of probate. By his will the testator provided for the education of his grandsons. For some of them he made special provisions with regard to their education and maintenance. While he was in the Sanatorium he decided to fix the allowance which his sons and daughter were to receive under his will and he directed his solicitors, Messrs. Moresby and Thomas, Madras to draw up a codicil to give effect to his intentions in this respect. The instructions to draft the codicil were embodied in a letter dated April 5, 1934 and signed on the testator's behalf by respondent No. 1. Messrs. Moresby and Thomas prepared a draft and sent it to him on April 6. Two of the testator's grandchildren had been at school at Aligarh. One died while at school and the other was consequently withdrawn from the school. On April 13, 1934 the testator directed respondent No. 1 and his agent, D. L. Narasappa to write to Messrs. Moresby and Thomas in these terms:

"I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the sixth instant with the draft codicil. I am grieved to inform you that since the receipt of this codicil my grandson, Abdul Sammad, suddenly died at Aligarh University. I have withdrawn my other grandson from school and have decided to cancel the allowances provided for school fees. I have therefore wired you as under: 'Your letter, sixth; since my grandson Abdul Sammad died have therefore decided omit also school fees—Don't delay—Ismail,' which I beg to confirm."

Respondent No. 1 who applied for probate of the will also asked that the telegram referred to in this letter and the letter should be read as parts of the will and admitted to probate. The learned Judge who heard the application, (Wadsworth, J.) granted probate of the will, refused to admit to probate the telegram and the letter. The appeal concerns the question whether this decision is right. The refusal of the learned Judge to admit these documents to probate was based on the opinion which he formed that they were only intended to provide material for the preparation of a draft codicil which the testator was to settle later.

Although according to the oral evidence the testator was in clear mind until two days before he died, he was undoubtedly seriously ill when he instructed respondent No. 1 and his agent to write to Messrs. Moresby and Thomas on April 13, 1934, and from the documentary evidence it is quite evident that soon afterwards he became too ill to attend to his affairs. On April 14, Messrs. Moresby and Thomas wrote to him acknowledging receipt of his telegram instructing them to omit from the will the provisions made for school fees but asked for further instructions in order to clear up a doubt which they felt with regard to the extent of the instructions. By cl. 14 (a) of the will the testator provided for the maintenance and education of the five sons of respondent No. 2, including provision for the pursuit of studies in England or America. In cl. (b) he made a similar provision for the education of any sons who might subsequently be born to the second respondent and in cl. (f) he made provision for the education and maintenance of Sulaiman, the son of the appellant. Sulaiman was then reading for the bar in England. In their letter asking for further instructions Messrs. Moresby and Thomas referred to the fact that Sulaiman was in England and observed that probably the testator did not wish to make any alteration in the clause relating to him but they would be glad to know by return whether he wished them to strike out from the will cls. 14 (a) and 14 (b). In addition to writing this letter Messrs. Moresby and Thomas sent him a telegram asking for instructions. The telegram and the letter were not replied to and it is obvious that this was because the testator was too ill to give instructions. On April 12, Messrs. Moresby and Thomas submitted a bill of costs to the testator and on April 21, the first respondent wrote to them stating that his father was not well enough to go through their letter in consequence of which it had not been placed before him.

The testator being a Outchi Memon the provisions of the Muhammadan Law with regard to wills apply. That a Outchi Memon is governed by the Muhammadan Law in this respect was held in Sarabai Amibai v. Mahomed Cassum Haji Jan Mahomed (1), and the contesting respondents have not disputed the correctness of the decision. It is also accepted, as it must be, having been accepted by the Judicial Committee, that by the Muhammadan Law no writing is required to make a will valid and no particular form even of verbal declaration is necessary as long as the intention of the testator is sufficiently ascertained: see Mahomed Altaf Ali Khan v. Ahmad Buksh (2). The appellant says that the telegram and the letter which he asks to be admitted to probate embody a definite decision by the testator that the provisions which he had made in his will with regard to school fees should be cancelled. If that is the position there can be no doubt that the telegram and the letter should be admitted to probate. The contesting respondents however say that the learned Judge was correct in treating the telegram and the letter as being material for the preparation of a draft and that the testator left open the definite position until the draft had been submitted to him. The case in Sarabai Amibai v. Mahomed Cassum Haji Jan Mahomed (1), has direct bearing on this appeal. In that case a Outchi Memon wrote to his brother-in-law Bhai Abdullahhai, as follows: "In the will which you will get made to-morrow and give me, be kind not to forget (to add) my 'Mukhtayari' so long as I am alive and after me my wife's 'Mukhtayari.' Whatever costs may be incurred I will pay you. Written by your servant, Mahomed Haasam Haji."

On the other side of this document were the words "Bhai Abdullahhai", the name of the brother-in-law. "Mukhtayari" means absolute ownership or full power. The document was unattested. The intention was that the brother-in-law should instruct a solicitor to draw up a will embodying the intentions of the deceased. It was held that the document was in the nature of instructions to his legal adviser with regard to the disposition of his property and that under Muhammadan Law the document operated as a valid will which might be admitted to probate. The deceased died before the will was drawn up. Marten, J. cited with approval the following statement from Mayne's Hindu Law, Edition 8, p. 588:

"So, a paper drawn up in accordance with the instructions of the testator, and assented to by him, will be a good will, though not signed. And if a paper contains the testamentary wishes of the deceased, its form is immaterial."

He also referred to the case in Mahomed Altaf Ali Khan v. Ahmed Buksh (2). In that case the Privy Council held that a document which was a power-of-attorney containing an expression of what was to be done with property after the death of the donor of the power operated as a will. In Mazar Husen v. Bodha Bibi (3), the Privy Council held that a letter operated as a will. The letter contained this statement:

"You should not have the property given to (my) grandmother and paternal uncle's wife, but you should give the whole to my three sisters, who are my paternal uncle's daughters. You should see that they all get an equal share, and in the same manner as stated by me in para. 3."

(3) 21 A 91; 25 I A 219; 7 Sar. 304 (P O).

The letter was addressed to the writer's agent. Now what is the position here? The testator having decided to make certain alterations in his will and after having received the draft codicil instructed his solicitors to amend it by inserting a provision cancelling the directions he had given in his will with regard to the school fees of his grandchildren. He wrote; "I..... have decided to cancel the allowances provided for school fees" and sent a telegram also couched in language equally clear. The testator had made up his mind what was to be done and he gave definite instruction to this end. The fact that the solicitors were not certain whether the instructions affected the grandson who was studying for the Bar in England did not alter the nature of the instructions. In these circumstances the letter and the telegram cannot be regarded as being instructions to the solicitors to submit a draft the provisions of which were to be deemed to be merely tentative. The learned Judge formed the opinion that the letter and the telegram were instructions merely for the preparation of a draft codicil which the testator would settle after perusal, but there is no evidence to be found in support of this. I can see no difference in principle between this case and the case in Sarabai Amibai v. Mahomed Cassum Haji Jan Mahomed (1), and I accept the judgment in that case as correctly deciding the question under discussion.

For the reasons indicated I consider that the appeal should be allowed and the telegram and the letter admitted to probate. It is not necessary to inquire what will be the effect of admitting these documents to probate. That question will be decided if and when it arises in proper proceedings. The costs of all the parties who have appeared before us will be paid out of the estate, but not on the Advocate and client basis.

Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgage of entire property to K—Subsequent mortgage of one-fourth share by co-sharer to plaintiff—K obtaining decree purchasing property in execution and selling it to B—Plaintiff no party to suit—Suit by plaintiff decreed and one-fourth property purchased by him—Plaintiff held entitled to redeem entire property—Lis pendens—Purchaser of equity of redemption pending mortgage suit purchasing subsequently rights of mortgagee decree-holder—As between such person and one no party to suit his right of redemption is not affected by lis pendens—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 22—Refusal of Appellate Court to extend time for filing cross-objection—Interference in second appeal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Cross-objection not filed within time—Wrong impression of legal adviser, if ground for extension.

A mortgage of an entire taluk was executed in favour of K. Subsequently the plaintiff company obtained a mortgage of one-fourth share of the taluk from A who was a co-sharer in the mortgaged property. K instituted a suit on mortgage and got a decree. The plaintiff, was not made a party to that suit. K in execution of the mortgage decree put up the entire taluk to sale and purchased it himself and then sold it together with all his subsisting rights under the mortgage decree to B. The plaintiff company, in the meantime, instituted a suit on their mortgage bond against A and having got a decree purchased a fourth share of the mortgaged property and instituted a suit for redemption, against K and B.

Held, that the plaintiff's right of redemption extended to the entire mortgage of K and was not confined to so much of it as related to one-fourth share of the property. In allowing the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage he could not be directed to deposit the amount due under the decree passed in favour of K as he was not a party to the mortgage suit and hence was not bound by the decree.

As between the mortgagee on the one hand and the purchaser of the equity of redemption pending the mortgage suit, on the other, the right of redemption must be held to be subject to the rights of the mortgagee decree-holder. But where such purchaser steps into the shoes of the mortgagee decree-holder, by purchasing the rights of the mortgagee as between him and the puisne mortgagees who were no party to the mortgage suit his right to the equity of redemption must be deemed to have stood intact and it is not affected in any way by the doctrine of lis pendens.

It is entirely discretionary with the Court of Appeal below to extend the time for filing cross-objections and in refusing to extend time it cannot be said that it committed an error of law which could be interfered with in second appeal.

There is no provision in the Lim. Act which would entitle a party who has failed to file a cross-objection within period of limitation to extension of time simply because his legal adviser was under a wrong impression.

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Khulna, dated September 14, 1936.

Messrs. Amarendra Nath Bose, Hiralal Chakravarti and Rabindra Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Atul Chandra Gupta, Jatindra Nath Sanyal and Joy Gopal Ghose, for the Respondents.

Mr. Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Deputy Registrar.

B. K. Mukherjee, J. — This appeal is on behalf of defendant No. 2 in a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The material facts which are not disputed may be shortly stated as follows: There is putni taluk known as banka taluk in the District of Khulna which belonged to one Harish Chandra Roy. After the death of Harish, his executor who was the father of defendant No. 4 mortgaged the entire taluk to the Khulna Loan Co., who are defendant No. 1 in the present suit, on December 22, 1922. On March 31, 1927 the plaintiff company obtained a mortgage of one-fourth share of the taluk from defendant No. 3 who was a co-sharer in the mortgaged party. Defendant No. 1 instituted a suit on their mortgage bond in 1921 and got a decree on August 19, 1930. The plaintiff, who as stated above, was a puisne mortgagee of a fourth share of the property was not made a party to that suit. Defendant No. 1 in execution of the mortgage decree put up the entire taluk to sale and purchased it themselves on August 25, 1933. They took symbolical possession of the property on March 13, 1934. On December 18, 1934, they sold the property together with all their subsisting rights under the mortgage decree to defendant No. 2 who is the appellant before us. The plaintiff company, in the meantime, instituted a suit on their mortgage bond against defendant No. 3 and having got a decree purchased a fourth share of the mortgaged property on January 26, 1934. They now instituted the present suit for redemption, against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the allegation that as they were not made parties to the mortgage suit for defendant No. 1, the mortgage decree and sale were not binding on them and their rights of redemption remained intact. Defendant No. 2 contested the suit. He denied inter alia the rights of the plaintiffs to redeem and contended firstly that the plaintiff company could not in any event exercise their right of redemption beyond a fourth share of the property which was comprised in their mortgage.

The second contention was that as he himself was a previous purchaser of 1/6th share of the mortgaged property from defendant No. 5 he acquired a prior right to redeem the mortgage of defendant No. 1 in respect of the entire property as also the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs. The Munsif who tried the suit overruled the first contention of the appellant and came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' right of redemption extended to the entire mortgage of defendant No. 1 and was not confined to so much of it as related to 1/6th share of the property. He held, however, that, as defendant No. 2 had purchased a sixth share of the property from defendant No. 5 previous to the mortgage sale by defendant No. 1 by the subsequent purchase of the mortgagee's rights of defendant No. 1, he got an absolute interest in the 1/6th share which could not be redeemed by the plaintiffs. The result was that the plaintiffs' suit for redemption was allowed to the extent of 5/6th share of the mortgaged property. Against this decision, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal reiterating their claim to redeem the entire mortgage security and defendant No. 2 filed cross-objections in which he took amongst others the grounds that the plaintiffs should not be allowed to redeem more than a fourth share of the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the cross-objection of defendant No. 2 as being filed out of time and it dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal also on its merits. Defendant No. 2 has preferred this second appeal which is directed against the dismissal of his cross-objections and the plaintiffs have preferred a cross-objection challenging that part of the Appellate Court's decree which did not allow their claim to redemption of the whole mortgage.

So far as the appeal of defendant No. 2 is concerned, Mr. Bose who appears for the appellant argues that the lower Appellate Court ought to have extended the period of time for filing cross-objections under O. XLI, r. 22, Civil P. O., and it had refused to do so under a pure misconception of law. The notice of the appeal filed by the plaintiffs was served on defendant No. 2 on November 11, 1935 and he entered appearance on December 3, 1935, but the cross-objections were not filed till August 15, 1936 and the Court of Appeal below did not think that there was any sufficient reason for not filing them within thirty days from the date when the notice of the appeal was served upon him. In my opinion, it was entirely discretionary with the Court of Appeal below to extend the time for filing cross-objections and in refusing to extend time it cannot be said that it committed an error of law which could be interfered within second appeal. Mr. Bose's argument is that as the mortgage sale held at the instance of defendant No. 1 was set aside in a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. O., commenced by defendants Nos. 6 and 7, by the Appellate Court, in July 1935 and the order was reversed in part by this Court, only on July 22, 1936, his client, defendant No. 2, could not possibly file his cross-objections till the decision of the High Court was made. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled this contention by saying that as the plaintiffs were left out from the mortgage suit of defendant No. 1, their right to redeem the mortgage stood intact and the fact that there was a mortgage sale made no difference. Mr. Basu contends that this view is wrong and it is only when there is a mortgage sale, that he can raise the question of partial redemption. Mr. Gupta who appears for the respondent on the other hand takes up the position that as the plaintiffs were left out and were not made parties to the mortgage suit, neither the decree nor the sale was in any way binding on them and as they had a right to redeem the entire mortgage of defendant No. 2 the sale did not in any way affect their rights.

We have been referred to a number of decisions on this point by the learned Advocates on both sides; but I do not think it at all necessary for us to enter into the controversy and discuss the propriety of the views respectively put forward by the learned Advocates. The mortgage sale was set aside, as stated above, in July 1935, when the suit was pending in the trial Court. The appeal was filed in regular course by the plaintiff and defendant No. 2, if he wanted to challenge the judgment of the trial Judge, was bound to prefer an appeal himself or else to file a cross-objection within time laid down by law. Nothing had happened which stayed his hands in any way or prevented him from filing an appeal or cross-objection. There is no provision in the Lim. Act which would entitle him to extension of time simply because his legal adviser was under the impression that if the order setting aside the sale was not reversed, it could not be worth while proceeding any further. In the usual course of things he should have filed his appeal or cross-objections within proper time and if he thought that the sale set aside proceeding would in any way affect the decision, he could have prayed for staying the hearing of the appeal till the final decision in the other matter was given. I do not consider that there is any reason whatsoever for not filing the cross-objections within the specified period and I hold, that the cross-objections were rightly disallowed by the lower Appellate Court. I cannot therefore entertain the ground urged by Mr. Bose that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiffs' right of redemption should have been limited to the $\frac{1}{6}$ th share which they purchased in execution of their mortgage decree against defendant No. 3.

The next point for our decision is, as to whether the Court below was right in holding that the plaintiffs could not redeem the $\frac{1}{6}$ th share of Abani, defendant No. 5 which was purchased by defendant No. 2. This share was undoubtedly purchased by defendant No. 2 after the preliminary decree was obtained by defendant No. 1 in his mortgage suit but before the mortgage sale was actually held. Mr. Gupta's contention is that the equity of redemption to the extent of $\frac{1}{6}$ th share must have been destroyed by the mortgage sale under the doctrine of lis pendens and consequently defendant No. 2 had no interest in the equity of redemption which would be deemed to have survived the sale. I do not think that this contention is sound. The effect of the application of the doctrine of lis pendens would be that the purchase by defendant No. 2 would be subject to the rights of the mortgagee as declared in the mortgage suit. As between the mortgagee on the one hand and defendant No. 2, who purchased the equity of redemption pending the mortgage suit, on the other, the right of redemption must be held to be subject to the rights of the mortgagee-decree-holder. But as defendant No. 2 has now stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee-decree-holder, as between him and the plaintiffs who were no party to the mortgage suit his right to the equity of redemption must be deemed to have stood intact and it is not affected in any way by the doctrine of lis pendens. In my opinion, the Court below was right in holding that the plaintiffs shall be allowed to redeem the mortgage of de-

The last question is, on what terms the redemption should be allowed. The Court below allowed the plaintiffs to redeem 5/6ths share of the mortgage on depositing in Court 5/6ths share of the amount due under the decree passed in favour of defendant No. 1 within one month from the date. This, in my opinion, is not proper. The plaintiffs were not parties to the mortgage suit and consequently are in no way bound by the decree. The mortgagee as against him is entitled to the mortgage money with interest at the bond rate up to the date of the expiry of the period of grace. Mr. Gupta does not dispute this proposition but what he says is that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim relief under the Money-lenders Act as there was stipulation in the mortgage bond for payment of compound interest with quarterly rests. I think that in the circumstances of this case, defendant No. 2 should be allowed simple interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond up to March 13, 1934, when defendant No. 2 is admitted to have taken possession of the mortgaged properties and on depositing 5/6ths of the total amount thus determined within two months from the date, defendant No. 2 shall re-transfer 5/6ths share of the putni taluk to the plaintiffs at the cost of the latter and the plaintiffs will be put in possession of the same. As this is a matter consequent on the decree for redemption which is made by this Court, I do not think that the dismissal of the cross-objections filed by defendant No. 2 where this point was raised, stands in the way of making such an order in the exercise of our powers under the Civil P.O. Subject to the variation mentioned above, the decree of the Court below stands. Parties will bear their own costs.

Negotiable instruments—Hundi—Namjogi—A obtaining hundi drawn by B and payable to C—A sending it to C by post—Hundi intercepted by thief and payee's name removed and another substituted—Amount paid to such person—Liability of drawer.

Where a Namjogi hundi is obtained from a drawer all that the drawer in such a case guarantees, is that the drawee will honour and pay the hundi when it is presented to him on maturity, and if the drawee fails to do so, then the drawer undertakes to repay the amount thereof, provided the said hundi is returned in an undischarged state to the drawer. [p. 421, col. 2.]

A obtained a Namjogi hundi drawn by B and made payable to C whose name was mentioned in the hundi as payee. On receiving the hundi A sent it by ordinary post to C. The hundi, however, was intercepted by a thief who removed the name of C, the payee, thus making it read payable to third person by making an endorsement making it payable to one G. The hundi was thus delivered to G who presented it to the drawee who paid the amount to G. A instituted a suit against the drawer and the drawee on the basis of hundi.

Held, that the drawee not being in a position to return the hundi in an undischarged state would certainly be liable in damages for wrongful conversion of the hundi, the measure of damages being the amount of the hundi. [p. 421, cols. 1 & 2.]

Held, also that the drawer was in no way responsible for the hundi falling into the hands of the thief, or the alteration which resulted in the loss of money to A or in the payment by the drawee of the hundi; hence the proximate cause could not be laid at the door of drawer and he was, therefore, not liable. F. A. from the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge at Surat, in R. O. S. No. 239 of 1935.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and H. M. Choksi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee, M. R. Vidyarthi and R. A. Desai, for the Respondent.

Indarnarayan, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat dismissing the plaintiffs' claim against defendant No. 1, the drawers of the hundi in question. The facts are summarized by the trial Judge and are shortly as follows: The plaintiffs had a current deposit account with defendant No. 1, who also did business at Surat. The plaintiffs wanted to remit a sum of Rs. 6,000 to the Bombay firm of Ishverlal Amthalal, and in order to enable them to do so they applied to defendant No. 1 for a Namjogi hundi drawn by defendant No. 1 and made payable to Ishverlal Amthalal, whose name was mentioned in the hundi as the payee. A sum of Rs. 1-14-0 was taken for the hundi man charges and debited to the plaintiffs' account and the sum of Rs. 6,000 was similarly debited. The plaintiffs on receiving the hundi sent it by ordinary post to Ishverlal Amthalal on April 22, 1935. But the cover containing this hundi appears to have gone astray in post and the hundi was intercepted by some thief who cleverly removed the name of Ishverlal Amthalal, the payee, thereon, thus making the hundi read "Payable to Shah..." and on the reverse he made an endorsement making the hundi amount payable to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co. This endorsement however bears no signature whatever. The hundi appears to have been delivered to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., who presented it to the drawees, the firm of Raichand Motichand at Bombay, who paid the amount of the hundi to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co. As there was no reference about this hundi in Ishverlal Amthalal's letter to the plaintiffs sent two or three days later, the plaintiffs were put on their inquiry. In reply to their letter, they were informed by Ishverlal Amthalal that the hundi had never reached him, but that inquiries showed that the amount thereof had been paid as a result of the forged endorsement thereon to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co. A few days later the plaintiffs served notices of demand on both defendant No. 1, the drawers, and defendant No. 2, the drawees. Both of them repudiated liability, defendant No. 1 on the ground that the hundi given by them at the request of the plaintiffs had in fact been cashed by the drawees thereof and hence they were in no way liable as to what happened to the hundi itself after it had left their possession and had been handed over to the plaintiffs. The drawees also denied negligence in their reply. Later this suit was filed. Defendant No. 1 appeared to defend on the ground mentioned in his written statement, but defendant No. 2 failed to appear at the hearing.

There was an ex parte decree against defendant No. 2, the drawees, and rightly so because it is obvious on an examination of the hundi khoka as it now stands with the name of the payee erased that it was distinctly tampered with and a waving line substituted. The result of the alteration is one which a person with reasonable care could have easily detected and the drawees were undoubtedly guilty of negligence in paying the hundi amount to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co. It however transpires that Raichand Motichand & Co., defendant No. 2, have subsequently become insolvents. The plaintiffs therefore turn to the drawers, defendant No. 1, for the payment of the amount. In his argument the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has tried to steer clear of the suit having been based on the hundi itself. He now argues that he paid Rs. 6,000 in consideration for the said hundi, amount of which has not been paid according to the agreed terms to Ishverlal Amthalal, and that therefore he is entitled to a return or refund of the sum of Rs. 6,000 from defendant No. 1 because they have failed to carry out their part of the contract, viz., payment to Ishverlal Amthalal of Rs. 6,000 by the drawees. One has however to look at the plaint in the suit to see that this contention cannot hold water. In para. 9 of the plaint it is stated :

"In the above circumstances, the present suit has been filed to recover Rs. 6,000 of our principal amount and Rs. 102 of interest at the rate of 12 annas per month per hundred according to the custom of hundi from April 23, 1935, till the date of the suit and Rs. 1-14-0 of the discount charges (hundiaman), altogether the suit has been filed to recover Rs. 6,103-14-0."

It is difficult to reconcile the argument that the suit is on a basis entirely different from that of the hundi as is now sought to be made out with the language of this paragraph in the plaint. In dealing with the basis of his claim the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs in his opening address relied on portions of para. 5 of the plaint wherein it is stated :

"Not only that but defendant No. 1 has been culpably negligent in not discharging his own duty according to law by not giving information to defendant No. 2 that the said hundi (of ours) was a Namjogi hundi, etc., and the firm of Ishverlal Amthalal not having received the amount of the said hundi from defendant No. 2, defendant No. 1 is also liable to pay to us Rs. 6,000 of the hundi and Rs. 1-14-0 being the discount charges thereof."

One has further to ask the question : If the suit is not on the hundi itself, how are defendant No. 2, the drawees, liable and why were they joined in the suit as a co-defendant? The plaintiffs' learned Counsel contends that his suit is based on a cause of action of failure of consideration. Defendant No. 2 could certainly not be sued on such a cause of action, and as it is admitted that the identical hundi was honoured and paid to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., I fail to see how there could be said to have been a failure of consideration. Fortuitous circumstances coming into existence after the hundi left defendant No. 1 resulting in Ishverlal Amthalal not getting the hundi payment from defendant No. 2 make no difference. I am therefore of opinion that the suit as originally framed in the plaint was designed to be one on the hundi itself. On the facts of this case (when the plaintiffs are not in possession of the hundi) the cause of action, to my mind, open to them is necessarily one in damages for wrongful conversion of the hundi, or for moneys had and received, if they had chosen to file a suit against Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., which for some mysterious reason they have failed to do. Defendant No. 2 the drawees, could only possibly be liable, if at all, to the plaintiffs on the basis of a cause of action for wrongful conversion of the hundi, or in damages and on no other account. Under the circumstances, I do not see how it is now open to the plaintiffs to argue that they are suing apart from the hundi, especially when the ground set out in the memorandum of appeal para. 6 states:

"Sections 36, 37 and 38, Negotiable Instruments Act have not been duly considered and applied to the facts of the case."

Another test which might be applied as to the nature of the suit sought to be made out in the plaint is the fact that one of the important exhibits relied upon by the plaintiffs and produced by them is a set of rules of the Bombay Shroff Association according to which this hundi, as mentioned on the face of it, was drawn. If the suit was not based on the hundi, I fail to see why the rules of the Bombay Shroff Association with reference to such hundis were produced and relied upon in this case. If the suit is based on the hundi itself, then a cause of action based on wrongful conversion would be one based on tort, and it has been held in cases of this kind that a suit based on a contractual relationship cannot be altered to a suit the basis of which is one in tort. However, I am prepared to consider this case on the basis that this is in effect a suit for damages for wrongful conversion inasmuch as the drawees, defendant No. 2, took possession of the hundi from Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., and have retained it. A suit on the hundi itself could not be maintained, as after it was lost to the payee Ishverlal Amthalal and to the true owners the plaintiffs, it was further paid by defendant No. 2, drawees, and discharged by Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., who presented it for payment. There can be no doubt on the undisputed facts in the case that the true owners of the hundi were the plaintiffs and that in the circumstances they would in law be entitled to claim back the return of the hundi (in an undischarged state) from defendant No. 2, i.e., in the condition in which it left the plaintiffs. Defendant No. 2 not being in a position now to return the hundi in an undischarged state

The question then before us is whether defendant No. 1 the drawers of the hundi, are liable to the plaintiffs for the claim in suit. Apart from the fact that the hundi was asked for from defendant No. 1 by the plaintiffs themselves, all that the drawer in such a case guarantees, to my mind, is that the drawee will honour and pay the hundi when it is presented to him on maturity, and if the drawee fails to do so, then the drawer undertakes to repay the amount thereof, provided the said hundi is returned in an undischarged state to the drawer. The plaintiffs in this case are obviously not in a position to return the hundi in an undischarged state to the drawers, defendant No. 1, and hence they could only fall back upon the plea that the hundi has not been paid by the drawees. The gravamen of the charge levelled against defendant No. 1 is that they failed to intimate to the drawees the fact that the hundi was a Namjogi hundi in favour of Ishverlal Amthalal. Hundis are specially saved from the general law under s. 1, Negotiable Instruments Act and are governed by the custom attaching to hundis. No attempt has been made to prove any custom as to the drawer's duty being to give any such information to the drawee as to the hundi being drawn in favour of a particular payee. The evidence on record is all one way against this contention, as in the plaintiff Sitaram Lallubhai's own statement he states:

"I have never received back money of the hundis from the drawer without returning the hundi to him. The uncashed hundi is to be returned to the drawer if the hundi money is to be had. If the hundi is lost, a duplicate would be asked or its money. There is no instance of the hundi having been lost and money received for such a hundi. I do not know of any instance like that of others."

In the defendant's munim's deposition he pleads ignorance of the rules of the Bombay Shroff Association relative to Namjogi hundis. The defendant in his evidence states:

"If the man who took the hundi brings it back we would pay the money not otherwise. If our agent has not accepted a lost hundi after the reply we would draw a duplicate hundi or refund the money."

In the absence of any such custom being proved—it was not even alleged in the plaint—and in the absence of any other evidence that there was any such duty on the drawer, I am unable to hold that the drawer in this case was guilty of any neglect of duty with reference to the hundi or as to the absence of any such intimation from him to the drawee. Now, it is admitted that the same hundi which found its way to Messrs. Greaves Cotton & Co., under the forged endorsement was presented to the drawees, and has in fact been paid by them. It is therefore to my mind certainly not a case of a dishonour of the hundi, or refusal to pay on the part of the drawees. It is however pointed out that it was not a payment to Ishverlal Amthalal. In the rules relied upon by the plaintiffs, there is r. 30, to which our attention has been drawn by the learned Counsel for the defendant which reads :

"It is safe to write on the hundi to be sent for acceptance in Bombay by the person sending the hundi to Bombay that the amount should be paid to a certain person at his address, so that if the hundi is lost or mislaid then by writing in such manner the acceptor will hesitate to pay the amount to any other person."

Now, it appears to me that the words appearing in this rule, viz., "by the person sending the hundi to Bombay," can only refer to the plaintiffs in this case and that hence the omission, if any, was on the part of the plaintiffs themselves. Several cases have been cited by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, but as admitted by him there is no decided case wherein the question of the liability of the drawer in such a case has been gone into or decided. The case nearest to the present one as regards facts is, I think, the one reported in Ganeshdas Ramnarayan v. Lachminarayan (1). There the plaintiff at Sholapur having bought a Shahjogi hundi drawn at Sholapur upon the defendants in Bombay, endorsed it to Ramrukh Ramkisson, and sent it by post to him for collection. In course of its transmission it was stolen, and the name of Ramrukh Ramkisson was expunged and another name, viz., that of Dwaradas Lalji, was substituted. On December 9, 1893, the hundi was presented for payment to the defendants in Bombay by a person giving his name as Dwarkadas Lalji, and the defendants paid it without enquiry as to the responsibility of position of the person to whom they paid it. The plaintiff sued the defendant for value of the hundi. It was held that the defendants—drawees—were guilty of conversion of the hundi and were liable to the plaintiff, the lawful owner thereof, in trover. It is noteworthy that in that case the drawers of the hundi were originally made party defendants to the suit, but that at the suggestion of the trial Court, on its being pointed out that there was no cause of action disclosed against the drawer the claim against the drawer was abandoned.

The case in Thorappa v. Umedmalji (2), does not help very much, except that there also the question was not of the liability of the drawer, but it does indicate that the cause of action in such a case would be one based on wrongful conversion. We have also been referred to the case in Jaggivandas Jamnadas v. Nagar Central Bank Ltd. (3), but that again was a case of a cheque, and there it was held that the drawee being discharged by payment in due course, under s. 85, Negotiable Instruments Act, the drawer was also discharged. But the case of a cheque, I am afraid, is on a different basis, and the law appertaining to cases of cheques could have no bearing on the issues in the present case, and it cannot be inferred that because the drawee in this case remained liable by reason of having paid to a wrong party under a forged endorsement that therefore the drawer defendant No. 1 also continued to be liable.

In Burchfield v. Moore (4), a bill of exchange was, without the privity of the acceptor, altered by inserting the words "payable at A" and afterwards endorsed to the plaintiff for value who took it bona fide and without knowledge of the alteration, it was held that that was a material alteration which discharged the acceptor. The plaintiff's remedy in such a case is confined to a right to recover the consideration for the bill as between himself and his immediate endorser; and a similar remedy may be resorted to between all prior parties until the party is reached through whose fraud or laches the alteration was made. I think the principle underlying that decision would apply to the facts of the present case, and no party to the instrument prior to the one who was responsible for the alteration or fraud could possibly be held liable. Defendant No. 1, the drawers, would, in any event, not be hence liable. In Sulleman Hussain v. New Oriental Bank Corporation Ltd. (5), Sir Charles Sargent, C. J. made a remark which might be of some help and guidance in this case which was as follows (p. 279*):

"By this course of reasoning the conclusion is arrived at that the bill was not dishonoured by the Bank's refusal to pay the plaintiff in Bombay, and therefore that the Bank, as drawers, are not liable."

Mr. Coyajee has referred us to the case in Ram Singh v. Gulab Rai-Mehr Chand (6), where it was held by Sir Shadi Lal, C. J. that the alteration in the hundi reducing the period of payment was a material alteration within the meaning of s. 87, Negotiable Instruments Act :

"Plaintiff having failed to prove that this was done with the consent of Ram Singh and Ohajju Ram, or in order to carry out the common intention of the original parties, the hundi was thereby rendered void as against them, and plaintiff could not be allowed to fall back upon the contract as it existed prior to the alteration."

The principle underlying that case may, I think, well be applied to the present one; and it is therefore not open to the plaintiffs to say that defendant No. 1 is yet liable after payment, of the hundi by defendant No. 2—after the forged endorsement—especially as defendants were in no way concerned or privy to the alteration in the hundi. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs in the course of his reply mentioned in support of his contention that defendant No. 1 continued to be liable that in case a hundi was burnt or otherwise destroyed, he had a right to get back the Rs. 6,000 from the drawer, or a duplicate of the hundi. This, to my mind, does not militate against the drawer's position in this case for the simple reason that in the hypothetical case taken by the learned Counsel it would be the undoubted right of the drawer before giving a duplicate (or "Painth" or "Petha" as it is called) first to ascertain definitely from the drawee that the original had not been acted upon, and presented or paid, and could not possibly be acted upon, by first satisfying himself as to the destruction of the document. The drawers in this case were in no way responsible for the hundi (sent by the plaintiffs by ordinary post) falling into the hands of the thief, or the alteration which resulted in the loss of money to the present plaintiffs, or in the payment by the second defendant of the hundi; hence the proximate cause cannot be laid at the door of defendant No. 1. He is in the position of a defendant here and even if this were considered to be a case of pari delicto the maxim positio potior est defendantis would apply.

Even if the suit were on a hundi, as is mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, and s. 37 were applicable, it would not help the plaintiffs' case. Section 37, Negotiable Instruments Act states that the maker of a promissory note or cheque, the drawer of a bill of exchange until acceptance, and the acceptor are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively liable thereon as principal debtors. The words "until acceptance" are important. In this case not only was the hundi drawn by defendant No. 1 accepted, but it in fact was paid by the drawees, defendant No. 2. In Norman v. Ricketts (7), a customer was asked for "the favour of a cheque within a week." The cheque was sent by the customer by post in consequence of this request. The cheque was stolen in transit, and it was paid by the bankers of the drawer to the thief. It was held that the debtor was in no way responsible, as the sending of the cheque was payment. In his short judgment the Master of the Rolls stated (p. 182*) :

"If a debtor had to pay his creditor money, as a general rule the debtor must come and pay his creditor. But if the creditor asked him to pay in a particular way, the debtor might do so."

In the present case plaintiffs asked defendant No. 1 to debit their account with Rs. 6,000 and to give them a Namjogi hundi for the amount on a Bombay firm. Defendant No. 1 did so according to plaintiffs' express instructions. No further duty hence lay on their shoulders, except the liability to repay if the hundi was returned dishonoured or unpaid. In his opening address the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs touched upon the point that the khoka of the hundi was in the possession of defendant No. 1. Though no further argument was developed on the point, I might mention that defendant No. 2 in sending the khoka of the hundi to defendant No. 1, the drawers, for the purpose of accounts were not dealing with the live hundi which had already on being discharged by Greaves Cotton & Co., lost its character of being a hundi known as such in Indian mercantile usage. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

BHADE, J.

Lala LADHA RAM—PETITIONER*versusOFFICIAL RECEIVER, JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT, KARACHI*AND OTHERS—CREDITORS—RESPONDENTS

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 38, 39, 40, 42—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to impose penalty on insolvent in shape of suspension from practice—Suspension is governed by High Court Rules—Order of Court cannot extend their scope—Application for discharge—Court must consider provisions in s. 42 together with Receiver's report—Agreement between parties—Procedure in s. 38 must be followed.

According to the rules of the Lahore High Court, the license of an insolvent legal practitioner is only suspended till his discharge—whether absolute or conditional. An Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to impose a penalty on the insolvent in the shape of suspension from practice. The suspension is the result of the rules framed by the High Court and the scope of the rules cannot be extended either by the agreement of the parties or by the order of the Insolvency Court.

When the application for discharge of an insolvent Advocate came up for hearing, he stated that he was prepared to deposit with the Official Receiver Rs. 20 per mensem till his creditors got eight annas in the rupee and that in default of any payment, he should be disallowed to practise as an Advocate. This was agreed to by the Official Receiver and the Counsel representing creditors and on the basis of this agreement the Court passed an order granting a conditional discharge and for six years, subject to the condition that the insolvent should deposit a sum of Rs. 20 with the Official Receiver every month. It was also ordered that in case of default he would be liable to suspension of practice as provided by the High Court Rules and Orders. The proved debts amounted only to Rs. 181-8-0 :

Held, that the Court was dealing not with an application under s. 38, Prov. Insol. Act, but with the insolvent's application for discharge and for that purpose the Court was bound to consider the matters laid down in s. 42, along with the report of the Receiver and then decide what order was appropriate in the circumstances of the case. The order passed was not in accordance with law and was not fair to the parties. The order of the Court purported to be based on the agreement between the parties but the procedure laid down for a "composition" or "scheme of arrangement" in s. 38, was not followed. The proper order to pass would have been to annul the adjudication and if the insolvent had then failed to carry out the terms of the compromise he would have been liable to be re-adjudged insolvent; vide ss. 39 and 40.

Lala Ladha Ram, in person.

Mr. S. C. Manchanda, for the Respondents.

Order.—The petitioner, Lala Ladha Ram, an Advocate, was declared insolvent on June 15, 1938. Nothing was apparently recovered from him to satisfy his debts, which as shown in the list attached to his petition amounted to Rs. 2,185. He applied for his discharge within the period of three years fixed by the Court. The Official Receiver reported that the insolvent had shown no assets except his wearing apparel, that the accounts filed by him were not reliable and that being a Barrister-at-law, he ought to be able to pay at least about Rs. 40 per mensem from his income. He recommended that the operation of discharge be suspended for a year and that during this period the petitioner should deposit with the Official Receiver any property acquired by him and submit an account of his income and expenditure every month. When the application for discharge came up for hearing, Lala Ladha Ram stated that he was prepared to deposit with the Official Receiver Rs. 20 per mensem till his creditors got eight annas in the rupee and that in default of any payment, he should be disallowed to practise as an Advocate. It may be mentioned in this connexion that, according to the rules of this Court, when a legal practitioner is adjudged insolvent, his license to practise is automatically suspended till his discharge, whether absolute or conditional; vide High Court Rules and Orders, Vol. V, Chap. VI-B, r. 11. The above statement of Lala Ladha Ram was agreed to by the Official Receiver and the Counsel representing creditors and on the basis of this agreement the Court passed an order, granting a conditional discharge and for six years, subject to the condition that Lala Ladha Ram should deposit a sum of Rs. 20 with the Official Receiver every month with effect from July 1, 1938. It was also ordered that in case of default Lala Ladha Ram shall be liable to suspension of practice as provided by the High Court Rules and Orders.

Lala Ladha Ram appealed to the District Judge from this order, but the appeal was dismissed. He has now filed a petition for revision of the order. The petitioner has raised two points which require consideration: (i) that the conditional order of discharge for six years was not justified when the debts proved before the Receiver amounted to Rs. 181-8-0 as shown in his report (ii) that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to order that the petitioner would be liable to be suspended from practice in default of payment of the monthly instalment of Rs. 20. After considering the facts on the record, I am of opinion that there is force in these contentions. The order of the learned Judge of the Insolvency Court purports to be based on the agreement between the parties but the procedure laid down for a "composition" or "scheme of arrangement" in s. 38, Prov. Insolvency Act, was not followed. If that procedure had been followed the proper order to pass would have been to annul the adjudication and if the insolvent had then failed to carry out the terms of the compromise he would have been liable to be re-adjudged insolvent: vide ss. 39 and 40.

As a matter of fact, the Court was dealing not with an application under s. 38, but with the insolvent's application for discharge and for that purpose the Court was bound to consider the matters laid down in s. 42, along with the report of the Receiver and then decide what order was appropriate in the circumstances of the case. The Court however did not apply its mind at all to the report of the Receiver or the matters referred to in s. 42, Prov. Ins. Act. As a result, the Court has passed an order which is not in accordance with law and which is not fair to the parties. The petitioner has urged that the proved debts amounted to Rs. 181-0-0 and that he did not state that he was prepared to go on paying Rs. 20 per mensem for six years, nor asked for a conditional discharge only. The statement of the petitioner that in default of payment he would be liable to be suspended from practice was, on the other hand, of no value to the creditors: for this depended upon the rules of this Court and not upon the agreement between the parties. According to the rules of this Court, the license of an insolvent legal practitioner is only suspended till his discharge—whether absolute or conditional. An Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to impose a penalty on the insolvent in the shape of suspension from practice. The suspension is the result of the rules framed by the High Court and the scope of the rules cannot be extended either by the agreement of the parties or by the order of the Insolvency Court.

In the present instance, the order of the Insolvency Court that the petitioner will be liable to be suspended from practice in the event of his failure to comply with the conditions attached to the order seems to go beyond the scope of the rules as framed by the High Court. Of course, the petitioner may be debarred from practice under the rules, if the order of conditional discharge could be and were revoked and the adjudication restored. But that is a different matter on which I express no opinion. I doubt if the Official Receiver even would have agreed to the order passed, if the exact position under the law had been realized. I accordingly accept this petition and setting aside the orders of the Courts below remand the case for re-decision of the application for discharge according to law. No order as to costs.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), ss. 406, 407, 488—Ss. 406 and 407 cover case of person storing oil in transit as broker—Conviction cannot be based on alleged plea of guilty at previous trial.

Even if the accused was storing the oil in transit as a broker, that would not take him out of the provisions of ss. 406 and 407. Sub-s. (1) of these two sections is wide enough to cover such a case.

The Magistrate is in error in referring to an alleged plea of guilty at the previous trial. A conviction cannot be based on such an alleged plea of guilty.

Messrs. H. L. Ganguly and Sudhir Chandra Choudhury, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Bhola Nath Roy and Bhudhari M. Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted under ss. 406 and 407 read with s. 488, Cal. Municipal Act which has been extended to Howrah and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 150 or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for three months. The prosecution case is that the petitioner stored for sale 127 tins of mustard oil which was not of the prescribed quality and which was adulterated. It appears that there was a previous trial at which the petitioner was convicted but that conviction was set aside on appeal. There was a re-trial with the result as stated above. At the trial the petitioner pleaded not guilty. He also examined one witness to show that he acted as a broker in respect of sale of the 127 tins of mustard oil, and that at the material time he was keeping the tins, because they were returned by the purchaser who was unable to pay the price. The learned Magistrate was clearly in error in referring to an alleged plea of guilty at the previous trial. Had the present conviction been based on this alleged plea of guilty, I would have found it necessary to set aside the conviction. The Magistrate however has relied upon other evidence, namely, the evidence of P. W. No. 1 and P. W. No. 2 along with the evidence of D. W. No. 1. The finding is "that the accused stored the oil for sale, and manufactured the oil himself directly or indirectly by his son."

The learned Advocate for the petitioner has contended that the Magistrate should have relied upon D. W. No. 1 and found that the petitioner was merely a broker to the transaction. That is not finding, and is not also consistent with the fact that the petitioner was actually storing the oil, and that there was a cistern containing oil which according to the Magistrate, was identical with the oil in the tins. However, even if it be the case that the petitioner was storing the oil in transit as a broker, that would not take him out of the provisions of ss. 406 and 407. Sub-s. (1) of these two sections is wide enough to cover a case like that of the petitioner even on the assumption that he was acting as a broker and keeping the tins in transit. The conviction is therefore affirmed. The sentence need not be interfered with. The Rule is discharged.

The statutory lien created under s. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, must operate to the extent to which there is any portion of the purchase money lying unpaid in the hands of the vendee or his transferee with notice. If there is a novation or a direct undertaking between the vendee and the creditor for the payment to the latter of the money retained in the vendee's hands, then that money may cease to be a part of the unpaid purchase price and may become a debt payable only to the creditor in respect of which there can obviously be no occasion for a lien in favour of the vendor. But when there is no privity between the vendee and the creditor who is to be paid off, the money in the hands of the vendee, whatever be the purpose for which it is retained remains in fact money at the disposition of the vendor, who can presumably countermand the instructions given to the vendee as to the disposal of that fund. It is, therefore, the vendor's money in respect of which he is entitled to the statutory lien.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, South Kanara, dated February 7, 1935.

Mr. K. Vittal Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Sanjiva Kamath and K. P. Sarvothama Rao, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal is against an order making absolute an attachment of a vendor's lien in execution of a mortgage decree. The appellant is the transferee from the original vendee. There were three items sold two of which were covered by a mortgage. The vendee retained with himself a sum of money sufficient to discharge the mortgage and the interest thereon. He did not discharge the mortgage but sold the three properties to the present appellant, the transfer also reciting the fact that money had been retained for the discharge of the mortgage. The appellant also did not discharge the mortgage. Consequently the mortgagee had sued thereon and in execution of his mortgage decree the two items actually covered by the mortgage have been sold. The mortgagee is now seeking to recover the balance due under the mortgage decree by the attachment and sale of the original mortgagor's lien as vendor over item No. 3 which was no part of the mortgaged property.

It is contended that when a vendee retains in his hands part of the purchase price for payment to a mortgagee of a portion of the property sold, the vendor's lien does not exist. The only authority quoted in support of this proposition is an Oudh case which relies on the decision in Abdulla Beary v Mammali Beary (1), which itself has been overruled by the Full Bench in Sivasubramania Iyer v. Subramania Iyer (2). It seems to me a self-evident proposition that the statutory lien created under s. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, must operate to the extent to which there is any portion of the purchase money lying unpaid in the hands of the vendee or his transferee with notice. If there is a novation or a direct undertaking between the vendee and the creditor for the payment to the latter of the money retained in the vendee's hands, then that money may cease to be a part of the unpaid purchase price and may become a debt payable only to the creditor in respect of which there can obviously be no occasion for a lien in favour of the vendor. It is therefore the vendor's money in respect of which he is entitled to the statutory lien. There can be no doubt that in the present case the appellant purchased the property with full notice of the liability undertaken by the original vendee. He cannot therefore resist the attachment of the vendor's right. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Costs—Preliminary decree for sale against mortgagor and subsequent purchasers of part of mortgaged property—Appeal by purchasers only, dismissed with costs—Purchasers held personally liable for costs of appeal.

In a mortgage suit a preliminary decree for sale was passed against the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers of part of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor did not appeal, but the subsequent purchasers, did, and that appeal was dismissed with costs :

Held, that the subsequent purchasers were personally liable for the costs of the appeal. It would in this case be an unfair hardship on the mortgagor if the property mortgaged were to be saddled with the costs awarded against the subsequent purchasers and against them alone. The ordinary rule of the costs in a mortgage suit being amalgamated with the money realisable by sale of the mortgaged property did not apply to the case. 135 Ind. Cas. 578 (2), explained

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Khandwa, dated February 5, 1938.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Appellants.

Messrs. V. V. Kelkar and W. K. Sheorey, for the Respondents.

Order.—The present appellants, judgment-debtors, were impleaded in a mortgage suit as subsequent purchasers of part of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee was granted a preliminary decree for sale. The mortgagor did not appeal, but the present appellants, the subsequent purchasers, did, and that appeal failed. The Divisional Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court ordered that the costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellants. Subsequently an application was made in the High Court by the decree-holder for an amendment of the decree in respect of the order regarding costs, and the following order was passed, the non-applicants being absent although served :

"It is clear that the costs referred to in the decree as the costs of the respondent were the costs of respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (the plaintiffs), and it is these costs that are to be paid by the appellants (defendants Nos. 3 and 4). The decree be amended so as to make this clear."

In executing his decree the decree-holder asked that this decree for costs amounting to Rs. 695-12 should be executed against these particular judgment-debtors personally. The judgment-debtors resisted, contending that the costs awarded in appeal against the mortgage decree formed part of the mortgage debt and that the same should first be realised from the sale of the mortgaged property alone along with the debt, and that the deficit could be realised personally from them only if the sale of the mortgaged property fell short of the amount decreed with the costs. Reliance was placed on O. XXXIV, rr. 4 and 6 of the Civil P. C. The executing Court held that the subsequent purchasers were personally liable for the costs which had been awarded against them in appeal, and it is against this order that they have now appealed.

The executing Court has based its decision on the ruling in Maung Po Mya v. M. A. S. Firm (1), where it was laid down that the amount of an order for costs made in favour of the mortgagee plaintiff jointly against the mortgagor and a party from whom costs are not recoverable under a final personal money decree (e. g. a puisne or a prior mortgagee) should in the absence of a special order or special reasons to the contrary, be regarded as being recoverable personally from that party. The learned

(1) 9 R 186; 133 Ind. Cas. 225; A I R 1931 Rang. 153; Ind. Rul. (1931) Rang. 241.

Counsel for the appellants in this Court has relied on a ruling in the Madras High Court subsequent in date to that of the Rangoon High Court on which the executing Court relied, for the proposition that a personal decree for costs may be passed against a defendant who had not executed the mortgage: Rajagopalaswami Naicker v. Palanisawmi Chettiar (2). On the strength of this the learned Counsel contends that the property should first be put to sale and that these subsequent purchasers can only be called on to satisfy the decree for costs in the event of these not being recoverable from the mortgaged property.

Now, the decision in the Madras High Court does not go so far as to cover the actual circumstances in the case before me. The person who was there held liable for a personal decree for costs was not a subsequent purchaser of part of the mortgaged property but a son of the mortgagor. But in any event I do not consider that it is necessary to resolve any conflict that there may be in the views enunciated in the two judgments. No doubt it is the exception to impose a personal liability for costs in a mortgage suit, particularly so when the matter in dispute is between the mortgagor and the mortgagee alone. But it appears to me that in this particular case it would certainly be an unfair hardship on the mortgagor if the property mortgaged were to be saddled with the costs awarded against the present appellants and against them alone, in the present case. The mortgagor did not contest the decision of the trial Court; that was done only by the subsequent purchasers of the mortgaged property, and their appeal failed signally. It is of no avail for the learned Counsel to contend that he was fighting the mortgagor's battle and that the mortgagor should share in the costs. In fact what he is asking is that the mortgagor should bear, if possible, the entire amount of the costs. The mortgagor wisely realised that it was no use spending money in preferring a useless appeal, and it does not seem just that the balance which may remain due to him after the sale of the property should be diminished by the very substantial costs which the present appellants have incurred by fighting an infructuous appeal with which the mortgagor decided to have nothing to do. This case is eminently one in which the ordinary rule of the costs in a mortgage suit being amalgamated with the money realisable by sale of the mortgaged property is not to be followed, and it appears, although it is not absolutely clear, that this was the view taken by the Divisional Bench of this Court in amending the appellate decree. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, Counsel fee Rs. 25.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2, s. 47—Decree, if can be adjusted or extinguished by executory agreement—Enforcement of such agreement in execution proceedings—Variation of decree, if adjustment of whole decree—Compromise agreement which is total adjustment of decree, if can be enforced in execution of decree which is totally adjusted or satisfied.

A decree can be adjusted or extinguished by an executory agreement, if that is the intention of the parties. Though, unless that agreement merely varies the decree within certain limits, it cannot be enforced in execution proceedings of the original decree, it must be made the subject of a separate civil suit. 171 Ind. Cas. 477 (4), explained, 167 Ind. Cas. 417 (1), held no longer good law. [p. 429, col. 1.]

A variation of a decree cannot be deemed an adjustment of the whole decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. A compromise agreement varying the time or manner of enforcement of a decree may be a partial adjustment of a decree and can, therefore, be enforced in execution proceedings in satisfaction of that part of the decree which remains yet unsatisfied, but if the compromise agreement is a total adjustment of a decree, though that agreement may be the subject-matter of a separate suit, it cannot be enforced in execution of a decree which is totally adjusted or satisfied. order of the Subordinate Judge of Sukkur who dismissed an execution application made by the appellant in this appeal on the ground that the decree had been adjusted by an agreement in which the judgment-debtor agreed to pay off the balance of the mortgage debt by instalments and on default agreed to convey one of the mortgaged properties while the judgment-creditor agreed that the other of the mortgaged properties would be released. It was argued in appeal that the order of the Subordinate Judge and the judgment of the Assistant Judge were wrong because there is a ruling of a Division Bench of this Court reported in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1); that a decree cannot be adjusted by an executory agreement. It is true that this ruling is to that effect and followed, what was believed to be, the preponderance of judicial opinion at the time, but one of the learned Judges even then appeared to agree with the ruling in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkatta Reddi (2), and differed from it with some doubt, but it would appear that the preponderance of judicial opinion is now in favour of the view taken by Reilly, J. in that case, and though, ordinarily, we should be bound by a ruling of a Division Bench of our own Court, the view that a decree can be adjusted or extinguished by an executory agreement, if that is the intention of the parties as now the high authority of the Privy Council in its support in a recent case reported in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), though, unless that agreement merely varies the decree within certain limits, it cannot be enforced in execution proceedings of the original decree; it must be made the subject of a separate civil suit; and this, we think, distinguishes the case in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1), from the case in Ramibai Jetmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4), where the question before the Court was whether a substituted decree could be executed in the same execution proceedings as the original decree.

It is true that in the Privy Council case in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), their Lordships were considering the operation of s. 47, Civil P. C., nevertheless the question whether a compromise agreement varying the original decree could be enforced in execution proceedings in continuation of those taken to execute the original decree was considered. It was decided that provided the compromise agreement did not attempt to bring under the decree a liability extraneous to the decree and was intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time and method of its enforcement there was nothing in O. XX, r. 10, Civil P. C., or elsewhere which prevented the parties from coming to a valid agreement for time and even for the payment of an increased rate of interest to be enforced in execution proceedings. But the passage in that judgment most material to the point before us, whether a decree can be adjusted or extinguished by an executory agreement is as follows (p. 85*):

"The purpose of providing a limitation of six months for such applications to the Court which passed the decree is not altogether plain and the objects may be more than one; but this provision, like the rule itself, affords no sufficient ground for holding that the Code makes parties wholly incompetent to come to an arrangement for time enforceable in execution proceedings. Such bargains may take different forms and it is not possible to pre-judge the individual case. If it appears to the Court, acting under s. 47, that the true effect of the agreement was to discharge the decree forthwith in consideration of certain promises by the debtor, then no doubt the Court will not have occasion to enforce the agreement in execution proceedings, but will leave the creditor to bring a separate suit upon the contract. If, on the other hand, the agreement is intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time or manner of its enforcement, it is a matter to be dealt with under s. 47. In such a case to say that the creditor may perhaps have a separate suit is to misread the Code, which by requiring all such matters to be dealt with in execution discloses a broader view of the scope and functions of an executing Court. Their Lordships are in agreement with the statement in Gobardandas v. Dau Dayal (5) at p. 535, that 'in numerous cases a compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor entered into in the course of execution proceedings; which was duly recorded, has been enforced,' and they are not of opinion that the practice, which is both widespread and inveterate, is contrary to the Code. They are of opinion that in the present case the compromise can and should be enforced in these execution proceedings."

There are also other cases of other High Courts in support of the view taken by the Madras High Court in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2). In Kalyanji Dhana v. Dharamsi Dhana & Co. (6), the view was taken that a decree can be adjusted by an executory agreement and can be pleaded as a bar to further execution proceedings. The same view was taken in Satyabadi Sahu v. Mani Sahu (7) and Arunachallam Chettyar v. V. M. R. P. Firm (8), where the learned Judges make clear the difference between a case where the judgment-creditor is prepared to accept a mere promise of the judgment-debtor as an adjustment of the decree, and a case where the judgment-creditor is not prepared to accept a mere promise but demands performance, and a case where there may be no agreement but merely a counter-offer when there would be no adjustment of the decree and no bar to further execution proceedings.

The question was also argued before us as to how far the ruling in Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4), was overruled by the Privy Council judgment in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), and it was pointed out that that ruling follows the previous ruling in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1). So far as it follows the ruling in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1), it must be deemed no longer good law, and so far as it conflicts either with the Privy Council ruling in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), or the previous ruling in Firm Hetram Bodhraj v. Firm Aya Ram Tola Ram (9), it must no longer be deemed good law, and this point was indeed noticed in a case of this Court reported in Kazi Ali Muhammad Khairat Mohamed Sheikh v. Ganga Ram Chotomal (10), but the case in Firm Hetram Bodhraj v. Firm Aya Ram Tola Ram (9), dealt primarily with the question of the substitution of one decree for another and the enforcement of the substituted decree in the same execution proceedings as the original decree and the sentence. "In short, a decree can be adjusted within the meaning of r. 2, O. XXI, Civil P. O., only by an executed agreement and not by an executory agreement" must be read with the sentence that follows, and as read alone is not a correct statement of the law. The question is also urged before us as to how far an adjustment means merely a variation of the decree, and it was argued that an adjustment cannot be an extinguishment of the decree because in the Privy Council case in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3) Sir George Rankin in delivering the judgment of the Board appears to speak of a compromise and an adjustment of the decree. It is true that at one place in the judgment his Lordship says:

"The compromise of 1927, however, was recorded: it was an adjustment even if it was something more, and it contained the terms upon which the adjustment was agreed to,"

and it was this adjustment which their Lordships held could be enforced in execution proceedings. But we think that by "adjustment" was meant a partial adjustment, an adjustment in part and not in whole within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., for we do not see how, when a decree has been adjusted as a whole, there remains in those execution proceedings anything further to execute. In Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2), at p. 209*, Reilly, J. says:

"What the exact meaning of the expression 'adjustment of a decree' as used in O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., is, has been explained by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in Ladd Govindoss v. Ramdoss Vishnadoss (11). The learned Judge there stated that 'any transaction which extinguishes the decree as such in whole or in part and results in satisfaction of the whole or a portion of the decree in respect of the particular relief or reliefs granted by the decree is an adjustment of the decree'."

That these compromise agreements are regarded as partial adjustments appears to be the view of the Bombay High Court from the case in Shivappa Dandappa v. Gurpadappa Doddappa (12). A variation of a decree cannot be deemed an adjustment of the whole decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., and this will be at once clear if O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., is read substituting for the word "adjustment" in its grammatical variations the word "variation" in its grammatical variations.

A compromise agreement varying the time or manner of enforcement of a decree may be a partial adjustment of a decree and can therefore be enforced in execution proceedings in satisfaction of that part of the decree which remains yet unsatisfied, but if the compromise agreement is a total adjustment of a decree, though that agreement may be the subject-matter of a separate suit, we do not see how it can be enforced in execution of a decree which is totally adjusted or satisfied.

Turning to the facts of this case, it appears that both Courts have found that there was a compromise agreement between the parties whereby the balance of the decretal amount due on the mortgage debt was to be paid off within twelve months, failing which one of the mortgaged properties was to become the property of the plaintiff who was to release the other mortgaged property, and that it was the intention of the parties that this new contract was to extinguish the rights and liabilities under the decree. There was an immediate extinguishment of the decree, not an extinguishment dependent upon some future contingency.

Quite apart then from the question whether the compromise agreement could have been enforced as a mere variation as to method and time of the satisfaction of the decretal liability within the ruling in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd. v. Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), it appears it was and was intended to be a total adjustment of the decree. The application to enforce the original decree on the basis of a repudiation of this agreement was rightly rejected by the executing Court which ordered the adjustment of the decree to be recorded. In my opinion therefore the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Lobo, J.—The appellant in this second appeal held a mortgage decree against the respondents for a sum of Rs. 450, the mortgage security being a residential house and some agricultural land. On September 25, 1934, he applied for execution and notice was issued to the judgment-debtors. On December 3, 1934 the respondents, judgment-debtors, put in an application under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., which reads thus :

"It is prayed on behalf of the defendants that in the decree of the above suit, the plaintiff has made an adjustment on September 4, 1934, in respect of the decretal amount, viz., that he will take the balance of Rs. 350 after giving credit for Rs. 110 being the amount received by him towards the decree, and that the defendants would pay the said sum (Rs. 350) to the plaintiff within 12 months of the adjustment. If the defendants fail to pay the amount during the period, the plaintiff shall be the owner of the entire immovable property, viz., land belonging to the defendants shown as mortgaged in the decree and the defendants shall have no interest therein, but the plaintiff shall release the other immovable property, viz., (residential) house which is mortgaged by the decree and the mortgage right of the plaintiff over it will disappear. The plaintiff having arrived at this adjustment inspired confidence in the defendants but on the morrow he has come and filed an execution application.

It is, therefore, prayed that this Honourable Court will be pleased to get the above adjustment confirmed by the plaintiff and to sanction the same. An affidavit is herewith attached."

The Subordinate Judge held the adjustment proved, ordered it to be recorded and dismissed the appellant's execution application with costs. The appellant preferred an appeal to the District Court of Sukkur. His appeal was however dismissed, the Assistant Judge who heard the appeal holding the adjustment proved, and holding also, after a review of a number of rulings of various High Courts, that the adjustment was 'within the purview of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O.' This second appeal was admitted as a point of law was clearly involved and the learned Advocate for the appellant pointed out that subsequent to the date of the Appellate Court's judgment there had been two decisions of our Court in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) and Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) and in view of the former of these decisions the judgments of the lower Courts could not be maintained. When the matter came before this Bench for formal hearing it was found that the respondents were unrepresented. As the point involved was one of considerable importance and of very frequent occurrence, and as it was further represented to us that the decisions of our Court in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) and Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) appeared to require re-consideration in the light of recent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council and decisions of several High Courts in India, we adjourned the hearing after inviting the President of the Bar Council and Karachi Bar Association to argue the matter for the respondents as amicus curiæ.

We have now heard the very full arguments of the learned Advocate for the appellant and Mr. Kimatral Bhojraj as amicus curiæ and I have arrived at three conclusions: (i) that the decision of a Bench of this Court in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) to which I was a party, is incorrect in so far as it relates to O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., and the recording of an adjustment thereunder; (ii) that the case in Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Santokram (4) has been rightly decided and is good authority and (iii) that this appeal must fail because both the lower Courts have arrived at a correct decision of the point involved. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother the Honourable the Judicial Commissioner and as I am in complete accord with it I would only briefly set out the reasons which I feel justify the conclusions recited above. In Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) I agreed with my learned brother, the Honourable Mr. Havelivala, in holding that a compromise such as had been alleged in that case by the judgment-debtor was not an adjustment which could be recorded under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., and could defeat the execution application filed by the judgment-creditor. The alleged compromise was an executory contract. It contained provisions to be performed in the future and could not be treated as an adjustment so as to operate as a bar to execution. But I have made it clear in my judgment in that case that I considered that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2) had taken the correct view when they held that there was no legal impediment in the way of a decree-holder accepting a mere promise that the judgment-debtor will do something at some future date as a legal and immediate adjustment in satisfaction of his decree. At p. 266* of the report this passage occurs:

"In my opinion the view of the learned Judge of the Madras High Court in the case referred to above appears to be sound, but in view of the fact that the majority of the High Courts in India have expressed the opinion that an executory agreement cannot be pleaded as an adjustment of decree under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., and considering that the facts and nature of the agreement in the case before us are distinguishable from those in the Madras case, I think it safer to accept this opinion rather than that of the learned Judge of the Madras High Court in the case referred to in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2), which, so far as I have been able to see, stands alone except for the single Judge ruling in Bagamal v. Shih Parshad (13)."

But this is no longer the position, for not only has the decision in the Madras case been accepted by other High Courts in India, but recent judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council place the correctness of the Madras view beyond all question. In Kalyanji Dhana v. Dharamsi Dhana & Co. (6) Broomfield, J., in 1935 has carefully reviewed the earlier authorities and agrees with the view of the learned Judges in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2). The judgment was reported in 1936 and was probably not available in May 1936 when the judgment in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) was written. In 1936 the Patna High Court in Satyabadi Sahu v. Mani Sahu (7) adopted the same view following the decisions of Madras and Bombay in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2) and Kalyanji Dhana v. Dharamsi Dhana & Co. (6). The judgment in this case is dated in January 1936 but it was certainly not available till after May in that year. Courtney-Terrill, C. J. says in his judgment in this Patna case:

"In my opinion the clearest and the correct pronouncement of the law is in the judgment of the Madras High Court delivered in 1932 by Reilly and Anantakrishna Ayyar, JJ., in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2)."

The case in Shankar Atmaram v. Keshav Govind (14) was cited in argument as another instance in which the Bombay High Court had accepted the Madras view; but though the point appears to have been taken, the part of the judgment dealing with it is not contained in the report of the case in Shankar Atmaram v. Keshav Govind (14). All these cases have been cited with approval in the Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court in Arunachallam Chettiar v. V. M. R. P. Firm (8) where it was held that a decree can be adjusted within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., by a new contract that the judgment debtor will do something in future, if the decree-holder is willing to take such a promise instead of the decree which he has. It is not necessary in every case that the judgment-debtor shall perform the promise which he makes to the decree-holder before adjustment can be regarded as complete. The Chief Justice in his judgment in this case makes the position clear when he says

"Now the adjustment, or new agreement, must fulfil the essentials of any other valid contract before it can be enforced as such. It may be reached by the offer of a promise for a promise and mutual acceptances as for instance where the decree-holder agrees to accept a mere promise by the judgment-debtor to convey certain lands to him. The fact that the contract is executory on both sides does not mean that it is any the less a valid agreement and adjustment of the decree. On the other hand the adjustment, or new agreement, may be reached by the offer of a promise for an act; as for instance where a decree-holder agrees that upon the conveyance by the judgment-debtor of certain lands to him he will accept them in full settlement of the decree

To my mind the entire controversy on this point is set at rest by two very recent pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council in which are to be found a clear exposition of the principles underlying O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C., and the question of adjustments or compromises of decrees generally, and an equally clear indication of the limits within which adjustments or compromises are to be recognized and given effect to by Courts in execution proceedings. In Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bin Basni Kuer (3), Sir George Rankin who delivered judgment of the Board says :

"On this difficult and important question, their Lordships are not in agreement with the view taken by the Chief Court. They do not consider that it is sufficient account of the facts that the Code contains no general restriction of the parties' liberty of contract with reference to their rights and obligations under the decree and that if they do contract upon terms which have reference to and affect the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, the provisions of s 47 involve that questions relating to such terms may fall to be determined by the executing Court."

And little later his Lordship says :

"Such bargains may take different forms and it is not possible to prejudge the individual case. If it appears to the Court, acting under s. 47, that the true effect of the agreement was to discharge the decree forthwith in consideration of certain promises by the debtor, then no doubt the Court will not have occasion to enforce the agreement in execution, proceedings, but will leave the creditor to bring a separate suit upon the contract. If, on the other hand, the agreement is intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time or manner of its enforcement, it is a matter to be dealt with under s. 47. In such a case to say that the creditor may perhaps have a separate suit is to misread the Code, which by requiring all such matters to be dealt with in execution discloses a broader view of the scope and functions of an executing Court."

The facts in the case are somewhat complicated but the 'difficult and important question' to which his Lordship refers was just this: whether an executing Court could recognize and give effect to an adjustment of a decree involving an alteration only of the instalments payable thereunder and an enhancement of the rate of interest, or whether as the learned Judges of the Chief Court of Oudh had held, the original decree had thereby been altered or varied by the parties and the alteration or variation could not be recognized and acted upon by the executing Court in execution proceedings of the original decree even though it had been recorded by the Court with the consent of the parties.

Their Lordships in this case have merely enlarged upon and elaborated a principle already enunciated by the Board in the earlier case in Firm Hetram Boodhraj v. Firm Aya Ram Tola Ram (8). The facts in that case were simple. A decree of 1923 imposed upon the judgment-debtor a liability of Rs. 1,04,000 with interest at 6 per cent, and a certain D stood surety. There was no provision for the discharge of the liability by instalments. There was however a provision for payment of instalments making up a smaller total and at a lower rate of interest, the faithful observance of which provision would enable the judgment-debtor to escape the decretal liability. Some years later this provision was, by consent of parties, altered and duly certified and recorded by the Court. The judgment debtor having defaulted the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree. The judgment-debtor contended in these proceedings that the compromise arrived at in 1928 created a new liability which superseded the original decree and rendered it no longer enforceable. He further contended that the compromise was not an adjustment under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C., and lastly contended that the executing Court possessed no authority to enforce through execution the new liability which could only be enforced by obtaining a decree in a fresh suit on the compromise. It was held by their Lordships that the compromise of 1928 affected only the provisions upon the observance of which the full decretal liability could be avoided. The decretal liability remained save of course to the extent to which it had in fact been reduced by moneys already paid. The compromise affected only the provisions upon the observance of which the full decretal liability could be avoided. In these circumstances it was immaterial to consider whether the compromise was not an adjustment within O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. If it was, it was duly recorded or certified and the Court could recognize it in executing the decree. If it was not such an adjustment there was nothing to prevent the Court from doing that which it obviously should do, viz., looking at it and taking it and the payments made under it into account in executing the decree.

It seems to me that if these two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council are read together the legal position laid down is this: The parties to a decree obtain certain rights and incur certain obligations thereunder. There is nothing in the Civil P. O., restricting their liberty of contract with reference to these rights and obligations. They may by contract alter these rights and obligations in any way they choose. If they contract to do so upon terms which have reference to and affect the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, the provisions of s. 47, Civil P. O., involve the determination of questions relating to such terms in execution proceedings. If the contract between the parties leaves the liability of the judgment-debtor under the decree in substance unaffected and is confined to variation merely of subsidiary matters such as the time and mode of payment the contract between the parties whether or not it amounts to an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., may be enforced by the Court in execution of the original decree at the instance of the judgment creditor. If on the other hand, the contract between the parties introduces terms which are foreign to the decree and introduces into the decree a liability extraneous thereto the Court in execution proceedings at the instance of the judgment creditor will not enforce the contract but leave the judgment creditor to a separate suit. If in spite of such contract the judgment creditor seeks to execute the original decree the judgment-debtor may successfully plead the contract as a bar to such execution.

It appears to me therefore on a consideration of the law which I have referred above that the decision in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1) is not good law and also that the case in Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) has been correctly decided and is good law. In Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) there was a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 23 per month and a right of residence in the family house and a charge was created on certain property to secure the maintenance. Ramibai however alleged that subsequent to the decree she had come to an agreement with the respondents whereby certain property was released from the charge and her right to maintenance was secured as a charge upon one property only and there was a further agreement whereby in addition to Rs. 23 per month for maintenance she was to be entitled to Rs. 15 per month for residence in lieu of residence in the family house. The appellant sought the assistance of the executing Court for enforcement of her rights under the decree as varied by the agreement. It was held that her application had been rightly dismissed as what he was seeking to execute was not a decree passed by the Court but a contract containing terms extraneous to the original decree which the parties had chosen to substitute by mutual agreement for the decree of the Court. In the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council, the appellant had attempted to bring under the decree a liability extraneous thereto and this the executing Court had no right to enforce but rightly referred the appellant to another suit. There are some passages however in the judgment in Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) which would appear to support the decision in Udharam Baharmal v. Murarilal Shiamlal (1). To that extent Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) cannot be held to be good law.

Turning to the appeal before us, I see no difficulty in holding that both the lower Courts have arrived at a correct decision of the point involved and that this appeal must consequently fail. Both the lower Courts have held that the adjustment was proved and that it was the intention of the parties that the adjustment should extinguish their rights and liabilities under the original decree. Execution of the original decree, in these circumstances, not be enforced. The case was entirely distinguishable from the ruling of our High Court in Ramibai Jethmal v. Rewachand Shantokram (4) and fell clearly within the decision of the Madras High Court in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddi (2). I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that this second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 12—Tenant mortgaging his holding—S. 12, if applies—Proper remedy of tenant.

Section 12, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, is meant to apply only to valid mortgages and not to those which are ab initio void. In the case of mortgages which are void by reason of being against any enactment, the mortgagee is not entitled to get back his money except when any portion of the consideration forms an independent transaction. The mortgage of an agricultural holding in contravention of the provisions of the Rent Law is void ab initio. Hence, a statutory tenant who has made a mortgage of his holding cannot avail himself of the provisions of s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act but his remedy lies in a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court.

O. Ref. made by the District Judge of Gonda.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, appears amicus curæ.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the learned District Judge of Gonda under O. XLVI, r. 1, Civil P. C.

It appears that three brothers holding a statutory tenancy mortgaged their holding usufructually for a sum of Rs. 100. The holding stood recorded in the village papers in the name of one of the brothers. He filed an application under s. 12 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act and as the amount secured by the mortgage was less than Rs. 500 the application was dealt with by an Assistant Collector of the first class. He held that the mortgage had been paid off by the usufruct and allowed the application with costs against the mortgagee. He held that the mortgage be redeemed without payment of any amount by the applicant and directed the mortgagee to deliver the title deeds, if any, to the mortgagors. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge by the mortgagee and the learned Judge being in doubt as to whether s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act applies to a mortgage by a tenant has made this reference for this Court's opinion on the question whether or not a tenant who has mortgaged his holding can avail himself of the provisions of the section.

It is now well-established that the mortgage of an agricultural holding in contravention of the provisions of the Rent Law is void ab initio. It was so held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Beni Madho v. Kali Pershad, (6 O. C. 331) (1), by this Court in Dasrath v. Sandala, (3 O. W. N., 217) (2) and by the Board of Revenue in Mahadeo Singh v. Pudai Singh, (12 R. D., 490) (3) and in Mahammad Sabber v. Shervani, (14 R. D., 469) (4).

(3) 12 R. D. 490.

(4) 14 R. D. 469.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have also laid down in Moti Chand v. Ikramullah Khan, (L. R. 44 I. A. 54) (5), that the policy of an enactment cannot be defeated by any agreement or ingenious device. It is thus clear that a transfer in contravention of the Rent Law is wholly invalid. Our reading of s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act, however, is that it was meant to apply only to valid mortgages and not to those which are ab initio void. That section provides for the filing of an application for "redemption" of a mortgage "after the principal money has become due;" but in the case of an invalid mortgage there can neither be any redemption nor can any money be due on that mortgage. The sections of the Act following s. 12, which prescribe the procedure to be followed on an application being presented under s. 12, also show that what the Legislature contemplated while enacting s. 12, was a valid mortgage. The procedure prescribed is similar to that of s. 83 of the T. P. Act, and by that procedure the mortgagee is allowed to take the money deposited by the mortgagor. In the case of mortgages which are void by reason of being against any enactment it has been held that the mortgagee is not entitled to get back his money except when any portion of the consideration formed an independent transaction. In the present case the money appears to have been advanced merely as consideration for the mortgage and so the mortgagee cannot claim it as legally due to him. In the case of 14 R. D., 469 referred to above it was held by the Board of Revenue that the mortgagee of an ordinary or of a statutory holding is liable to ejectment as a sub-tenant.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that a statutory tenant who has made a mortgage of his holding cannot avail himself of the provisions of s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act but that his remedy lies in a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court.

Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), s. 11—Certificate to question validity of s. 11 granted—New Act of 1939 coming into force—Question becoming not existent—Federal Court, if can still entertain appeal—Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7—Scope of—Interest to which mortgagee would be entitled under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 11, if can be reduced.

When jurisdiction to hear an appeal is once vested in the Federal Court by the grant of a certificate, it cannot be divested by any subsequent event. A certificate is the key which unlocks the door into Federal Court, and a litigant who has once passed through that door cannot afterwards be ejected by the happening of events outside and beyond his control. It is quite immaterial that the relief which the appellants claim arises from an Act which was not law when the certificate was granted. Section 205 (2) is plain; and once a certificate has been granted, an appellant can appeal on any ground whatsoever, if the Court thinks fit to give him leave to do so. Where a certificate was granted on the question of validity of s. 11 of Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, but in the meanwhile the new Act of 1939 came into force, and the question ceased to exist, the certificate does not become "infructuous" and the jurisdiction to hear appeal is not taken away from the Federal Court. [p. 437, col. 2, p. 438, col. 1.]

Parliament never contemplated a contingency of the kind; but that is no reason why the Federal Court should not give effect to the plain language of the Act. Nor could it lightly adopt a construction which would have this result, that an appeal properly begun and continued in Federal Court was suddenly, by the action of a Provincial Legislature, taken out of its jurisdiction and transferred to the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee. [p. 438, col. 1.]

Section 7 of the Bihar Act of 1939 is expressly limited to interest claimable upto the date of the institution of the suit. The Act has maintained a distinction between loans advanced before the Act and loans advanced subsequently. The contract for the payment of interest not having been declared illegal, but only unenforceable beyond a certain point, the creditor retains his contractual rights except to the extent to which the statute has expressly limited them. In these circumstances, it may perhaps be open to doubt whether the policy of the Bihar legislation can properly be taken into account by a Court which is considering whether there are any grounds for "reducing the rate of interest to which a mortgagee would ordinarily be entitled under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 11 of the Code, since this would in effect be to extend the Act to a period with which the Legislature has not chosen to deal; but it may be that the wide powers of re-opening transactions originating before or after the commencement of the Act given to the Court by s. 8 of the Bihar Act of 1939 were regarded by the Legislature as conferring a much wider discretion than that given by

O. XXXIV, r. 11 or by the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Mr. B. B. Tawakley (Senior Advocate, Federal Court) with Major Surendrapal Singh (Advocate, Federal Court) instructed by Mr. T. K. Prasad, Agent, for the Appellants.

Sir Brojendra Mitter (A.-G. of India and Senior Advocate, Federal Court) with Mr. Raghbir Singh (Advocate, Federal Court) instructed by Mr. B. Banerji, Agent for Respondent No. 1, Respondent No. 2 did not enter appearance.

Judgment.—In this case the facts do not differ materially from others which have come before us lately from Bihar; but the Advocate-General of India, on behalf of the respondents, has raised a novel and interesting point.

The plaintiff (the present first respondent) obtained a decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, and the decree (with certain modifications in their favour) has been upheld in the High Court. The defendants' claim to have the benefit of s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, was rejected since that provision had already been held by the High Court to be void Sadanand Jha v. Aman Khan (1); but the High Court granted a certificate under s. 205 (1) of the Constitution Act.

The date of the judgment of the High Court and of their certificate was January 17, 1939. On May 1, 1939, the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transaction) (Act VII of 1939), came into force. The application of the appellants to the High Court for admission of their appeal to the Federal Court was made on May 11, and the appeal was finally admitted by the High Court on October 2, last. The Act of 1939, which has been before this Court in several cases during the present sittings, repealed and re-enacted s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, and since it had been reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General and had received his assent, its validity cannot be challenged as that of the Act of 1938 has been.

Such are the facts of the case, and the Advocate-General admitted that if the appeal were properly constituted, the appellants would be entitled to the benefit of the Act of 1939; but he contended that there was no appeal properly before the Court. He put his argument in this way. The certificate under s. 205 (1), granted on January 17, certified that the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution Act, that question being (or so it is to be presumed, for the certificate does not mention any particular question of law) whether s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, was, as the High Court had held in their earlier decision, void under s. 107 of the Constitution Act, because repugnant to an existing Indian law: s. 2 of the Usury Laws Repeal Act, 1855, s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, and possibly also s. 37 of the Contract Act, 1872. The Advocate-General admitted that on the day when this certificate was granted it was a good and valid certificate, and that the appellants were entitled at that time to appeal to this Court not only on the question as to the validity of s. 11 of the Act of 1938, but also on any other ground mentioned in s. 205 (2) of the Constitution Act. But, he said, the question of law as to the validity of s. 11 ceased to exist at the beginning of May, when the new Act of 1939 came into force and, since the Act was retrospective, the certificate had become, to use his own expression, infructuous and ineffective. Accordingly, he argued that this Court had no longer jurisdiction to hear the appeal, either on the constitutional or on any other ground since an effective certificate alone is the foundation of the Court's jurisdiction; and that the appellants must seek their remedy if any, before the Judicial Committee. He also pointed out that the object of the appeal now is to obtain the benefit of the Act of 1939, that is to say, of a law which was not yet in existence when the certificate was granted by the High Court.

Section 205 of the Constitution Act is in the following terms :

"205. (1) An appeal shall lie to the Federal Court from any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in British India, if the High Court certificate that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of this Act or any order in Council made thereunder and it shall be the duty of every High Court in British India to consider in every case whether or not any such question is involved and of its own motion to give or to withhold a certificate accordingly.

(2) Where such a certificate is given, any party in the case may appeal to the Federal Court on the ground that any such question as aforesaid has been wrongly decided and on any ground on which that party could have appealed without special leave to His Majesty in Council if no such certificate had been given, and, with the leave of the Federal Court on any other ground, and no direct appeal shall lie to his His Majesty in Council either with or without special leave."

The granting of a certificate is thus the necessary condition precedent to the exercise of its jurisdiction by this Court; and it sets in motion a train of consequences. No provision is made for the cancellation or vacating of a certificate after it has once been granted. The Advocate-General did indeed suggest that the High Court had power in appropriate circumstances to vacate a certificate under s. 151 or s. 152 of the Civil P. O. He abandoned the suggestion however before the conclusion of his argument, and in our opinion he was prudent to do so. Plainly s. 152 of the Code has no application to such a case as the present, and there can be no inherent power to alter a decree or certificate, which was correct at the time when it was made or given, because of the happening of some subsequent event.

If the High Court had no power to vacate its certificate, this Court has certainly no power to do so. Can it then treat an existing certificate as having become "infructuous," because the constitutional question with respect to which it was given subsequently becomes of no more than academic interest. The Advocate-General referred to the observations of the Judicial Committee in Attorney-General for Alberta v. Attorney-General for Canada (2) where the Lord Chancellor stated that it was the practice of the Committee not to entertain appeals which have no relation to existing rights created or purported to be created or to express opinions on subjects which are no longer of any practical interest. In our opinion, it would be convenient for this Court to follow the same practice and we have in an earlier case declined to hear arguments on the validity of the repealed Bihar Act of 1938. But we are not now considering the convenience or otherwise of a particular practice; we are considering a question of jurisdiction. The certificate granted by the High Court on January 17, 1939, admittedly conferred jurisdiction on this Court to hear the appeal; and we have to determine whether that jurisdiction has been taken away from us, by reason of the alteration of circumstances. In our opinion, when jurisdiction to hear an appeal is once vested in this Court by the grant of a certificate, it cannot be divested by any subsequent event. A certificate is the key which unlocks the door. (2) (1939) A.C. 117, (122, 128); 108 L.J.P.C. 1; 159 L.T. 609; 82 S.J. 1029; 55 T.L.R. 65; (1939) 1 A.E.R. 423.

locks the door into this Court, and a litigant who has once passed through that door cannot afterwards be ejected by the happening of events outside and beyond his control. It seems to us quite immaterial that the relief which the appellants now claim arises from an act which was not law when the certificate was granted. Section 205 (2) is plain; and once a certificate has been granted, an appellant can appeal on any ground whatsoever, if the Court thinks fit to give him leave to do so. Nor do we think though it is not necessary to decide the point, that the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the appeal on those other grounds would be excluded, even if an appellant declined to argue before us that the decision of the High Court on the constitutional question with respect to which the certificate had been granted was wrong.

It is sufficient for us to base our judgment on what we conceive to be the true construction of s. 205 of the Constitution Act, and we do not think it necessary to decide whether the appellants had also a vested right under the Act of 1938, which was saved to them by s. 8 of the Bihar General Clauses Act, notwithstanding the repeal of the Act of 1938 by the Act of 1939.

The facts in the present case are unusual and are unlikely to recur. We do not suppose that Parliament ever contemplated a contingency of the kind; but that is no reason why we should not give effect to the plain language of the Act. Nor could we lightly adopt a construction which would have this result, that an appeal properly begun and continued in this Court was suddenly, by the action of a Provincial Legislature, taken out of our jurisdiction and transferred to the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee.

In our opinion, therefore this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The appellants' Counsel did not argue any grounds of appeal other than the application of the Bihar Act of 1939, and, as we have already said, the Advocate-General of India, on behalf of the respondents, admitted that if the appeal were properly constituted and this Court had jurisdiction, the appellants were entitled to the benefit of the Act. We accordingly allow the appeal to the extent of reducing the interest payable to the plaintiff up to the date of the institution of the suit to Rs. 8,500 in respect of the first mortgage bond, Ex. I and to Rs. 3,995 in respect of the second bond, Ex. I (a). As regards interest pendente lite, this is governed in the case of mortgage actions by O. XXXIV, r. 11, of the Civil P. C. which provides that the Court may order payment of interest, up to the date on or before which payment of the amount found due is under the preliminary decree to be made by the mortgagor, at the rate payable on the principal, or where no such rate is fixed at such rate as the Court may deem reasonable, and it is to be observed that though this provision has found a place in the Code since 1929, s. 7 of the Bihar Act of 1939 is expressly limited to interest claimable upto the date of the institution of the suit. The Act has maintained a distinction between loans advanced before the Act and loans advanced subsequently; as regards the latter it has limited the rate of interest (s. 5) and has also prohibited compound interest (s. 6) while as regards the former it has only limited the aggregate amount of interest payable up to the date of the institution of the suit (s. 7). The contract for the payment of interest thus not having been declared illegal, but only unenforceable beyond a certain point, the creditor retains his contractual rights except to the extent to which the statute has expressly limited them. In these circumstances, it may perhaps be open to doubt whether the policy of the Bihar legislation can properly be taken into account by a Court which is considering whether there are any grounds for reducing the rate of interest to which a mortgagee would ordinarily be entitled under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 11 of the Code, since this would in effect be to extend the Act to a period with which the legislature has not chosen to deal but it may be that the wide powers of re-opening transactions originating before or after the commencement of the Act given to the Court by s. 8 of the Bihar Act of 1939 were regarded by the Legislature as conferring a much wider discretion than that given by O. XXXIV, r. 11 or by the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. Having regard to all the circumstances, we think that the justice of the case will be met by allowing the plaintiff (respondent) simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum rather than the 12 per cent. compound interest with yearly rate specified in the contract, in respect of the principal amount due on both the bonds from December 20, 1934, to the date fixed for payment in the revised decree to be passed by the High Court.

From the latter date the aggregate amount due for principal, interest and cost will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum till the date of realisation or payment.

The case will be remitted to the High Court with a direction to discharge their order dated January 17, 1939, and the order of the Subordinate Judge dated March 2, 1936, and to pass a decree in the terms above stated. The respondents will retain the costs already awarded to them in the High Court and in the Court below; there will be no order as to costs in this Court.

First Civil Appeal No. 14 of 1939
August 19, 1939

Sethani HARKUNWAR BAI—APPELLANT

versus

Dewan Bahadur KESRI SINGH—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Bhopal) (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (8), 58—Ex parte decree of foreign Court awarding costs to defendant—Suit by defendant in Court in Bhopal State to recover costs based on judgment of foreign Court—Maintainability of.

The definition of 'judgment' in s. 2 (8), Civil P. O., (Bhopal) covers both an order and a decree, and equally holds good whether the decree is passed ex parte or on merits.

Where in a suit in a foreign Court plaintiff's witness who was under examination, absented himself and upon an adjournment being disallowed the Counsel withdrew from the suit with the result that the plaintiff's claim was rejected and she was required to pay the costs of the defendant, the absence of the witness on the date fixed for his further examination and the consequent withdrawal of plaintiff's Counsel from prosecution amounted to a default in proper prosecution of the suit on the part of the plaintiff and the suit, must be deemed to have been decided by the foreign Court ex parte under O. XVII, r. 2, Civil P. O. A suit based on such a judgment to recover the costs from the defendants is maintainable in a Court in Bhopal State and is not barred by s. 58, Bhopal Civil P. O.

Mr. Mohammad Nasiruddin and Molvi Syed Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Khan, for the Respondent.

M. A. Khan, C. J.—This appeal has its origin in a foreign judgment pronounced by the Bombay High Court on July 9, 1934 where the appellant sued the respondent for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 40,000; and the respondent filed a counter claim.

On July 9, 1934 plaintiff's witness named Hariram Swamiram, who was under examination, absented himself whereupon Counsel for the plaintiff applied for adjournment. This being disallowed the Counsel withdrew from the suit with the result that the plaintiff's claim was rejected and she was required to pay the costs of the other party amounting to Rs. 14,834-8. The respondent, failing to realise the decretal amount in Bombay, sued the appellant for the same in the Court of the District Judge, Sehore (Bhopal State) on the basis of the said foreign judgment. The defendant pleaded that a regular suit for the recovery of costs was forbidden in law.

The learned District Judge after a lengthy discussion decided that the withdrawal of the appellant's Counsel from the prosecution of the suit in Bombay High Court amounted to withdrawal of her suit, and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full. In fact, the absence of the appellant's witness on the date fixed for his further examination in the Bombay High Court and the consequent withdrawal of her Counsel from prosecution amounted to a default in proper prosecution of the suit on the part of the appellant. Hence it follows that the suit was decided by the Bombay High Court ex parte under O. XVII, r. 2 of Civil P. O.

The defence plea that s. 53 of Bhopal Civil P. O., did not permit a regular suit for the recovery of costs does not hold good for the simple reason that the plaintiff sought to recover his costs on the basis of a foreign judgment. In British India itself, no doubt, such a suit was barred by s. 47 of Civil P. O.; but Bhopal State being a foreign country within the meaning of s. 13 of Civil P. O., the decrees of Bombay Courts were not executable in the Courts of that State. Therefore, the only alternative left for the respondent was to file a regular suit on the basis of the foreign judgment. The other ground of appeal urged before us is that Bombay High Court's decree in the suit does not fall in the category of a foreign judgment. Under s. 2 (8) of Civil P. O. 'judgment' means the statement given by the judge of the grounds of a decree or order. This definition covers both an order and a decree, and equally holds good whether the decree is passed ex parte or on merits. The appellant has not attacked the foreign judgment in suit on any of the grounds mentioned in s. 27 of the Bhopal State Civil P. O. (corresponding to s. 13 of the British Indian Civil P. O.). Hence the same is conclusive between the parties. Therefore, there is no ground to interfere in the decree of the lower Court. It is ordered that the appeal be dismissed. The appellant to pay the respondent's costs throughout.

Appeal from the Lahore High Court

February 26, 1940

LORD THANKERTON, SIR GEORGE RANKIN AND

MR. M. R. JAYAKAR

JAGAT SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

SANGAT SINGH AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Will—Construction—Absolute estate—Widow held made absolute owner of property—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. XXIII, r. 3—Suit for declaration of title to property—Property outside jurisdiction of Court not included—Compromise—Such property included—Compromise brought on record by date only and not made exhibit—Decree, if nullity for non-registration of compromise—Suit on compromise for possession of property which was outside jurisdiction of Court which passed decree on compromise—O. II, r. 2, if applies—Compromise, if binding—Party acting on compromise, whether can plead that it was result of pressure and undue influence.

A testator by his will made his wife the "exclusive owner" of a certain property. She was to have "all kinds of powers to deal with the property aforesaid. She shall be considered full owner." But towards the end of the will there was a provision that "after the death of my wife, whatever property remains shall be owned by the sons of my brother who shall have no connection or concern therewith. Besides, my wife, shall not be entitled to sell immovable property. The sons of my brother shall also have no such right".

Held, that the prohibition against selling must be disregarded as repugnant to the absolute gift to the wife and that she was made the absolute owner of the property. [p. 442, col. 2.]

In a previous suit the reversioners sued the widow for a declaration that the will in her favour by her deceased husband was not valid and that she had no right to certain properties situated within the jurisdiction of the Court. The suit however, was compromised. The compromise dealt with another property also which was outside the jurisdiction of the Court. Some money was to be paid to the widow. The Court by its decree "ordered that a decree be and the same is hereby passed on the terms and under the conditions embodied in the deed of compromise as a whole with this reservation that the sum stipulated shall be paid into Court within fifteen days from to-day, in case of failure the widow to be entitled to recover that amount by execution." The widow subsequently executed the decree and got the money stipulated in the compromise. The widow also gifted away the property, which was situated beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and which was given to her by the compromise for lifetime only. A suit was instituted by the sons of the reversioners for declaration that the gifts were beyond her power.

The High Court held that by not including in the suit which was compromised a claim to recover possession of these lands the reversioner had forfeited all right therein by virtue of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C.

Held, (i) that had that claim been included in the plaint, the suit could not have been entertained. Moreover so long as that suit was undisposed of it was always possible that the Court, if it thought that there was anything in the point as to O. II, r. 2, would give leave to the plaintiff to amend by including a claim to recover possession of those lands. Consequently O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., did not apply; [p. 443, col. 1.]

(ii) That the Court had jurisdiction to pass a decree in terms of the compromise though it included the property situated outside its jurisdiction. When it was agreed that she should have the lands for her life, there was no doubt or difficulty as to the jurisdiction of the Court to include these lands within the declaration made as to the other lands and assets. It was no longer a question of a decree for possession but merely of a judicial determination as to the reversionary rights of the plaintiff or his descendants. Whether the Court acted irregularly and failed to comply strictly with O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil P. C., mattered nothing. He acted by consent and within his jurisdiction his decree was enforced in execution by the widow and no proceedings had at any time been taken to have it set aside. So the non-registration of the compromise which was referred to by the Court by date though not marked as exhibit, did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to pass the decree that the terms of the compromise should be carried out as a whole. And under Registration Act, s. 17 (i), no question of registration arose as regards decree. 53 Ind. Cas. 534 (2) and Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee (3), relied on. [p. 444, col. 1.]

(iii) Considered as a contract, the compromise was binding on the widow. The decree recorded the compromise though the compromise was not recited textually either in the body of the decree or in a schedule thereto. 53 Ind. Cas. 534 (2) and Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee (3), relied on. [p. 444, col. 1.]

(iv) That the widow took the benefit of the compromise and acted on it for many years before repudiating it. As she not only got rid of the claim of the reversioner to be the sole owner of her husband's lands and other assets, but enforced one of the terms of the compromise against him, there was more than sufficient prima facie evidence that she understood the transaction and that there was no pressure or undue influence. [p. 444, col. 2.]

Order XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., is sufficiently complied with by a reference to the compromise being made in the decree. Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee (3), relied on. [ibid.]

Sir Hari Singh Gour, Kt. and Mr. R. K. Handoo, for the Appellants.

Messrs. J. P. Eddy K. C. and M. H. Rashid, for the Respondents.

Sir George Rankin. — This appeal is brought from a decree of the High Court at Lahore, dated January 31, 1936, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated January 31, 1935, and dismissing the appellants' suit. The subject-matter of the dispute is some 6½ squares of land in the district of Lyallpur in the Punjab, which (as is now admitted) belonged to one Ishar Singh who died childless on October 6, 1905, leaving him surviving a widow Bishan Devi, also a brother's son Sundar Singh who died on January 10, 1922. On February 7, 1929, the widow purported to make a gift of one portion of the land to Sangat Singh (respondent No. 1) and of another portion to a certain Gurdwara (respondent No. 2). The present suit was brought on August 7, 1933, by the appellants, who are three of the four sons of Sundar Singh. The fourth son was made a defendant and is now respondent No. 3. The claim of the plaintiff is for a declaration that the gifts of land to Sangat Singh and to the Gurdwara have no validity or effect beyond the life of Bishan Devi.

Ishar Singh on September 19, 1905, made a will of which probate was granted to Bishan Devi by the District Judge of Peshawar on November 3, 1906. Apart from an interest in the family house at Rawalpindi, Ishar Singh by his will declared himself to be the absolute and exclusive owner of the property which he disposed of thereby. He declared that Sundar Singh, his nephew, was disobedient and of bad character and was to be totally disinherited. He made the following dispositions in favour of his wife :

"4. My wife is Mst. Bishan Devi. She has greatly served me. She has all along been faithful to me. I make this will in her favour that she shall be exclusive (illegible) owner of the following properties after my death :—

(a) Entire cash including pro-notes for Rs. 13,000 and other items.

(b) Liquor, , Charas Opium, etc., of all kinds.

(c) Land, situate in Nathe.

(d) Lands, situate in Lyallpur.

(e) Three-quarter share in Nowshahra property.

(f) All ornaments.

Sundar Singh or any other person shall have no connection therewith, nor shall they interfere in the management thereof. My wife, Mst. Bishan Devi, may manage the said property in whatever way she likes. She shall have all kinds of powers to deal with the property aforesaid. She shall be considered full owner. So long as Malik Arjan Singh is alive he will manage the land in Lyallpur.

7. After the death of my wife, Mst. Bishan Devi, whatever property remains shall be owned by the sons of Sundar Singh. Sundar Singh shall have no connection or concern therewith. Besides, my wife, Mst. Bishan Devi, shall not be entitled to sell immovable property. The sons of Sundar Singh shall also have no such right.

8. The remaining movable or immovable property of mine shall be exclusively owned by my wife, Mst. Bishan Devi."

Mutation of the lands at Lyallpur into the name of Bishan Devi was obtained from the Colonisation Officer on March 13, 1907, but the entry was restricted by the condition "so long as she is alive and does not remarry." This was in accord with the customary law of the parties independently of her husband's will. On November 12, 1906, Sundar Singh filed a plaint in the Court of the District Judge, Peshawar, against Bishan Devi and other defendants. By this plaint as amended he claimed a declaration that the will of Ishar Singh was not valid or binding on him as regards (inter alia) the immovables at Mahal Nathe and Nowshahra, or the stock of liquor and opium, etc., at Peshawar or the Govt. Promissory Notes for Rs. 13,000 in deposit at the Treasury, Peshawar. The sole relief claimed was a declaration and the suit was brought upon a court-fee of Rs. 10 only, though valued for purposes of jurisdiction at over Rs. 26,000. The case made was that the business of dealers in intoxicants, etc., under excise licences was not the separate business of Ishar Singh but a joint family business which had been carried on by him jointly with his brothers and after their deaths with the plaintiff Sundar Singh, and that all the properties had been acquired out of the joint funds of the business. Sundar Singh claimed to be the sole heir to and possessor of the property above mentioned and sued for a declaration "that the will is unlawful and null and void and has no effect upon the rights of the plaintiff who holds proprietary possession over the property in question." The plaint stated that "a separate suit will be brought for recovery of the ornaments, valued at Rs. 15,000, other movable property and lands situate at Lyallpur which are in possession of the defendants."

This suit was compromised in June, 1907, and as the validity and effect of the compromise is now in question it becomes necessary to notice it in detail. On June 9, a petition to the Court of the District Judge was signed by Bishan Devi and by Sundar Singh. It set forth that the parties had made the settlement therein expressed and it concluded "hence this application by way of a compromise is submitted with the prayer that it may be accepted and the case decided in terms thereof." The main terms were that the lands at Mahal Nathe and at Lyallpur should belong to Bishan Devi for her life and on her death to Sundar Singh and his male descendants. An iron safe, a cow and a calf were to belong to Bishan Devi. Sundar Singh was to pay her Rs. 8,150 in cash. Govt. Promissory Notes to the value of Rs. 13,000 deposited in the Treasury were to be entered in the names of the sons of Sundar Singh. Bishan Devi was to be absolute owner of all ornaments, clothes and other movables in her possession. Sundar Singh was to get the book-debts, stock-in-trade and other trade movables and to be liable to pay any debts of Ishar Singh. The petition of compromise was signed at Rawalpindi and was handed over to one Mohan Singh, an Honorary Magistrate, who sent it by post to the District Judge. On June 11 the case came on before the District Judge and Bishan Devi was represented by her agent Jagat Singh and by a Pleader. Sundar Singh was present in person. As appears by the note of the District Judge, Jagat Singh stated to the Court:—

"Met. Bishan Devi signed the compromise in my presence but she subsequently stated that she only accepted it if the Rs. 8,150 was paid at once and if the Rs. 13,000 was invested in a bank. She signed of her own free will knowing the contents of the deed."

By his decree the District Judge "ordered that a decree be and the same is hereby passed on the terms and under the conditions embodied in the deed of compromise dated June 9, 1907, as a whole with this reservation that the sum of Rs. 8,150 shall be paid into Court within fifteen days from to-day in case of failure defendant No. 1 (Bishan Devi) to be entitled to recover that amount by execution."

On some date between June 26 and July 15, 1907, an application for execution was filed by Jagat Singh on behalf of Bishan Devi against Sundar Singh asking that a sum of Rs. 7,535 lying in the Treasury on account of Ishar Singh be paid to Bishan Devi on account of the sum of Rs. 8,150 due to her under the compromise. This application was successful and on July 15, a receipt was given by Jagat Singh on the lady's behalf for Rs. 7,535 received through Court. Other instances of action taken under the compromise are in evidence but need not here be referred to.

The gifts made on February 7, 1929, by Bishan Devi to the first and second respondents on the lands at Lyallpur are contrary to the terms of the compromise of June, 1907, whereby these lands were to belong to her for her lifetime only and she was not to be competent to alienate them. Hence the present suit brought by sons of Sundar Singh on August 7, 1933. The defence of Bishan Devi (original defendant No. 1) was that she was parda-nashin, that she signed a blank paper and not the completed deed of compromise, that her signature was obtained by undue pressure and without independent advice, and that she never agreed to the compromise. She contended further that the compromise could not be put in evidence for want of registration and that the Court at Peshawar was not competent to pass the compromise decree. Other contentions need not now be referred to.

It was maintained for the plaintiffs that the will of Ishar Singh gave to his widow a life interest and no more, and that the plaintiffs were entitled as his nearest reversioners to the declaration which they sought independently of the compromise.

The learned Subordinate Judge dealt with a number of questions which are no longer in dispute. He found (inter alia) that the land at Lyallpur was Ishar Singh's and not his wife's, that the business in which he was engaged was his separate business and not a joint family business, that Sangat Singh (respondent No. 1) was not adopted by him. But in the High Court the issues were narrowed to three questions only, (1) whether by her husband's will Bishan Devi got an absolute interest in the Lyallpur lands, (2) whether the compromise was brought about by coercion and undue influence or whether she signed the deed after fully understanding its contents, (3) whether the deed was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration.

On the question as to the true construction of the will of Ishar Singh the trial Court and the High Court were agreed in holding that its effect was to make Bishan Devi absolute owner of the Lyallpur property. Their Lordships are of the same opinion. The prohibition against selling the immovables is not addressed to the widow only but is extended to the sons of Sundar Singh under cl. 7 and is not in their Lordships' view to be regarded as showing an intention to give to the widow an interest for life or the estate of a Hindu woman, but as a condition which the testator was proposing to attach to an absolute interest. Clause 4, is in clear and emphatic language, consistent only with the gift of an absolute interest, and the phrase "whatever property remains" in the first part of cl. 7 of the will is in keeping with this intention. The prohibition against selling must be disregarded as repugnant to the absolute gift to Bishan Devi. Clause 8 is a residuary clause which does not affect the land at Lyallpur.

It is therefore necessary for the plaintiffs-appellants to rely upon the compromise of June, 1907. The learned Subordinate

Judge held that the deed was admissible in evidence; that the compromise was entered into by Bishan Devi with knowledge of its contents and voluntarily; and that the case of coercion and undue influence was untrue. The learned Judges of the High Court have held that the deed is inadmissible for want of registration and that it has not been established that it was read over to her or that she signed it after fully understanding its meaning or effect. They do not appear to hold that coercion or undue influence has been proved. At the root of their judgment is an opinion formed by them to the effect that by not including in the suit of 1906 a claim to recover possession of the Lyallpur lands Sundar Singh had forfeited all right therein by virtue of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. (Section 43 of the Code of 1882). They are mistaken in supposing that the claim to Rs. 13,000 Govt. Promissory Notes and to the land at Nowshahra was not included in the suit. The plaintiff was on the footing that Sundar Singh was in possession of these and other items and required only a declaration to clear his title; whereas the land at Lyallpur and the ornaments were in Bishan Devi's possession and the claim to them must necessarily be put as a claim to recover possession. In these circumstances their Lordships cannot agree with the High Court in regarding the compromise as bad by reason that Bishan Devi was not advised that she could safely treat the claim of Sundar Singh to the Lyallpur lands as barred. On the contrary, such advice had it been given, would in their Lordships' view have been rash rather than sound. The lands at Lyallpur being situate in the Punjab, outside the District of Peshawar, a claim to relief in respect of them could have been entertained by the District Judge under s. 19 of the Code of 1882. The High Court would seem to have assumed that s. 19 was not merely permissive: also that the claim to recover possession of the Lyallpur lands and the claim to a declaration as regards the other lands were claims in respect of the same cause of action [cf. Payana v. Pana Lana (1)]. Their Lordships think that both assumptions are highly debateable. But in any case the claim of the present appellants as reversioners of Ishar Singh would not have been barred so far as regards the question whether Ishar Singh's will gave to his widow an absolute interest or an interest for her life. Moreover, so long as the suit of 1906 was undisposed of it was always possible that the Court, if it thought that there was anything in the point as to O. II, r. 2, would give leave to the plaintiff to amend by including a claim to recover possession of the ornaments and Lyallpur lands. It does not appear that the lawyers advising Bishan Devi thought anything of the point now taken by the High Court and with all respect to the learned Judges their Lordships cannot regard it as a good one.

By the decree of June 11, 1907, the District Judge had purported to direct that the terms of the compromise should be carried out as a whole. He had not in terms excluded the Lyallpur land from the operative part of the decree and he had not recited the contents of the deed. Though it is clear that his decree was made upon the petition and that both documents would become part of the same record, he had neither marked and exhibited the deed nor scheduled it or a copy of it to the decree. He had referred to the deed by date and in a manner which has given rise to no doubt or difficulty. No proceedings were taken at any time during the next 20 years for having the decree set aside whether on the ground of some defect in the agreement of compromise or some error or irregularity in the decree itself. On the contrary the decree was enforced as to one of the terms of the compromise by execution proceedings taken on behalf of Bishan Devi and it may well be a question whether after taking this advantage under the decree she would have been entitled in equity to have the decree set aside. Under the Registration Act (III of 1877) no question of registration arises as regards decree [s. 17 (i)]. In these circumstances their Lordships agree with the argument of Sir Hari Singh Gour on behalf of the appellants that the first question is one of jurisdiction in the strict sense of the term. Had the learned District Judge at Peshawar jurisdiction to pass this decree as regards the lands at Lyallpur or is his decree so far as regards these lands a nullity which Bishan Devi was entitled to disregard without taking any proceedings to have it set aside or varied? As the learned Judges of the High Court thought that the claim to the Lyallpur lands came within O. II, r. 2, they must have considered that this claim was within the jurisdiction of the District Judge. In any case when it was agreed that Bishan Devi should have the Lyallpur lands for her life, there was no doubt or difficulty as to the jurisdiction of the District Judge of Peshawar to include these lands within the declaration made as to the other lands and assets. It was no longer a question of a decree for possession but merely of a judicial determination as to the reversionary rights of Sundar Singh or his descendants. Whether the District Judge acted irregularly and failed to comply strictly with s. 375 of the Civil P. O., of 1882 matters nothing. He acted by consent and within his jurisdiction: his decree was enforced in execution by Bishan Devi and no proceedings have at any time been taken to have it set aside. He might have acted more strictly in compliance with the terms of s. 375 had he first amended the plaint by including the reversionary interest in the Lyallpur lands within the declaration sought, but the mere fact that he could have done so shows that he was not devoid of jurisdiction.

In these circumstances it is clear that in 1928 Bishan Devi was not entitled to treat as a nullity this judicial determination to the effect that she had only a life interest in the lands at Lyallpur.

Their Lordships, considering the compromise of 1907 (as the Courts in India have considered it) as a contract, are further of opinion that it was valid and binding upon Bishan Devi. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the District Judge had not acted correctly under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. O., (meaning s. 375 of the Code of 1882) and had not ordered the compromise to be recorded. Their Lordships have already noticed that the decree directs effect to be given to the whole compromise and have dealt with the position so created. But in any view the decree in their Lordships' opinion recorded the compromise though the compromise was not recited textually either in the body of the decree or in a schedule thereto. In Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. (2), the Board was careful to avoid laying down any method of compliance with s. 375 of the Code of 1882 as the only method. Lord Buckmaster was at pains to say that "their Lordships are not aware of the exact system by which documents are recorded in the Courts in India," and it was not intended by pointing out one "perfectly proper and effectual method" to alter or nullify the rights of parties which for many years past had depended on the previous Indian practice being treated as valid. That s. 375, was sufficiently complied with by a reference to the compromise being made in the decree appears from the judgment delivered by Lord Watson on behalf of the Board in Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee (3), where it was said that "the order of the learned Judge if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise would have been judicial evidence available to the appellant that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of the land now in dispute." (See also Hemanta Kumari's case (2), (supra) at p. 247 of the report).

The only remaining question is whether Bishan Devi entered into the compromise voluntarily and with understanding of its effect. It does not appear that she was pardanashin in the strictest sense, and her evidence is that of an intelligent woman. She took the benefit of the compromise and acted on it for many years before repudiating it. As she not only got rid of the claim of Sundar Singh to be sole owner of her husband's lands and other assets, but enforced one of the terms of the compromise against him, there is more than sufficient prima facie evidence that she understood the transaction. It is satisfactorily proved that the terms of the compromise were settled after much haggling in the course of which Jagat Singh conveyed her instructions to the retired District Judge Bhagat Narain Das, who was acting as conciliator between the parties and who witnessed her signature to the petition of compromise.

The case that she signed a blank paper is, in their Lordships' opinion, disproved. They reject as worthless the evidence of Jagat Singh on this point and also the evidence to the effect that she was brought to agree by his threat to cease acting for her in the suit. The allegation that undue pressure was brought upon her by certain members of the baradri (brotherhood) is the only matter which requires serious consideration upon this part of the case. It is said that she was told that certain members of the family would not take part in the marriage ceremonies of her sister's son, Nidhan Singh (brother of Jagat Singh), unless she compromised with Sundar Singh. But as the Subordinate

Judge noticed there is no reason to think that this threat if made would have greatly troubled Bishan Devi. Her own evidence is that she said at the time that she did not care and that "if they would not let the marriage take place let them do so." The learned Judges of the High Court do not appear to find that undue influence was used but proceed upon the view that Bishan Devi is not proved to have understood the compromise or to have voluntarily entered into it. After 20 years and more, when Bhagat Narain Das is dead, direct oral evidence of the explanation of the petition can hardly be expected. The High Court, largely because of the argument as to the effect of O. II, r. 2, on the lands at Lyalpur, thought that the compromise was one-sided. Also they mistakenly thought that the sum of Rs. 8,150 was to be paid to Bishan Devi out of the Rs. 13,000 (which is not the case of either party). The Rs. 13,000 consisted of Govt. Promissory Notes which were to be put in the name of the sons of Sundar Singh, and the sum of Rs. 7,535 realised in execution was a different matter. Their Lordships agree with the trial Judge in holding that Bishan Devi entered into the compromise voluntarily. She appears to have been surrounded with legal advisers and in Bhagat Narain Das, admittedly a man of high standing and good reputation, had a family friend specially competent to give her sound and practical advice.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored. The first and second respondents will pay the appellant's costs in the High Court and of this appeal,

Interest—Interest added to amount due when new transaction is agreed between parties which includes payment of interest as acknowledged debt—Whether objectionable—Usurious interest—State of Johore—24 per cent. interest held excessive and unreasonable when loan was amply secured—Precedents—Privy Council appeal from State of Johore—English decisions, binding effect of.

Where a loan has been incurred for interest and this interest is added to the amount agreed to be due when a new transaction is agreed between the parties which includes the payment of interest as an acknowledged debt this is not in principle open to any sound objection. Lyle v. Chappell (1) and Paton v. The Inland Revenue Commissioners (2), relied on.

Where in a State of Johore in certain transactions of loan and charge the interest charged was 24 per cent. such interest being capitalized on each transaction and made payable by monthly instalments, all the loans and charges being amply secured and the contract contained a very harsh term giving power to the money-lender to enforce payment of the loan and interest if any instalment became due and unpaid:

Held, that the rate of interest at 24 per cent was unfair and unreasonable between the parties.

English decisions are not binding, either in fact or in law on a question arising in an appeal from a judgment in the State of Johore. Nevertheless, the reasoning of Judges in the English Courts may prove helpful in solving a similar problem arising in that State.

Messrs. C. T. LeQuesne K. C. and H. H. Maddocks, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. N. Gray K. C. and C. D. Myles, for the Respondents.

Lord Fairfield.—This is a consolidated appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal at Johore Bahru in the State of Johore reversing the decision of the trial Judge, Mr. Justice Mills.

It may be convenient to say at once that their Lordships are satisfied that the judgment of the trial Judge was wrong, that its reversal by the Court of Appeal was right and ought to be affirmed, except in one respect which will be dealt with later in this judgment.

It will save their Lordships the trouble of stating the names of appellants and respondents, where they differ, if they refer to the appellants collectively as the money-lenders and the respondents as the borrowers.

By originating summonses dated November 23, 1936, the money-lenders made application to the Court of the Judge at Johore Bahru for an order for the borrowers to show cause why the several rubber estates which had been charged to the money-lenders by certain instruments of charge should not be sold at public auction, subject to the terms stated in each summons.

The borrowers by their affidavit in answer asked the Court to say that the several transactions to which the originating summonses related were usurious and unfair, and that the interest charged was excessive; they also complained that compound interest was charged although there was ample security and they asked for an order that the transactions should be re-opened under the Usurious Loans Enactment.

The borrowers also complained that their signatures to the charges were obtained by undue influence. As this claim was abandoned when the case came before the Court of Appeal it is unnecessary for their Lordships to say anything about it. The loans and charges with which the present appeal is concerned are identified in the evidence by the letters (e), (n) and (r). The borrowers also appealed with regard to loans identified by letters (o), (p) and (q). It was agreed that the loans identified by the letters (o), (p) and (q) should stand or fall by the decision in this appeal with reference to the transactions identified by the letters (e), (n) and (r).

By the Usurious Loans Statute in force at the date of each of the impeached transactions it was provided as follows:—

"(1) Where, in any proceeding to which this Enactment applies, whether ex parte or otherwise the Court has reason to believe (a) that the interest is excessive and (b) that the transaction was between the parties thereto substantially unfair, the Court may exercise all or any of the following powers;

(1) re-open the transactions; take an account between the parties and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of excessive interest.

(2) notwithstanding any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation re-open any account already taken between them, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest and if anything has been paid or allowed to account in respect of such liability, order the creditor to repay any sum which it considers to be repayable."

In all the transactions of loan and charge which fall to be considered in the present appeal the interest charged was 24 per cent. Such interest charged at that rate was on each transaction capitalised and made payable by monthly instalments.

The only evidence before the trial Judge which affects the question whether 24 per cent. was or was not excessive and unfair as between the parties consisted of (1) the affidavit of Loo Thon Poo, one of the borrowers, (2) the affidavit of Vaithyalingham, the valuer, which was not contradicted by any affidavit on the part of the money-lenders, and (3) the affidavit of Cheong Hock Chye which also was unchallenged by any affidavit in opposition. In the last mentioned affidavit it was stated by the deponent that in the case of trust securities where a loan is not permissible if it exceeds two-thirds of the value of the property charged as at the date of the loan, the rate of interest charged varied from 6 to 9 per cent. simple interest, but was never more than 9 per cent. In the case of other securities it is stated in this affidavit that interest charged had been a little more but not very much more than 9 per cent., both in Singapore and the State of Johore. The facts stated in this affidavit were not challenged by any affidavit in opposition filed by or in behalf of the money-lenders. If this evidence be accepted the inference is plain that where the security is not a trust security the interest usually charged on a fully secured loan in the State of Johore had only been a little in excess of 9 per cent. All the loans and charges with which this appeal is concerned, namely, (e), (n) and (r), were amply secured by charges on rubber estates which had been well-looked after and kept in good order.

In their Lordships' opinion the trial Judge was wrong in concluding that the charge of 24 per cent. interest was not unreasonable and excessive and was not unfair as between the parties. They agree with the Court of Appeal that his decision in this respect was wrong and that the Court of Appeal was right in reversing it. Their Lordships have come to this conclusion for the following reasons:—

(1) The trial Judge was wrong in treating the reported decisions of the Courts of Johore and India as evidence of the facts and inferences of fact stated in these reports.

(2) The learned Judge failed to give effect to the unchallenged evidence of Cheong Hock Chye as regards the rate of interest usually charged in the State of Johore.

(3) The learned Judge failed to attach sufficient weight to the consideration that in all cases the loans were amply secured.

(4) In considering whether the several transactions with which the proceedings before the trial Judge were concerned were substantially unfair between the parties the trial Judge failed to consider and give effect to the fact that in all these transactions the contract contained a very harsh term giving power to the money-lenders to enforce payment of the loan and interest, if any instalment became due and unpaid.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal was right, except in so far as it required the interest throughout to be reckoned as simple interest.

Their Lordships also think it right to make some observations on one of the passages contained in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. In the second paragraph of page 55 of the record the Acting Chief Justice in delivering the oral judgment of the Court of Appeal said:

"Before us Counsel agreed that in Johore 18 per cent. was in the past quite a common rate of interest on charges, but now by Enactment No. 4 of 1937, which came into force on March 16, 1937, s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Enactment, it is provided that until the contrary is proved if the interest exceeds 12 per cent. per annum in the case of secured, and 18 per cent. per annum on unsecured loans, the Court shall presume that the interest charged is excessive and the transaction substantially unfair."

Before the trial Judge the borrowers' Counsel said: "We submit to 18 per cent, because it is the highest allowed but the Court may think it too much." It seems probable that the Counsel for the borrowers in the Court of Appeal meant no more than what he had stated in the argument before the trial Judge. Even if this be an incorrect interpretation of what Counsel said in the Court of Appeal it does not follow that because 18 per cent, had been in the past quite a common rate of interest on charges it could not be regarded as excessive and unfair, it is not unusual for borrowers to submit to a rate of interest which is excessive and unfair rather than run the risks of litigation, including it may be the risk of having to incur the expense of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. If by the words quoted above the Court of Appeal meant that the Enactment of 1937 should be used to construe the earlier enactment they were certainly wrong, but they may merely have meant to use the later statute as some evidence that 24 per cent. was considered excessive by a representative section of the Protectorate, in which case their observations quoted above would not be liable to serious criticism.

Their Lordships ought now to consider the evidence relating to the several loans and charges with which this appeal is concerned in order to determine on which of these transactions the question arises whether the charge of compound interest, that is to say interest on interest, ought to be allowed. In the case of the transaction of loan and charge identified as (e) the amount of cash paid to the borrowers by the money-lenders was £3,000, the capitalised interest was £600 payable by monthly instalments. No part of the capital or capitalised interest on this loan was paid by the borrowers. These sums, whether capital or interest, were included in loan (f) and again in loan (g); and in loan (n) a balance of interest on (e) was included as still undischarged. The evidence relating to all transactions by way of loan and charge are conveniently summarised in Ex. O. Schedule A, which is to be found on pp. 88 and 89 of the record. No. 5 in this schedule relates to transaction (e). No. 11 relates to transactions (l), (m) and (n) and No. 12 to transactions (o), (p), (q) and (r). It is clear that transactions (l), (m) and (n), and (o), (p), (q) and (r) included interest charged on interest.

Their Lordships are of opinion where a loan has been incurred for interest and this interest is added to the amount agreed to be due when a new transaction is agreed between the parties which includes the payment of interest as an acknowledged debt this is not in principle open to any sound objection. As one member of this Board, when sitting in the Court of Appeal, pointed out in the case of Lyle v. Chappell (1), it ought not to make any difference to the validity of a transaction by way of a renewal of a loan, whether the parties go through the form of payment by the borrower of the whole amount due and a relending of the same amount by the money-lender, or the transaction is carried out without any such payment by treating the amount of principal and interest still due as a debt acknowledged by the borrower together with an undertaking by the borrower to pay the amount of the agreed debt.

That this view is right in principle is confirmed by the following passage in the speech of Lord Atkin in Paton v. The Inland Revenue Commissioners (2) where his Lordship used these words in relation to a case involving six monthly settlements:

"If you settle that is agree the balance at the end of six months there is nothing to prevent your making a fresh start with the total debt which no doubt includes interest and agreeing to forbear from suing for the whole debt at a rate of interest meantime."

Their Lordships do not fail to bear in mind that English decisions are not binding either in fact or in law on a question arising in an appeal from a judgment in the State of Johore. Nevertheless, the reasoning of Judges in the English Courts may prove helpful in solving a similar problem arising in that State. It is only in this sense that their Lordships rely in the authorities referred to above.

The appellants cited the decision of Channell, J. in Carrington Ltd. v. Smith (3) in support of their appeal, and the qualified approval of that decision by the Court of Appeal in Reading Trust v. Spero (4). It is apparent from the judgment of Lord Fairfield (then Lord Justice Greer) and from that of Lord Justice Slesser, that Channell, J. was right in taking into account the fact that a willing and intelligent borrower had agreed to the interest charged, but that this was only one of the circumstances to be taken into account and was not of itself conclusive.

Their Lordships are not satisfied by the evidence in the present case that the borrowers fully understood what they were agreeing to and in any case their Lordships are of opinion they ought not to disturb the finding of the Court of Appeal that 15 per cent. interest was the right interest to allow under all the circumstances proved at the trial.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the order of the Court of Appeal in so far as it relates to the three transactions (e), (n) and (r) with which alone this appeal is concerned, should be affirmed. The order made by the Court of Appeal was as follows:—

"These appeals coming on for hearing this 5th day of April, 1937, before the Honourable Mr. Justice Howes, Acting O. J. S. S. The Honourable Mr. Justice Horne and the Honourable Mr. Justice Laville in the presence of the Honourable Dato Roland Braddell and Mr. S. O. Goho of Counsel for the Appellants-Chargees and the Honourable Mr. R. Williamson and Mr. M. V. Pillai of Counsel for the Respondents-Chargees and all parties having agreed to hear both appeals as one appeal, upon reading the Memorandum of Appeal filed herein and what was alleged by Counsel it is ordered that the appeal do stand for judgment and this appeal standing for judgment this May 1, 1937, in the presence of Mr. S. O. Goho and Mr. C. G. Toh of Counsel for the Appellants-Chargors and Mr. M. V. Pillai of Counsel for the Respondents-Chargees and this Court being of the opinion that interest charged by the Chargees in respect of the advances made to the Chargors herein was excessive and usurious under all the circumstances of the case and also being of the opinion that the judgment of the trial Judge dated January 23, 1937 given herein was wrong doth hereby allow this appeal and set aside the order of the trial Judge mentioned above and doth declare that all the transactions and accounts whatsoever, arising as from June 18, 1927, Between the Chargors (Appellants); and the Chargees (Respondents) ought to be re-opened and set aside, and that the Chargors (Appellants) ought to be relieved from payment of any sum in excess of the sums actually advanced by the Chargees to the said Chargors and interest thereon at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum simple interest; and that if any such excess has been paid by the Chargors, the Chargees ought to repay the same to the Chargors; and the Court does order and Judge the same accordingly. And it is ordered that the following account be taken, that is to say, an account of all sums actually advanced by the Chargees to or for the use of the Chargors on and from June 18, 1927 and of all sums, received by the Chargees from the Chargors in respect of any such advance, and that on taking such account the Chargors be charged with interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum (simple interest) on the sums from time to time owing to the Chargees; and that the balance due from either party to the other be certified. And if any sum is found due to be paid by the Chargors to the Chargees such sums shall stand charged upon the lands of the Chargors now charged to the Chargee, in the same proportion as the amounts now charged on the said lands are distributed thereon, and such sums shall carry interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum until payment. And if the amount so certified and the interest due thereon is not paid on or before July 1, 1937, the said lands shall be sold by public auction, under the direction of the Court, with liberty to apply for such direction as may be necessary."

Their Lordships are only concerned with the loans and charges identified by the letters (e), (n) and (r); so far as these transactions are concerned their Lordships are of opinion that the order of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed, but varied by striking out the words "simple interest." This will have the effect of making the charge of 15 per cent. payable on the sums from time to time acknowledged to be owing by the borrowers to the lenders and will thus be allowing interest on interest contrary to the views expressed by the Court of Appeal in their judgment, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed subject to the variation with regard to interest already mentioned.

With regard to the costs, their Lordships are of opinion, that the costs of the appeal to His Majesty will be reasonably met by an order allowing the respondents nineteen tenths of their costs, and their Lordships will advise His Majesty accordingly.

D.

Order accordingly.

Appeal from the Supreme Court of Ontario
(Appellate Division)

October 12, 1939

LORD THANKERTON, LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, LORD WRIGHT, LORD ROMER, SIR LYMAN POORE DUFF (CHIEF JUSTICE OF CANADA)

FRANCIS DAY & HUNTER LTD.—
APPELLANTS

versus

TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX CORPORATION, LTD. AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS

Copyright—Musical composition—Talkie film adopting title of song but not repeating in any form its words—Whether infringement of performing right in musical composition—Passing off—Such use of title, if constitutes “passing off.”

There cannot be an infringement of performing right in a musical composition (assuming it to exist) unless there has been a public performance of the musical composition by the defendant. A musical composition is performed by audible reproduction, by the voice or by musical instruments or by mechanical methods of reproduction. But where not a word of the song is repeated in any form in the talkie film except that the title is thrown on the film at the outset, this does not constitute infringement of performing right in musical composition.

In general a title is not by itself a proper subject-matter of copyright. As a rule a title does not involve literary composition and is not sufficiently substantial to justify a claim to protection. That statement does not mean that in particular cases a title may not be on so extensive a scale and of so important a character as to be a proper subject of protection against being copied. Where the theme of the film is different from that of the song there is no ground in copyright law to justify the claim to prevent the use of the title of the song for the film which is too unsubstantial to constitute an infringement, especially when used in so different a connection.

It cannot be said that in no circumstances can there be a “passing off” by the use of the same title for a literary, artistic or musical work though it is difficult to imagine such a case where there are no circumstances calculated to mislead other than the mere title. A title may, however, be used in the case of a book or newspaper under such conditions that persons may be deceived into buying the defendant's book or newspaper under the impression that they are buying that of the plaintiff. Similarity of name may be strengthened by similarity in make up, and in subject-matter, and by other circumstances. Nor is such a claim limited to things sold, though it is commoner in that class of case. It is not impossible that there might be “passing off” of such a nature that persons might pay to go to a performance of the defendants' work under the impression that they were going to witness the plaintiff's work. Such cases are perhaps not very likely to occur, but there may conceivably be the same element of likelihood of deception, whether designed or not, as to involve an invasion of the plaintiff's Common Law rights and a disturbance of his business interests. But the thing said to be passed off must resemble the thing for which it is passed off. A frying pan cannot be passed off as a kettle.

Where a talkie film uses the title of a song but the theme of the film is different from that of the song and the song is not sung at any performance, there is no “passing off.”

Messrs. K. E. Shelley, K. C. and P. Stuart Bevan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. J. Thompson, K. C. and E. J. Mac Gilliray, K. C., for the Respondents.

Lord Wright.—In 1892 a song entitled “The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo” was published in London. It consisted of three verses, with a chorus and was written and composed by Fred Gilbert. Many people remember the original publication. Both words and music were of the most common place character, but the music went with a jaunty swing which gave it great vogue and popularity, especially when performed by Charles Coborn. The song consisting of words and music was duly registered at Stationers Hall in London and acquired copyright under the Copyright Act of 1842. But the performing right was not acquired, because of the failure to comply with the conditions imposed by the English Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1882, which required that the proprietor of the copyright if he desired to acquire and retain the right of public representation or performance should print upon the title page of every published copy a notice to the effect that the right of public representation or performance was reserved.

In the song the singer recounts how he went to Monte Carlo to raise his winter's rent, but was so successful at the tables that he had lots of money, went to Paris, and swaggered about as a millionaire. The words of the title are repeated at the end of the chorus.

Gilbert, the writer and composer died intestate in 1903. Under the then existing law in England the copyright would have expired in 1934, but under the Copyright Act, 1911, the period was changed into one of 50 years from the author's death, that is until 1953. For the residue of this extended period, that is from 1934 to 1953 the copyright vested not in the assignees of the right but in the author or his personal representatives. In the present case these were two daughters. One of these in 1935 transferred one-half of her right to the appellant company, whose title so far as it goes is not questioned in these proceedings.

Sometime about 1935 there was exhibited in various theatres in Canada a motion picture entitled "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." The plot of that picture was based on a comedy in three acts by Ilia Surgutchoff and F.A. Swann entitled "The Gamble," but also at different times called "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo," "Le Jeu" and by other titles. The motion picture represented the plot of the comedy, which consisted of the story of an exiled Russian Prince, working as a taxi driver in Paris, who went to Monte Carlo to try his luck with money subscribed by his compatriots in Paris. He had a wonderful run of luck. Then followed an elaborate story of his love affair with a woman. He went back to Monte Carlo, was unsuccessful and lost all his money. He suspected that the object of his affection was guilty of double dealing. He returned to Paris and to his taxi cab. Eventually he and the girl settled their difficulties and all ended happily.

To an unprejudiced observer no two things could appear more dissimilar than this song and this elaborate motion picture, except for the bare fact that each bears the title "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." The appellants, however in 1936 brought an action against the two respondents, the former of whom had distributed and rented the film in Canada, while the latter exhibited it in its cinematograph theatres in Canada. The claim in the action was for damages for infringement of the appellants' copyright in the song by performance in public. But without any formal amendment the scope of the action became extended without objection so as eventually to include also a claim for infringement of the literary copyright and for "passing off."

In the Supreme Court of Ontario, McEvoy, J., who tried the action decided against the appellants in respect of the performing right, but decided in their favour and awarded damages for the use of the "title and theme" of the musical work. He said nothing on the issue of "passing off." In the Appellate Division, the Court of Appeal agreed with McEvoy, J., in rejecting the claim so far as regards the performing right, but reversed his decision in respect of the literary copyright, and held that there had been no infringement. The Court also rejected the claim for "passing off." It will be necessary in this appeal to discuss the three heads of claim independently.

The claim for infringement of the appellants' performing right in the song fails in their Lordships' opinion on grounds both of law and of fact. As to the law, the appellants' claim was expressly based on the Imperial Act of 1842, which gave to the owner of copyright under that Act, a right to protection in Chanda. But it was contended on behalf of the respondents that apart from difficulties arising from the course of Canadian copyright legislation which need not here be discussed, the appellants whose claim in the action was based solely on the Act of 1842, could not in any event claim the protection of that Act because as has been stated above, they and their predecessors in-title had failed to publish on each copy of the song the printed notice required by the Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1882. Now it is true that the Act of 1882 did not in terms extend to Canada, but in their Lordships' judgment it did so by necessary implication and effect. It was in the nature of an amendment to the Act of 1842 and had the effect of regulating the rights under that Act in respect of public performance. It imposed a new condition for the acquisition and retention of the performing right, whether in England or in any other place where the copyright was based upon and derivative from the English right. Thus the Act of 1842 cannot be relied on where performing right is in question according to its original bare terms but only as qualified by the Act of 1882.

On this narrow ground of law, apart from other considerations, the appellants must fail in their Lordships' opinion. This agrees with the decision of McEvoy, J. and the Court of Appeal. But in truth the appellants' claim fails on the facts. There cannot be an infringement of performing right in a musical composition (assuming it to exist) unless there has been a public performance of the musical composition by the defendant. But it is idle to suggest here that by anything the respondents have done they have performed the song in any sense. The motion picture it is true, is what is called a talkie film. But not a word of the song is repeated in any form except that the title is thrown on the film at the outset. It will be considered later if that constituted an infringement of the literary copyright in the film. But to say that this bare fact was a public performance of a musical composition is abhorrent to common sense. A musical composition is performed by audible reproduction, by the voice or by musical instruments or by mechanical methods of reproduction. Nothing of the sort can be predicated here.

The claim for infringement of the literary copyright fails equally, but for other reasons. It is not claimed that there has been any copying of the letterpress or musical notation, except the words "The Man who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" which constituted the title of the song, and appear as the title of the film. What is relied on as infringement is the use of these words as the title of the film. It is clear that they have been used by the respondents as the title of the film both in the actual production and in the advertisements issued on behalf of the respondents. The respondents, however, say that the use of these words is too unsubstantial a matter to constitute an infringement of copyright and that there is no copyright in a title. They also rely on the recent decision of this Board in Mansell v. Star Printing and Publishing Co. of Toronto. (1). That decision was by itself held fatal to the appellant's claim by the Court of Appeal. That Court held that the effect of the decision was that under the Canadian Copyright Act, 1921, which came into force in 1924 all rights of copyright existing in Canada in virtue of Imperial legislation might be converted into rights existing by virtue of Dominion legislation but only by complying with the conditions under the Act of 1906, which was not done either in Mansell or in the present case. In the words of Middleton J. A. "It was Canadian rights only that were preserved. All inchoate rights existing by virtue of Imperial legislation came to an end." But Counsel on behalf of the appellants sought to distinguish the decision in Mansell and contended that it did not apply in the present case. In Mansell, it was contended, what was in question was copyright in pictures, to which no copyright attached under the Act of 1842. It was first granted in England under the Fine Arts Copyright Act of 1862, but that Act did not apply to Canada. There could, therefore, be no copyright in such works in Canada under that Act. There was no copyright in such works until the passing of the Canadian Copyright Act of 1906, and then only subject to the conditions imposed in that Act which had not been complied with. In the present case, however, as the appellants contended, their only claim to copyright was based on the English Act of 1842, the rights under which did not depend on the performance of conditions under any Canadian Act; that copyright, it was said, subsisted at the date specified as the date of the commencement of the Act of 1921, and by the terms of the Canadian Act of 1921 rights under that Act took the place of the rights under the English Act of 1842, so that at the material dates these latter rights were vested in the appellants in the circumstances stated above. In this way, it was said, the appellants did not rely upon and did not need to rely on any Dominion copyright legislation except in so far as the Act of 1921 gave a substituted copyright for the right existing under the Act of 1842.

Their Lordships do not think it necessary in the present appeal to determine this controversy, which raises questions of difficulty and importance on the law, because the appeal can, in their opinion, be decided on another ground. Assuming, but not deciding, that the appellant company is entitled to the copyright in Canada which it claims, it is, in their Lordships' judgment, not entitled to succeed in its claim that the respondents have infringed that right. The copying which is complained of is the use of the title, and that is too unsubstantial in the facts of this case to constitute an infringement. The appellant's contention was put as high as that copyright in a title infringed by the application of that title to a work of a different character from that of the work to which it was originally applied. In the present case the title was originally applied to a musical composition, whereas it has been applied by the respondents to a motion picture or a film. The argument of the appellant company would be the same, it seems, if the application of the title complained of had been to a picture or a statue. On this reasoning it would be said that the title "Adam" applied to a work of statuary would be infringed if that title were used as that of a novel. These and other anomalous consequences justify the broad principle that in general a title is not by itself a proper subject-matter of copyright. As a rule a title does not involve literary composition and is not sufficiently substantial to justify a claim to protection. That statement does not mean that in particular cases a title may not be on so extensive a scale and of so important a character as to be a proper subject of protection against being copied. As Jessel, M. R., said in Dicks v. Yates (2), [which as Lindley, L. J., said in Licensed Victuallers Newspapers Co. v. Bingham (3), virtually overruled on this point Weldon v. Dicks (4)], there might be copyright in a title "as for instance a whole page of title or something of that kind requiring invention." But this could not be said of the facts in the present case. There may have been a certain amount, though not a high degree, of originality in thinking of the theme of the song, and even in choosing the title though it is of the most obvious. To "break the bank" is a hackneyed expression, and Monte Carlo is or was the most obvious place at which that achievement or accident might take place. The theme of the film is different from that of the song and their Lordships see no ground in copyright law to justify the appellants' claim to prevent the use by the respondents of these few obvious words which are too unsubstantial to constitute an infringement especially when used in so different a connection.

The appellants' Counsel, however, have strenuously contended that though this might be the position under English or Canadian law before 1931, it was changed in Canada by an amendment in that year of the Canadian Act of 1921, which added a new definition to those contained in s. 2 of the latter Act, namely "(v) work shall include the title thereof when such title is original and distinctive." It was in virtue of this definition that McEvoy, J., held that there was infringement and he awarded damages to the appellant company. The Court of Appeal reversed that holding. Middleton J. A., did not think it necessary to decide whether the amendment applied to existing copyrights. "It is admitted" he said "that prior to this Act no such right existed." He did not think that for purposes of this case the Act of 1931 had changed the law.

Their Lordships are prepared to assume for purposes of this appeal that the amendment applied to existing copyrights: they will likewise assume that the title was original in the sense that it had not been copied from another work. They are content for purposes of this appeal to adopt the definition given by Maclean, J., in Kantel v. Grant Nisbit & Auld Ltd. (5), though they wish to reserve the question how far that definition can be accepted as sufficient in other cases. It is however, difficult to define satisfactorily the word "distinctive," since it cannot mean merely that the title is used to identify the particular work. In this connection regard must be had to s. 3 of the Act of 1921 which defines copyright as the "right to produce or reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof". The definition (v) does not, in their Lordships' judgment, mean that the title of a work is to be deemed to be a separate and independent "work." Work is to include "the title thereof" that is to say, the title is to be treated as part of the work, provided that it is original and distinctive whatever these words may connote. When that definition is read with s. 3, the result is that to copy the title constitutes infringement only when what is copied is a substantial part of the work. This view would agree in effect with what was said by Jessel, M. R., in Dick v. Yates (2) (supra) in the words quoted above and would apply to a case such as a title covering a whole page of original matter, or something of that nature, but would not justify such a wide extension of copyright as the appellant company has contended for, or the holding of McEvoy, J., on this point. It is said that so to construe the definition is to treat it as adding nothing to the law. But the definition may have been inserted to settle doubts and to avoid it being said that in no circumstances could a title receive protection. In any event their Lordships do not think that the new definition (v) entitles the appellants to succeed in this case.

There remains a third point which has been argued on behalf of the appellants; namely, that the respondents have been "passing off" the exhibition of their motion picture as a performance of the song. This startling claim was not pleaded and is dealt with only by the Court of Appeal who disposed of it in summary fashion; "Certainly the moving picture was not represented as the copyright song. No one could be misled or defrauded by what was here done." In these words Middleton J. A. dismissed the claim.

to say that in no circumstances can there be a "passing off" by the use of the same title for a literary, artistic or musical work though it is difficult to imagine such a case where there are no circumstances calculated to mislead other than the mere title. A title may, however, be used in the case of a book or newspaper under such conditions that persons may be deceived into buying the defendant's book or newspaper under the impression that they are buying that of the plaintiff. Similarity of name may be strengthened by similarity in make up, and in subject-matter, and by other circumstances. Nor is such a claim limited to things sold, though it is commoner in that class of case. It is not impossible that there might be "passing off" of such a nature that persons might pay to go to a performance of the defendants' work under the impression that they were going to witness the plaintiff's work. Such cases are perhaps not very likely to occur, but there may conceivably be the same element of likelihood of deception, whether designed or not, as to involve an invasion of the plaintiff's common law rights and a disturbance of his business interests. But in their Lordships' opinion it is enough to state these elementary principles to see how inapplicable they are to the subject-matter of this appeal. The member of the public who is supposed to be likely to be deceived, must, to start with, be assumed to know what he was wanting to see or hear. Thus in the present case he must be presumed to know that what he wanted was to hear the song "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." It seems inconceivable that when or if he bought a ticket for the motion picture, he imagined he was going to hear a performance of the familiar song. The two things are completely different, and incapable of comparison in any reasonable sense. The thing said to be passed off must resemble the thing for which it is passed off. A frying pan cannot be passed off as a kettle. In Canada, what was advertised was the film. There was no hint that the song was going to be sung. Indeed it was not sung at any performance. If it had been sung, it would presumably, on the assumptions made by their Lordships, have been an infringement of the performing right, but, if that were possible, it would have made the claim for passing off even more preposterous, because the assumed victim would have got what he desired, namely, a performance of the song.

On all these grounds their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Rule 17 which has been added to O. XLV by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of India Laws) Order, 1937, assumes that a certificate under s. 205 of the Constitution Act has already been given.

Where a certificate had not been granted at the time the judgment was pronounced, the party interested might bring the matter to the notice of the Court by an application, but that will not be an application under O. XLV.

Federal Court would reject a request to exercise for the first time a discretion which the High Court could have been, but was not asked to exercise under s. 12 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, (1938), a section which, the High Court has not at any time held to be void, as it has held other sections of the same Act to be.

When Counsel take on themselves the responsibility of making statements of fact to the Court, the Court is entitled to assume that those statements are true in every particular, so that it may implicitly rely upon them. This is a rule which admits of no qualification. It is an honourable obligation of the Bar and of great value in the administration of justice.

Judgment.—This appeal must be dismissed. It appears that in the proceedings before the High Court the point which the Counsel for the appellant now seeks to raise was never mentioned and it is not clear on what grounds the certificate under s. 205 of the Constitution Act was obtained from the High Court. The application made under O. XLV of the Civil P. C., to the High Court was quite irregular, because r. 17, which has been added to O. XLV by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of India Laws) Order, 1937, assumes that a certificate under s. 205 of the Constitution Act has already been given. No such certificate was in existence when the application was made. It may be that where a certificate had not been granted at the time the judgment was pronounced, the party interested might bring the matter to the notice of the Court by an application, but that will not be an application, under O. XLV. We do not know what question of interpretation of the Constitution Act was in the opinion of the High Court involved in the case and the record throws no light upon the point.

Counsel for the appellant told us that the only point which he desired to argue was the application of s. 8 of the new Bihar Act of 1939 (Act VII of 1939). It is the first time in any Court that the appellant has sought to make such a submission, either under s. 8 of the Act of 1939 or under the corresponding section of the earlier Act of 1938. In his petition of appeal he does not even refer to that section, but to different sections altogether. We were told that this was a printer's error, but we have seen a typescript copy of the petition, with references to those sections inserted in manuscript and initialled by the appellant's agent. We were asked to allow the petition to be amended, but in the circumstances we see no reason for allowing any amendment, and even if we had done so, we should certainly have rejected a request that we should exercise for the first time a discretion which the High Court could have been, but was not asked to exercise under s. 12 of the earlier Act, a section which, so far as we are aware, the High Court has not at any time held to be void as it has held other sections of the same Act to be.

We have one other observation to make. Counsel for the appellant in answer to questions put to him by the Court, made what purported to be statements of fact relating to matters arising out of the litigation, which on further enquiry were found to be no more than surmises or guesses on his part. When Counsel take on themselves the responsibility of making statements of fact to the Court, the Court is entitled to assume that those statements are true in every particular, so that it may implicitly rely upon them. This is a rule which admits of no qualification. It is an honourable obligation of the Bar and of great value in the administration of justice, and we trust that we shall not have occasion to draw attention to it again.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7—Suit instituted on March 1, 1937 i. e., before amendment of Act in 1938—Law applicable—Plaintiff in possession of house in suit, requiring cancellation of sale deed alleged to be obtained by fraud—Court-fee payable.

Suit brought on March 1, 1937, before the amending Court Fees Act of 1938 was passed, will be governed by the provisions of the Act as it stood unamended.

The provisions of the Court Fees Act as it stood before the amending Act was passed and even those of the amending Act clearly show that the Legislature has made a distinction in the amount of court-fee between suits for possession of immovable property and those seeking reliefs other than possession in respect of immovable property, the court-fee required in the case of the latter suits being much less than that required in suits for possession.

Where the plaintiff is herself in possession of the house in suit and all that she requires is cancellation of the sale deed which she said was obtained from her by fraud and undue influence, in such a suit, she can not be required to pay ad valorem court-fee on the market value of the house which is the court-fee payable on a suit for possession. The plaintiff can therefore be allowed to pay court-fees only on declaratory relief. 180 Ind. Cas. 61 (1) and Samiya Malavi v. Minammal (2), distinguished.

S. O. A. against the order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated October 29, 1937.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellant.
Mr. Mohd. Ayub, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's second appeal against a judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Gonda, decreeing the appeal of the plaintiff-respondent against the rejection of her plaint by the Munsif of Gonda.

The plaintiff-respondent owned two houses one of which was bigger than the other. She sold one of these houses to the appellant by a sale deed dated June 13, 1936. The suit from which this appeal arises was brought by her for cancellation of the sale deed on the ground that she meant to sell the smaller house to the defendant but that she came to know that the defendant had by fraud and undue influence got the bigger house entered in the sale deed. The relief claimed in the plaint as it originally stood was as follows—

Relief (a).

"It may be declared that the sale deed executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant was obtained by fraud and undue influence and that thereby no interest had accrued to the defendant in the pucca house No 275 and 924."

It appears that No. 924 was a mistake for No. 934 and the correct number was subsequently entered. In para. 11 of the plaint she stated that the value of the house was Rs. 1,500, but that as the suit was a declaratory one, a court-fee of Rs. 15 was being paid.

The defendant objected to the valuation of the suit by the plaintiff on the ground that it was exaggerated. A Commissioner was appointed to find out the value of the house in suit and his report was that the house was worth Rs. 1,500. After that the plaintiff-respondent put in an application for amendment of the plaint so as to reduce the valuation of the suit to Rs. 200, the amount of the sale consideration entered in the sale deed.

The learned Munsif rejected this application and was of opinion that the plaintiff should pay an ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 1,500 the valuation originally put by her on the house. As the plaintiff was unable to pay ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 1,500 her plaint was rejected. The plaintiff appealed against the order rejecting her plaint and the learned District Judge held that the correct court-fee payable by the plaintiff was on Rs. 200. He therefore accepted the appeal and allowed the claim to be amended and held that the court-fee of Rs. 15 paid by the plaintiff was sufficient. With these findings the suit was remanded to the trial Court for decision on the merits. Against this order the present appeal has been brought by the defendant.

I am of opinion, that the order of the learned District Judge is perfectly correct. As the suit was brought on March 1, 1937, before the amending Court Fees Act of 1938 was passed, it will be governed by the provisions of the Act as it stood unamended. If the relief claimed by the plaintiff be considered to be a declaratory relief the court-fee paid by her was quite sufficient. If on the other hand, as is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant, the suit be considered to be one to obtain a declaratory decree with a consequential relief then under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the old Act, the amount of the court-fee should be determined according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint and as the value now in the plaint is Rs. 200 the court-fee of Rs. 15 is the proper court-fee to be paid in the case. It is contended that the plaintiff should not have been allowed to change the valuation originally put by her on the suit, but Rs. 1,500 which was the value of the house in suit was not the proper valuation to be put on the suit. The provisions of the Court Fees Act as it stood before the amending Act was passed and even those of the amending Act clearly show that the Legislature has made a distinction in the amount of court-fee between suits for possession of immovable property and those seeking reliefs other than possession in respect of immovable property, the court-fee required in the case of the latter suits being much less than that required in suits for possession. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff is herself in possession of the house in suit and all that she requires is cancellation of the sale deed which she said was obtained from her by fraud and undue influence. In such a suit, therefore, she could not be required to pay ad valorem court-fee on the market value of the house which is the court fee payable on a suit for possession. The order of the learned District Judge, therefore, allowing the plaintiff to amend her plaint by putting a more correct valuation on her suit was in the circumstance of the case perfectly proper. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on the cases of Baij Nath Singh v. Sri Nath Kuar, (1939 O. W. N., 184) (1) and Samiya Mavali v. Minammal, (I. L. R. 23 Mad., 490) (2), but neither of these cases supports the contention put forward by the appellant in the present case. In fact in 23 Mad., 490 (2) which was similar to the present case, it was held :—

"We think s. 7 (iv) (c) must be taken to apply. (1) 1939 O W N 184; 180 Ind. Cas. 61; 1939 O L R 109; 11 R O 225; A I R 1939 Oudh 125; 14 Luck 536.

(2) 23 M 490.

The case is, therefore, one in which the valuation given by the plaintiff is the valuation to be accepted."

This so far from supporting the contention of the appellant goes against him.

I consider the order of the learned District Judge quite correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

November 1, 1939

BLACKER, J.

ARNOLD MONTEATH MATHEWS—

CONVICT—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 297, 423 (2)—Trial by jury—Misdirection—Duty of Court—Charge of cheating—Failure to explain to jury necessary ingredients—Whether misdirection—Interference by High Court—'Erroneous' in s. 423 (2), meaning of—Criminal trial—Verdict of jury—Verdict erroneous on one of the charges only—Whole trial, if must be set aside.

In a trial by jury it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the necessary ingredients which the prosecution has to prove before the charges can be held to be established. This is particularly necessary in a case where the main charges are of cheating. Where the cheating consisted mainly of false representations to the complainant by the accused that he would arrange to have certain contracts obtained for himself and for the complainant and the allegation of the prosecution is clearly that at the time he made these representations they were false in the sense that he had no intention of fulfilling them, it is clearly necessary to point out to the jury the difference between a promise which is not intended to be kept at the time it is made and a promise which is intended to be kept at the time it is made but is subsequently broken. In the latter case the offence would not necessarily be one coming under the legal definition of cheating. Failure to do so amounts to misdirection.

If the High Court finds in a case of trial by jury that there is a misdirection it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find, it cannot interfere. One meaning of word 'erroneous' s. 423 (2), Criminal P. O., is that if the Court after examining the evidence finds that, even if the misdirection had not occurred, the jury could not reasonably without being perverse or unduly foolish have come to any other decision it will not interfere. It is, however, clear from s. 423 (2), that even if there is a misdirection, the High Court is not entitled to alter or reverse the verdict or verdicts unless these verdict or verdicts are "erroneous" by reason of such misdirection and before the High Court interferes it must also find that there has been a failure of justice under s. 537. Emperor v. Edward William Smither (3), 81 Ind. Cas. 249 (4), 88 Ind. Cas. 178 (5), 148 Ind. Cas. 553 (6) and 139 Ind. Cas. 873 (7), relied on, Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (1), distinguished and commented upon.

Where the verdict of the jury on one of the charges only is found by the High Court to be erroneous, it can set aside that verdict and uphold conviction on other charges on which the verdict is not found to be erroneous. It need not set aside the whole trial.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated June 12, 1939.

Mr. K. L. Gauba, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nazir Hussain, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant in this case was tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Lahore with the aid of a jury on three charges. It appears to me to be necessary to set out these charges in full. They are as follows:

First.—That you, on or about August 20, 1937, at Simla, cheated Lala Sita Ram, P. W., of Rs. 1,500 on false representations that you would arrange to have coolie contracts for the said Sita Ram in partnership with yourself at Railway Stations Howrah and Sealdah and that you knew that the Railway Board Officers would do you a favour as you had been Publicity Officer in the said department, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 420, I. P. O., and within the cognizance of Court of Session.

Secondly.—That you, on or about October 5, 1937, at Simla, cheated Lala Sita Ram, P. W., of Rs. 1,500 on false representations that you would arrange to have coolie contracts for the said Sita Ram in partnership with yourself at Railway Stations Howrah and Sealdah and that you knew that the Railway Board Officers would do you a favour as you had been Publicity Officer in the said department, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 420, I. P. O., and within the cognizance of Court of Session.

Thirdly.—That you, on or about October 5, 1937, at Simla, fraudulently used as genuine a certain document, to wit, agreement, Ex. P. U., which you knew or had reason to believe at the time you used it to be a forged document, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 471 read with s. 467, I. P. O., and within the cognizance of Court of Session."

On each of these three charges the jury returned a verdict of guilty and the learned Sessions Judge passed a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment on each of the two charges under s. 429, I. P. O., and two years' rigorous imprisonment on the charge under s. 467/471, I. P. O.; the sentences to run concurrently.

On appeal before me the learned Counsel for the appellant has adopted three lines of argument. The first is that there has been a misdirection, the second that evidence has been improperly excluded and thirdly, that on the evidence the conviction was in fact erroneous.

Coming to the first question, the point taken by Counsel is that in order to comply with s. 207, Criminal P. O., the Judge, should concisely but lucidly explain to the jury the ingredients of the section under which the accused is being charged and should also explain the meanings of any terms in the section which are not likely to be immediately understood by a layman. There is plenty of authority in support of the view put forward by Counsel for the appellant. I think that in the present case it was clearly the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the necessary ingredients which the prosecution had to prove before the charges could be held to be established. This is particularly necessary in a case like the present where the main charges are of cheating. The criminal definition of cheating is not exactly what an ordinary layman in the ordinary use of the English language would understand by the term. In the present case the cheating consisted mainly of representations to the complainant by the accused that he would arrange to have certain contracts obtained for himself and for the complainant and the allegation of the prosecution is clearly that at the time he made these representations they were false in the sense that he had no intention of fulfilling them. In a case of this sort, it is clearly necessary to point out to the jury the difference between a promise which is not intended to be kept at the time it is made and a promise which is intended to be kept at the time it is made but is subsequently broken. In the latter case the offence would not necessarily be one coming under the legal definition of cheating. Similarly, on the third charge he had to explain to the jury what was a forged document and what constituted a criminal use of it. The learned Sessions Judge did not point this out to the jury and to that extent therefore I am compelled to find that there has been a misdirection. It is however clear from s. 423 (2), Criminal P. C., that even if there is a misdirection, the High Court is not entitled to alter or reverse the verdict or verdicts unless these verdict or verdicts are "erroneous" by reason of such misdirection. It is further clear from s. 537, Criminal P. C., that before the High Court interferes it must also find that there has been a failure of justice.

The question therefore which arises in this case is whether the Court can itself consider the evidence and decide upon the merits of the case, whether the decision is correct in spite of the misdirection and, if so, confirm a conviction, or whether the only course open to the Court in such a contingency is to set aside the verdict and order a re-trial.

For some time the view held, particularly in the Calcutta High Court, appears to have been that the Court could not go into the case itself but could only order a fresh trial. In Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (1) it was held that "erroneous" was not synonymous with "wrong in fact." The Bench appear to have interpreted the word as meaning "vitiated by the error of misdirection." The principle was laid down in this and other rulings of the Calcutta High Court, on the supposed analogy of a Privy Council case from New Zealand, that to hold otherwise would be to substitute the decision of the Court for the verdict of the jury. It seems to me, however, if I may say so with all respect, that the Privy Council case dealt with a system of jurisprudence which was apparently quite different from that obtaining in India and with a statutory provision the language of which was not really similar to that of s. 423 (2), Criminal P. C. It is clear that the Criminal P. C., in several places does put a Judge into the position of having to substitute his decision for that of a jury and the view held by the High Court in Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (1) seems, if I may say so with all respect, to savour of arguing in a circle. If the question for decision is whether the meaning of the words of the Indian Statute are that a Judge can or cannot substitute his decision for that of a jury I would suggest that it is begging the question to say that he cannot do so because that would amount to his doing so.

Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (1) was followed in some cases in Calcutta and was followed in 1917 in Allahabad in Emperor v. Ikram-ud-Din (2). It was however very soon dissented from by the Madras High Court in Emperor v. Edward William Smither (3) a judgment of 1902. In 1925 the Sind Court also took the other view in Topan Das v. Emperor (4) and in 1926 the Nagpur Court in Rmprasad v. Emperor (5) took the same view as Sind and Madras. Bombay has also held that the Judge has full powers to go into the case in such circumstances once he finds that there has been a misdirection. Ramchandra v. Emperor (6). Even the Calcutta High Court has also come round to this view in a recent case reported in Saroj Kumar v. Emperor (7). The latter and better view therefore seems to me to be that if the Court finds there is misdirection it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find it cannot interfere.

It next remains to be seen what is meant by the term "erroneous." The general trend of the authorities to which I have referred appears to suggest that it is practically synonymous with "incorrect," which is the normal dictionary meaning. I would however suggest that it is possible, perhaps to go a little further and say that one meaning of s. 423 (2) would appear to be that if the Court after examining the evidence finds that, even if the misdirection had not occurred, the jury could not reasonably without being perverse or unduly foolish have come to any other decision it will not interfere. Before however I deal with the evidence there is another point which I must consider. The defence applied for the summoning as a defence witness of His Excellency Sir Henry Craik Bart, the Governor of the Punjab. It would appear that at first the Judge was inclined to call this evidence but subsequently found that he could not do so in view of the statutory provision of s. 306 of the Govt. of India Act of 1935. Counsel has argued that the learned Judge's interpretation of this section is incorrect. I do not consider it is necessary to decide this point as after ascertaining from Counsel what evidence Sir Henry Craik was expected to give I am very clearly of opinion that that evidence would have been quite irrelevant in the present proceedings. The mere fact that at some previous period of time the appellant may actually have been thinking of trying to get one of these contracts would raise no justifiable inference that on either of the relevant dates in this case he had any intention of doing so. In fact it is clear that this is just the type of irrelevant evidence which a Judge should not allow to come before the jury. I may also further say that one or two possibly unguarded remarks by Counsel for the appellant whilst dealing with this point rather suggested that the real reason for summoning Sir Henry Craik as a defence witness may have been a desire to attempt to prejudice the jury by giving them the impression that the appellant enjoyed the support and patronage of so distinguished and important a personage.

I now come to the main point in the case, and that is whether having found that there is in fact a misdirection I should or should not set aside the verdicts given by the jury. For this purpose I have been through the evidence. It is clear that in coming to the verdicts to which they did come the jury must have accepted as true the version of the transactions given by Lala Sita Ram, the complainant, and rejected those given by the appellant and his wife, who was a co-accused. (After discussing evidence his Lordship proceeded.) The Crown Counsel's contention is that the tone of Ex. P-A and the language of the second paragraph of Ex. P-G showed clearly that the appellant had already formed the intention of cheating Sita Ram on this relevant date. Exhibit P-A is possibly not very strong by itself, but Ex. P-G is important. The middle paragraph of this letter to the Secretary of the Railway Board states that certain members of the Railway Board had already promised to help the writer to get this contract. The evidence on the subsequent transactions leaves no real doubt that this statement was in fact false and the question arises how Mathews could send such a letter to the Railway Board knowing that it would immediately be seen to contain a completely false statement. One answer to this might be that he had had no intention of sending or actually posting this letter but was forced to do so by the fact that Sita Ram insisted to accompany him to the post office. Having posted it he made an effort, which proved successful, to get it back intact. However this may be, the question still remains whether if the jury had had it clearly put to them that with regard to the first charge they had to find that the representations were at that time false, they might or might not have drawn the inferences which are suggested by this evidence. I think that it must be conceded that, although I myself see no real doubt on this point, it is impossible to say that the jury might not have felt some such doubt. With regard to the second and third charges, however, the matter is very clear. Here there is a mass of evidence which, if the jury believed it and it is clear from their verdicts that they did believe it they could not have failed without being completely perverse or completely foolish, to hold that on October 5, at any rate the representations were definitely false to the knowledge of the appellant and that the document Ex. P-U was used by him at a time when he knew perfectly well that it was a forged document. The result therefore will be seen to be that with regard to the verdict on the first charge, it cannot be stated with absolute certainty that if there had not been this misdirection, the jury must have come to the same conclusion. With regard to the second and third charges it is clear that notwithstanding the misdirection the verdict of the jury cannot be held to be erroneous and that they must have come to the same verdict if they had been directed as they should have been.

Counsel for the appellant has argued that on such a finding I should set aside the whole trial and set aside all three verdicts and send the whole case back for re trial. This view, however, I am not prepared to accept as it does not seem to be supported either by the language of the statute or by the authorities. My decision therefore in this appeal is that for the reasons given I set aside the verdict and the conviction and the sentence on the first charge, but uphold the verdicts with the consequent convictions on the second and third charges. With regard to the first charge in view of the fact that the sentences were concurrent I do not consider it necessary to direct that there shall be a fresh trial. The offences committed were certainly serious, but I think that a total period of one year's imprisonment would meet the ends of justice and therefore I reduce the sentence on the third charge to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The concurrent sentence on the second charge is maintained. The appellant will surrender to his bail.

Section 6, Bom. District Police Act, does not confer on the Prov. Govt. the right to confer on the Additional Superintendent of Police powers arising outside the Bom. District Police Act, and the powers arising under s. 6, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act are outside the Bom. District Police Act. The words "specially empowered by Govt. in this behalf" in s. 6, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act only cover the Assistant or Deputy Superintendent of Police. So that a Magistrate of the First Class or a District Superintendent of Police can exercise the power without any special authority from Govt.; but there is nothing said about an Additional Superintendent of Police. Although the Additional District Superintendent of Police is carrying out all the powers under the Bom. District Police Act, of a District Superintendent of Police, he is not in fact a District Superintendent of Police, and he cannot be given power to issue a warrant under s. 6. Section 17, Bom. General Clauses Act, 1904, does not apply to this case at all.

Hence the Additional Superintendent of Police, Panch Mahals District, has no power to authorize the issue of a search warrant under s. 6, and where the conviction turns upon the presumption arising under s. 7 on a search under s. 6, the conviction must be set aside, as the presumption does not arise.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, J.—This is an application in revision against the conviction of the applicant under s. 4, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act of 1887. The applicant was convicted by the Resident Magistrate, First Class, Godbra, and the question of law which arises is whether a special warrant can be issued under s. 6, Gam. Act, by the Additional Superintendent of Police of Broach and Panch Mahals. The position of such Additional Superintendent of Police is this. Originally Broach and Panch Mahals were separate revenue districts, but in 1933 they were amalgamated. But, as appears from the Govt. Resolution of January 3, 1934, it was, not considered advisable to amalgamate the two Police charges, and accordingly it was provided that the Panch Mahals should be retained as a separate Police charge under the control of an Additional Police Superintendent; and that position is still maintained.

Now an Additional Superintendent of Police can be appointed by Govt. under the Bom. District Police Act of 1890, s. 6, as amended by an Act of 1920. Section 6 as amended provides that a Prov. Govt. may appoint for each district a Superintendent, an Additional Superintendent and such Assistant and Deputy Superintendents of Police as it may think fit; and an Additional Superintendent of Police may, by a general or special order of Govt. be empowered to exercise and perform in the district for which he is appointed or in any part thereof, all or any of the powers and duties under this Act of a Superintendent of Police. I presume that the Additional Superintendent of Police of Broach and Panch Mahals has been given by Govt. all the powers and duties of a Superintendent of Police under the Bom. District Police Act in respect of the District of Panch Mahals, but s. 6, Bom. District Police Act does not confer on the Prov. Govt. the right to confer on the Additional Superintendent of Police powers arising outside the Bom. District Police Act, and the powers arising under s. 6, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act are outside the Bom. District Police Act. The provisions of s. 6, Gam. Act, are these:—

"It shall be lawful for a Police Officer elsewhere (than in the City of Bombay) not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector of Police authorized by special warrant issued in each case by a Magistrate of the First Class or a District Superintendent of Police or by an Assistant or Deputy Superintendent of Police specially empowered by Govt. in this behalf."

I think the words "specially empowered by Govt. in this behalf" only cover the Assistant or Deputy Superintendent of Police. The repetition of the word 'by' seems to indicate that. So that a Magistrate of the First Class or a District Superintendent of Police can exercise the power with out any special authority from Govt.; but there is nothing said about an Additional Superintendent of Police. Although the Additional District Superintendent of Police is carrying out all the powers under the Bom. District Police Act, in respect of Panch Mahals of a District Superintendent of Police, he is not in fact a District Superintendent of Police, and he cannot be given power to issue a warrant under s. 6, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act. The learned Govt. Pleader seeks to get out of the difficulty by relying on s. 17, Bom. General Clauses Act, 1904, which is somewhat obscurely worded, but provides that for the purpose of indicating the application of a law to every person or number of persons for the time being executing the functions of an office, it is sufficient to mention the official title of the officer at present executing the functions. Well, the officer at present exercising the functions is the Additional Superintendent of Police, but the only officer mentioned in the section is the District Superintendent of Police. Therefore, it seems to me clear that s. 17, Bom. General Clauses Act, 1904, does not apply to this case at all. The difficulty which has arisen is no doubt purely technical but, in my opinion, the Additional Superintendent of Police, Panch Mahals District, has no power to authorize the issue of a search warrant under s. 6, Bom. Prev. of Gam. Act; and as the conviction in this case turned upon the presumption arising under s. 7, Gam. Act on a search under s. 6, the conviction must be set aside, as the presumption does not arise. The fine, if paid, to be repaid.

The possession of one co-heir is possession not only for himself but also for other co-heirs. The fact that he had without their consent, purported to mortgage not only his own share but also theirs is not in itself an indication that his possession had become adverse to theirs. The mere fact that a Receiver was appointed in the mortgage suit brought by the mortgagee against the mortgagor co-heir would not prejudice them in the enjoyment of their right they being persons with paramount rights, not parties to the action and actually in possession of those rights. Evelyn v. Lewys (1), relied on.

In a suit for the declaration of their rights as co-owners, they need not seek any remedy against the Receiver. The claim of the mortgagee in such a suit that he had a charge on their property which they must redeem is entirely irrelevant. The co-heirs need not ask for the further relief of partition. 65 Ind. Judgment.—The facts of the case are set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It cannot be disputed that the possession of Sidiq Ahmed of this property was possession only for himself but also for his co-heirs. The fact that he had without their consent, purported to mortgage not only his own share but also theirs is not in itself an indication that his possession had become adverse to theirs; they had apparently received no notice of the mortgage. By purporting to mortgage their share Sidiq Ahmed did not necessarily declare that in his view they no longer had any interest in the property; his conduct might mean no more than that he desired to take advantage of his mortgagee's ignorance of the fact that they were co-heirs. When a Receiver was appointed in the mortgage suit brought by the appellant against Sidiq Ahmed that appointment could not prejudice them in the enjoyment of their right they being persons with paramount rights, not parties to the action and actually in possession of those rights: see Evelyn v. Lewys (1). In a suit for the declaration of their rights as co-ownerse they need seek no remedy against the Receiver, and they did not in fact ask for any remedy against him. The person who was impugning their title was the appellant who was seeking to bring their property to sale after obtaining a mortgage decree against Sidiq Ahmed. At the time they filed their suit the sale had not taken place. The suit was filed on February 27, 1936, and the sale took place on February 29, 1936. In the suit for the declaration of their title the appellant not only denied the title of the respondents but further alleged that even if they were part owners of the property he had a charge on their property which they must redeem. This allegation was denied by the plaintiffs and the trial Court was at some pains to decide the matter. Of course such a matter was entirely irrelevant to the suit, and it was unfortunate that the trial Court whilst finding that the plaintiffs respondents were owners of a certain share of this property, should have refused to grant them a decree because they would not admit the charge claimed by the defendant-appellant. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the suit was in reality a suit under O. XXI, r. 103, Civil P. O. This is quite an untenable argument. At the time the suit was filed there had been nothing in the nature of a sale and the plaintiff had not been ousted from possession. It has been suggested that the respondents ought to have asked for the further relief of partition. It is however not apparent why it is necessary to them to ask for this further relief. At the stage at which matters still stood at the time they filed their suit, there was no reason why they should not be content to remain in joint possession of the property with Sidiq Ahmed: see also Joy Narayan Sen v. Srikantha Roy (2).

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 10—Association for advancing and protecting business interests of members—Running of Produce Exchange Department and charging of fees from members for services rendered—Whether doing business within meaning of s. 10—Saving from payments by members, if profit or gain.

Where an Association is an Association for the purpose of advancing and protecting the business and trading interests of its members there is a certain mutuality between the Association and its members. The basis of mutuality is not destroyed because one of the objects of the Association is to further not only the particular interests of its members, but of trade and commerce outside the particular city where the Association is formed. Hence the activities of the Association in maintaining and running the Produce Exchange Department and charging fees for the various services rendered by it to its members do not amount to doing business within the meaning of s. 10, Income Tax Act. Such a case does not fall outside that class of cases where a number of individuals for the common good combine to provide by common sacrifices a common organization to do for them more efficiently as a body what they could do individually but less efficiently for themselves and the fact that from the payments made by the members themselves there is a surplus or saving upon the year's working, does not constitute that surplus or saving a profit or gain. 185 Ind. Cas. 323 (1) and Thomas v. Richard Evans and Co. Ltd. (3) relied on. Liverpool Corn Trade Association Ltd. v. Monks (2), *Carlisle and Siloth Golf Club v. Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Applicant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Opponents.

Devis, J. C.—Four questions are referred to us under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay and Sind, in connection with the assessment of the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association. They are as follows:

"(1) Whether the Assistant Commissioner correctly held that the activities of the Association in maintaining and running the Produce Exchange Department and charging fees for the various services rendered by it to its members amounted to doing business within the meaning of s. 10 of the Act.

(2) Whether the amount of Rs. 16,233 realised by the Association by charging a fee of annas eight per each tender of 25 tons under bye-law 36 was profits or gain from business on which tax was payable under the above section or any other section of the Act.

(3) Whether the amount of Rs. 13,686 derived by sale of samples for qualitative analysis under bye-laws 45 et seq. in connection with the above Department constituted profit or gains on which tax was payable under the said s. 10 or any other section of the Act.

(4) Whether the amount of Rs. 3,625 levied by the Association from its members by way of penalty for trading in contravention of its rules and regulations constituted profit or gains on which tax was payable under s. 10 or any other section of the Act."

The case falls to be decided on much the same lines as the case in Ref. No. 34 of 1937 [Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind and Baluchistan v. Karachi Chamber of Commerce (1)] which I have just dealt. The Association is an Association for the purpose of advancing and protecting the business and trading interests of its members. That there is a certain mutuality between the Association and its members appears admitted by the learned Commissioner himself for the subscriptions have been found not liable to taxation. The argument therefore that the basis of mutuality is destroyed because one of the objects of the Association is to further not only the particular interests of its members but of trade and commerce outside Karachi appears to have little weight. The primary purpose of the Association is to protect and further the interests of its own members and in furthering trade interests outside Karachi the Association is furthering the interests of its members.

For the purpose of advancing the interests of its members, the Association has established a clearing house and for those specially interested in the grain trade it has established a produce exchange department, and this clearing house and this department are financed by the fees paid by the members who utilize its services. One item, which is the subject of dispute, Rs. 16,233, is derived from a fee of annas eight per tender of 25 tons charged from members by the clearing house on delivery orders; the second item of Rs. 13,686 is derived from the sale of samples tendered against the delivery contracts which members must submit for analysis to the clearing house, but it appears to me that no distinction can be drawn between the samples, the property of the members or their money value, when as matter of mutual convenience and agreement these samples are sold. The third item is a sum of Rs. 3,625 derived from penalties for trading in contravention of the rules and regulations of the Association, and which appear to me to be merely a domestic matter between the members and the Association and to go into the coffers of the Association as the property of the members. This case is not complicated by services to the public as in Ref. No. 34 of 1937 [Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind and Baluchistan v. Karachi Chamber of Commerce (1)]. Rs. 5 were recovered from a non-member and one other small amount from another non-member, but those two payments are too trivial to affect the case.

The Association has no share-holders, no share capital and no dividends can be declared. It is this that distinguishes it from the case in Liverpool Corn Trade Association Ltd. v. Monks (2). The "Association" means the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association incorporated under s. 26, Indian Companies Act, and consists of those Indian dealers, merchants, manufacturers, firms and so on, referred to in Art. 4 of the Articles of Association. The incorporated body, the legal entity and the members of the Association are, therefore, identical. The Association does business only for its members, and is paid by them in proportion to the services rendered. It is difficult to see then how this case falls outside that class of cases where a number of individuals for the common good combine to provide by common sacrifices a common organization to do for them more efficiently as a body what they could do individually but less efficiently for themselves: see Thomas v. Richard Evans and Co., Ltd. (3), and the fact that from the payments made by the members themselves there is a surplus.

or saving upon the year's working, does not appear to me to constitute that surplus or saving a profit or gain, and if it is not a profit or gain, then it appears to me to matter not whether the common purpose of the association is the furtherance of trade or art or sport. Whether a surplus or saving is a profit or gain does not depend upon the objects of the association, but upon the origin of this surplus or saving, upon the existence of a common endeavour and a common fund. It is the principle of self-help in practice.

We have not had referred to us any question of brokers' fees nor any question of interest upon members' deposits, but we think this case can be clearly distinguished from the case in Liverpool Corn Trade Association Ltd. v. Monks (2) where there was a separate legal entity, a capital of Rs. 60,000 and where even the subscription of its members were taxable as income; and is akin to the two cases in Carlisle and Siloth Golf Club v. Smith (4) and National Association of Local Govt. Officers v. Watkins (5). It is true that in that case Finlay, J., (as he then was) remarked at the outset of the case that the Association was unincorporated and that that was a matter of fundamental importance, but it does not follow that the learned Judge would have come to the same conclusion in a case where the individual members of the Association as such utilize the services of their own organization for which they themselves pay and which as an association they themselves provide. For these reasons, and for the reasons more fully set out in Ref. No. 34 of 1937 [Commissioner of Income-tax Sind and Baluchistan v. Karachi Chamber of Commerce (1)], I would answer all four questions referred to us in the negative. The assessee is entitled to the costs, including the fee of Rs. 100.

U PIKE—APPLICANT

versus

MA KHIN THEIN—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Defamation—Complaint against Pleader—Presumption—No defamation unless remark is made wantonly or from malicious or private motive.

The Court should presume, when a complaint is made against a legal practitioner for defamation, that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith, and there can be no defamation unless the circumstances show that the remark was made wantonly, or from a malicious or private motive. 92 Ind. Cas. 737 (1), relied on.

Mr. E Maung, (1), for the Applicant.

Order.—The applicant in revision, U Pike, a Lower Grade Pleader, has been charged with defamation in the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Nyaunglebin. The person who complained of being defamed, Ma Khin Thein, first brought a case against Ma E Khin and others of abuse under s. 504, I. P. C., (Criminal Summary Trial No. 44 of 1939 of the First Additional Magistrate, Daiku). Her complaint there was that Ma E Khin in a quarrel called her, first, a nuisance, and then a prostitute. In the course of that case Ma E Khin's Pleader, U Pike, cross-examined Ma Khin Thein and asked her, first, whether she was a spinster and when she said "Yes," again asked her if she did not before have a husband (min lin yabude mahoak la). The Burmese words used may connote a secret intrigue with a man as well as a regularized cohabitation, and I think, would normally be understood as an innuendo. It is admitted in Ma Khin Thein's own complaint, and again in her evidence, that U Pike had received instructions to this effect from his client, Ma E Khin, and Ma E Khin herself, who was a co-accused (discharged), accused of instigating the alleged defamation, said in her examination that she had given this instruction to her Pleader, though she said that she had not instructed him to put the question. As was said in the case referred to by the Magistrate, McDonnell v. Emperor (1) (bottom of pp. 530 and 533) by both the learned Judges who heard that case, the Court should presume, when a complaint is made against a legal practitioner for defamation, that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith, (the instructions admittedly were given here and that there can be no defamation unless the circumstances showed that the remark was made wantonly, or from a malicious or private motive. There is nothing to show that that is the case here. The evidence goes to show that the question was asked merely on instructions given. It will therefore be ordered in revision that the charge against the applicant, U Pike, of defamation be quashed.

No. 2—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 107, 111—
"Abetment" includes conspiracy and aiding—A and B conspiring to assault C—B inflicting grievous hurt on C's companion during assault and without any instigation from A—A, if liable under s. 111, for causing grievous hurt to C's companion.*

The definition of abetment in s. 107, I. P. C., includes not merely instigation, which is the normal form of abetment, but also conspiracy and aiding, and those three forms of abetment are dealt with in the proviso to s. 111.

Where an act is abetted, and the abetment takes the form of instigation of an act, and a different act is done, that different act must be a probable consequence, and committed under the influence of the instigation; and where the abetment takes the form of aiding or a conspiracy, the different act must be a probable consequence and also with the aid or in pursuance of the conspiracy. To make the accused liable under s. 111, the Crown must show, not only that the assault on the complainant was a probable consequence of the conspiracy to assault the complainant but also that it was done in pursuance of that conspiracy.

Where A and B conspire to assault C and during the assault B without instigation from A stabs C's companion who comes to his rescue, and inflicts grievous hurt, A is not liable under s. 111 as the stabbing cannot be said to be in pursuance of the conspiracy to assault C.

Cr. R. Ap. against the conviction and trate, Fourth Court, Bombay.

Messrs. G. C. O'Gorman and G. K. Gadgil, for the Accused.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a revision application against the accused's conviction by the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, under ss. 326 and 109 read with s. 111,
I. P. C. The case raises a question on the construction of s. 111. The facts are that the present applicant and two others considered that they had a moral claim on a man named Ichhanna to extract Rs. 10 from him, and they were proceeding to extract those ten rupees by force. The present applicant and a man named Shanta beat Ichhanna with their fists, and another man named Sunderrao threatened him with a knife. Thereupon Ichhanna's companion, the complainant, intervened, and Sunderrao with his knife stabbed him on the ear and inflicted grievous hurt. Sunderrao has been convicted, and the question is whether the present applicant is guilty of that assault on the complainant by virtue of s. 111, I. P. C. S. 111 provides that when an act is abetted and a different act is done, the abettor is liable for the act done in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had directly abetted it. Then there is a proviso in these terms:

"Provided the act done was a probable consequence of the abetment, and was committed under the influence of the instigation, or with the aid or in pursuance of the conspiracy which constituted the abetment."

It is to be observed that the definition of abetment in s. 107, I. P. C., includes not merely instigation, which is the normal form of abetment, but also conspiracy and aiding, and those three forms of abetment are dealt with in the proviso to s. 111. The section comes to this. Where an act is abetted, and the abetment takes the form of instigation of an act, and a different act is done, that different act must be a probable consequence, and committed under the influence of the instigation; and where the abetment takes the form of aiding or a conspiracy, the different act must be a probable consequence and also with the aid or in pursuance of the conspiracy. The present applicant certainly did not instigate Sunderrao to stab the complainant, nor did he aid in such stabbing; but there was no doubt a conspiracy to assault Ichhanna. If the present applicant is to be liable under s. 111, the Crown must show, not only that the assault on the complainant was probable consequence of the conspiracy to assault Ichhanna but also that it was done in pursuance of that conspiracy. I do not see how it can be said that the stabbing of the complainant was in pursuance of the conspiracy to assault Ichhanna. The learned Magistrate did not discuss the words "in pursuance of the conspiracy." He only discussed the question whether the stabbing of the complainant was a probable consequence of the assault upon Ichhanna, and he considered that it was. I am not sure that I should agree with that view; but, in any case, assuming that it was a probable consequence, I am unable to see how it can be said that the stabbing of the complainant was in pursuance of the conspiracy to assault Ichhanna. In my opinion, the present applicant was not liable to be convicted under s. 111, I. P. C. The application therefore must be allowed. Bail bond cancelled. Fine, if paid, to be repaid.

Sen, J.—I agree.

LABH SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS

Sardar GURBAKHS SINGH AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Custom—Question of fact—Proof of—Custom (Punjab)—Onus—Kalals of village Dewatwal in District Ludhiana, held do not follow custom in matters of alienation of ancestral property.

Custom is not a matter of inference but of fact. A custom to be legal must be proved to have been in existence for a time preceding the memory of man. 169 Ind. Cas. 909 (5), relied on.

The burden of proof always lies on the party alleging a custom and the burden is all the more heavy where the tribe to which that party belongs does not usually depend on agriculture but follow a variety of occupations. 175 Ind. Cas. 87 (4), relied on.

Kalals of village Dewatwal in the Ludhiana District, are not primarily an agricultural tribe and are not governed by custom in the matters of alienation of ancestral property. They have not by their association with the agricultural tribes in the village since 1841 adopted their customs. The mere fact that the Kalals in some other places have adopted agricultural custom would be no evidence to support the contention that Kalals of Dewatwal follow custom. Customs are apt to vary with the local history of a tribe.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated April 8, 1938.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs sued in this case for a declaration that a mortgage of 18 bighas, 10 biswas and 2 biswansis of ancestral land for Rs. 4,500 made by their brother, defendant No. 1, in favour of defendant No. 2 should not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was resisted by defendant No. 2 on the pleas that the parties (who are Kalals of the village Dewatwal in the Ludhiana District) were governed by Hindu Law and not by agricultural custom and secondly that the alienation was effected for valid necessity and consideration. The trial Court found the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge reversed the findings of the trial Court on both the points and dismissed the suit. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred. The finding of the learned District Judge on the question of necessity and consideration is one of fact, but the finding is challenged on the grounds that the learned District Judge has overlooked some of the material evidence with respect to the question of necessity and consideration and that in any case if the parties are agriculturists, the sum of Rs. 300 for the purpose of starting a shop could not be considered to be a valid necessity. I therefore consider it desirable to decide the appeal on both the points. I shall first take the question of custom. As stated above, the parties are Kalals of the village Dewatwal in the Ludhiana District. As pointed out in Attar Singh v. Sant Singh (1) a case relating to Kalals of the Ludhiana District, the Kalals are not primarily an agricultural tribe. Although some of them hold lands in the Ludhiana District, they follow other occupations also. At one time there was a proposal to include them amongst agricultural tribes in the Ludhiana District but this proposal was apparently not accepted. The customary law of the Ludhiana District admittedly does not contain any record of the customs of this tribe and the presumption is that they were not recognized as a tribe governed by custom at the time when the customary law was prepared.

The trial Court in deciding the issue as to custom in favour of the plaintiffs relied mainly on the fact that the Kalals in village Ahluwalia have a patti of their own, have a share in the shamilat and furnish a lam-bardar. It has also relied on the fact that in some social matters, such as karewa, custom was followed. It has been however, pointed out in several recent decisions of this Court that custom is not a matter of inference but of fact. In the circumstances, it seems very doubtful whether the mere fact that the Kalals own a patti in the village Dewatwal would be sufficient to raise any presumption in favour of custom in the present case: cf. Ishar Das v. Bhagwan Das (2), at p. 969. The presumption in favour of restraint on alienations of ancestral land in village communities was based on the history of such communities and also on the riwaj-i-ams prepared from time to time with respect to such communities in the Central Punjab: vide Gujar v. Sham Das (3). In the present instance, as stated above, no riwaj-i-am was prepared at all with respect to the Kalals in the Ludhiana District. It is true that they own one-third of the village. But their acquisition dates from the year 1841 only. Kalals not being primarily an agricultural tribe the question therefore is whether they have by their association with the agricultural tribes in the village since 1841 adopted their customs. This would be purely a question of fact and can only be decided on evidence. (After examining oral evidence his Lordship concludes). Taking the oral evidence as a whole I do not think that it establishes that Kalals of Dewatwal are governed by custom in the matters of alienation of ancestral property.

Coming to the documentary evidence, the plaintiffs relied on two instances from other villages, namely, Shahbpur and Kalal Majra. The learned District Judge has pointed out that these villages were founded by Kalals and were compact village communities. Besides, customs are apt to vary with the local history of a tribe and the mere fact that the Kalals in some other places have adopted agricultural custom would be no evidence to support the plaintiffs' claim in the present case. In one case from this village, Balwant Singh v. Harnam Singh, decided in the year 1916, it was held that Kalals were not governed by custom. In a recent case decided in the year 1936, Bishen Singh v. Atma Ram, a contrary view was taken and it was held that Kalals were governed by custom. The decision of the trial Court was affirmed by the District Judge. The case of Balwant Singh v. Harnam Singh was apparently not brought to the notice of the Court which decided the case of Bishen Singh v. Atma Ram. The decision in Bishen Singh v. Atma Ram appears to be founded mainly on the following considerations: (1) that the Kalals have a patti of their own; (2) that their main occupation is agriculture; (3) that they settled in the village at its foundation; (4) that they have cultivated land ever since their settlement; (5) that they hold a large area of land in the village in question; (6) that they hold share in shamlat; (7) that they have their own lambardar; and (8) that custom generally prevails in the locality. Ahluwalias of Dewatwal follow custom in social matters also.

Most of the above points are relevant only for ascertaining whether the Kalals of Dewatwal form a homogeneous agricultural village community and, if they do, whether it should be presumed that they are governed by custom in the matter of alienation of ancestral property. In the present instance however we know that Kalals are not primarily an agricultural tribe and although they are owners of one patti in Dewatwal they acquired land in this village only in 1841. So the real question which requires decision in this case is, as pointed out above, whether they have adopted agricultural custom in the matter of alienation of ancestral property owing to their association with members of agricultural tribes during the last 100 years or so. The burden of proof always lies on the party alleging a custom and in this case the burden was all the more heavy as Kalals do not usually depend on agriculture but follow a variety of occupations: cf. Kishen Singh v. Santi (4). There was no riwaj-i-am available to the plaintiff in this case which could shift the onus to the opposite side. The plaintiffs could therefore only establish the growth of the custom relied upon by them, by a long series of instances, since they acquired land in Dewatwal in 1841. It has been held in Bahadur v. Nihal Kaur (5) that a custom to be legal must be proved to have been in existence for a time preceding the memory of man following the dictum of Blackstone that "if any one shows the beginning of it, it is no good custom." If this rule is strictly applied, no valid custom could possibly be held to have come into existence since 1841. But even if a less strict view of custom is taken, as no such instances of the alleged custom from this village have been proved during this period, I feel no hesitation in holding on the evidence before me that the plaintiffs have failed to discharge the heavy onus of proving custom which lay on them.

On the above finding it is unnecessary to go into the question of necessity and consideration but I may mention that I agree generally with the finding of the learned District Judge on that point also. The sum of Rs. 1,700 was due to the plaintiffs themselves on a prior mortgage and this item was not disputed. As regards the balance of Rs. 2,800, Rs. 2,500 were alleged to have been borrowed for the marriage of the alienor, there is evidence on the record to show that the alienor had asked Bishen Singh to arrange his betrothal and that he had actually done so. Bishen Singh has not been shown to be not disinterested and there is no good reason for disbelieving his testimony. As regards the balance of Rs. 300 borrowed for starting a shop, the alienor's land had been mortgaged in favour of the Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 321—Creditor lending money to executor to obtain probate—Money so used—Creditor, if entitled to charge on estate or to indemnity which executor enjoys.

Where a person lends money to the executor for obtaining probate and the money is so used, the creditor is entitled to stand in the shoes of the executor and can be allowed the benefit of the indemnity which the executor enjoys for the purpose of recovering the money from the estate although he is not entitled to a charge.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Varadachariar, reported in 170 Ind. Cas. 157.

Mr. K. S. Desikan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. V. Narayanaswamy Iyer and V. Subramaniam, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—Santhanathammal, the grandmother of respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3, died on August 17, 1928, leaving a will by which she bequeathed her properties to her grandsons and others. She appointed respondent No. 4, who is her daughter-in-law and the mother of respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3, her executrix. On March 6, 1929, respondent No. 4 and her mother, Kanikaimari Ammal, who was defendant No. 5 in the suit out of which this appeal arises, borrowed from the appellant a sum of Rs. 1,700 for the purpose of taking out probate of the will. A promissory note was executed by respondent No. 4 and her mother for this amount and the instrument stated the purpose for which the money was borrowed. Respondent No. 4 executed the promissory note in her capacity as executrix and as guardian of her sons. The probate was obtained, but respondent No. 4 failed to repay to the appellant the money which she had borrowed from him for the purpose. The consequence was that the appellant was compelled to file a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly for the recovery of the money. The defendants to the suit were the respondents to this appeal and Kanikaimari Ammal. Respondent No. 4 denied that the money had been paid to her by the appellant, but the District Munsif held that this was untrue. A personal decree was passed against respondent No. 4 and her mother, but the suit was dismissed as against the estate.

The appellant appealed to the District Judge of Trichinopoly against the finding of the District Munsif that the estate was not liable. The respondents to this appeal were respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in the present appeal. The appellant however did not make respondent No. 4 a party. The District Judge allowed the appeal, holding that the appellant was entitled to a charge against the estate. The grandsons of the testatrix then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Varadachariar, J., who restored the decree of the District Munsif. Before Varadachariar, J., the appellant asked that he be allowed the benefit of the indemnity to which the executrix would be entitled in law from the estate if it was shown that the money had been applied, for purposes necessary for or beneficial to the estate. The learned Judge refused to accept this contention on the ground that the pleadings did not justify a decree being passed against the estate. The present appeal has been filed against the judgment of the learned Judge under cl. 15, Letters Patent, a certificate having been granted. The appeal first came before us on February 23, and after hearing the arguments we were unable to share the opinion of Varadachariar, J., that the plaint was not sufficiently widely drawn to allow the appellant to stand in the shoes of executrix. The prayer in the plaint reads as follows:

"I therefore pray that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree directing defendants Nos. 4 and 5 to pay to the plaintiff the amount noted hereunder together with subsequent interest and cost of this suit, defendant No. 4 from out of estate of the deceased Santhanathammal which she is managing as executrix and which belongs to defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 personally."

In our opinion there is here a claim for a decree against the estate as well as against respondent No. 4 and her mother. The plaint was written in Tamil and the words used may not be as precise as the words which an expert draughtsman in English would use, but we consider that they were sufficiently precise for the purpose. In these circumstances, we thought it proper to make the executrix a respondent in the appeal. In accordance with our direction she was served with notice of this appeal and became respondent No. 4. The judgment of Varadachariar, J., shows that he would have adopted this course himself had he considered that the plaint was sufficiently widely drawn to permit of an order being made against the estate. The case comes on for hearing with respondent No. 4 before us.

We agree with the opinion of Varadachariar, J., that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the appellant was entitled to a charge, but we consider that he is entitled to stand in the shoes of the executrix, for the purpose of recovering the money from the estate. Section 321, Succession Act, 1925, provides that the expenses of obtaining probate shall be paid next after the funeral expenses and death-bed charges. Mr. Subramaniam on behalf of respondent No. 4 has contended that no order should be passed allowing the appellant to stand in her shoes as the executrix. Why his client has adopted this attitude is not far to seek. She is a woman and although she has been held personally liable it will be difficult if not impossible to execute a personal decree against her. She borrowed the money from the appellant for obtaining probate, and for her to say that the appellant should not be allowed the benefit of the indemnity which she herself enjoys is dishonest. The appellant has provided the money for a necessary purpose and she utilized it for that purpose. It is not disputed that in a proper case a creditor can stand in the shoes of an executor and be given his remedy against the estate. This is a proper case which the appellant should be allowed to stand in the shoes of the executrix, and we will allow the appeal to this extent. The case will be remanded to the trial Court for inquiry as to what rights respondent No. 4 has against the estate in respect of the sum of money borrowed for obtaining the probate. The trial Court will draw up a fresh decree based on its findings in the inquiry arrived at in the light of this judgment. It will not be open to any of the respondents to contend that the money was not borrowed from the appellant for the purpose of obtaining probate, or to contend that this was not a necessary purpose. There are findings, and they are conclusive, that the money was borrowed by respondent No. 4 from the appellant for the purpose of obtaining probate, and that it was borrowed for a proper purpose. The inquiry will therefore proceed on this basis. The decree against respondent No. 4 and defendant No. 5 will stand in so far as they are personally concerned.

Before Varadachariar, J., respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3, contended that if the estate was to be made liable the rate of interest mentioned in the promissory note was excessive. In view of the decision of the learned Judge on the other questions arising in the case which led to the restoration of the decree of the District Munsif it was not necessary to go into this question. It has been agreed by the parties that the question of the rate of interest so far as the estate is concerned shall be decided by the District Munsif on remand. As the appellant did not make respondent No. 4 a party in his appeal to the District Judge, and failed to make her a party in this Court we make no order as to costs, either in this Court or in the District Court. The memorandum of objections will be dismissed but there will be no order as to costs.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 128 (1) (xiii), 296—Rules under s. 296, for Dehra Dun Municipality, r. 1 (a)—Goods received by consignee and brought into Municipal limits—Whether imported.

The word 'import' literally means 'carried into' or 'brought into.' When goods are received by a consignee and are brought by him into the municipal limits, he imports them within the meaning of the U. P. Municipalities Act and of the Rules framed under the Act. The words "imported or brought into" cannot be so interpreted as to mean that only those goods can be said to have been imported or brought into the municipal limits of a town which are either kept, consumed or sold by the consignee of the goods within those municipal limits. 148 Ind. Cas. 603 (1) and 160 Ind. Cas. 862 (2), distinguished.

S. A. from a decision of the Sub-Judge, Dehra Dun, dated September 8, 1936.

Mr. B. Mukherji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and Vishwa Mitra, for the Respondent.

Varma, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal and arises out of a suit brought by him for a declaration that the defendant, the Municipal Board of Dehra Dun, had no authority to levy "terminal tax or octroi" on such goods of the plaintiff as were received by him at the railway station of Dehra Dun and were then taken by him to his shop at Rajpur which is beyond the municipal limits of Dehra Dun, and were neither "kept nor sold" within the municipal limits of Dehra Dun for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from levying such a tax on the goods mentioned above and the recovery of a sum of Rs. 86-0-6 which the Municipal Board had realized from the plaintiff between March 28 and August 9, 1933, as terminal tax on such goods. Both the Courts below have agreed in dismissing the suit.

Section 128 (1), cl. (xiii), U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916) provides that, subject to any general rules or special orders of the Local Govt. in this behalf a municipality may impose "a tax on goods imported into . . . any municipality . . ." Under the powers conferred on them by s. 296 of the Act, the Local Govt. have framed "Rules for the assessment and collection of terminal tax in the Dehra Dun Municipality." The word 'import' is defined in r. 1 (a), thus: "'Import' shall mean the bringing of goods into the terminal tax limits from outside those limits," and in sub-r. (b) 'importer' is defined as meaning "the person in whose name the railway document is made out and shall include the person in possession of the goods on which the tax is leviable."

Sub-rule (c) provides that "terminal tax shall mean the tax imposed under s. 128 (1) (xiii), U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, (U. P. Act, II of 1916). . . ."

By r. 3 it is provided that, subject to certain exemptions with which we are not concerned in this case, terminal tax shall be payable on all goods of the description mentioned in the annexed schedule, and at the rates specified therein. It is further provided in this sub-rule that when such goods are imported within the terminal tax limits of the municipality the tax due shall be paid to the railway authorities who shall furnish the importer with a receipt for the amount of the tax paid. There is a note appended to this Rule which provides that when conveyed to Dehra Dun municipality on consignment to that place by rail to be levied at the rates shown in Sch. 'A' below."

"no tax shall be levied on goods booked through the railway agency to Mussorie, Rajpur and Chakrata or re-booked to any other station."

In the schedule annexed to these Rules, para. 1 reads thus

"A tax on goods brought within municipal limits

It has been held by the Courts below that the plaintiff is not entitled to the declaration sought for the simple reason that on a correct interpretation of the law the Municipal Board are authorized and entitled to levy the tax complained of. They have further held that no refund can be allowed. The goods in question are taken from the railway station into the municipal limits of Dehra Dun on their way to Rajpur. Learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that goods which the defendant receives at the railway station of Dehra Dun and subsequently despatches to Rajpur cannot be said to be "imported or brought into" the municipal limits of Dehra Dun. His contention is that only those goods can be said to have been imported or brought into the municipal limits of a town which are either kept, consumed or sold by the consignee of the goods within those municipal limits. We find no justification for this interpretation of the word 'import'. The word 'import' literally means 'carried into' or 'brought into.' The Rules framed by the Govt. explain the word 'import' as "the bringing of goods into." It seems to us on the plain meaning of the word, that when goods are received by a consignee and are brought by him into the municipal limits, he imports them within the meaning of the Act and of these Rules. The appellant is clearly an 'importer, as defined in the Rule quoted above. Learned Counsel has invited our attention to para. 198 of the Municipal Account Code. That paragraph occurs in Chap X of the Code which deals with octroi. The case before us is, concerned with terminal tax and not with octroi. Apart from the question therefore whether this paragraph of the Account Code can be pressed into service for interpreting the Act and the rules framed by Govt. thereunder or not, it seems to us that this paragraph which deals with octroi cannot be relied upon by learned Counsel in a case in which no question as to octroi arises. It may be mentioned here that the word 'octroi' used by the plaintiff in his reliefs has been added by some mistake or under some misapprehension because the tax which has been levied on his goods is "terminal tax" and not octroi, which is quite a different tax.

Learned Counsel has referred to the case in Sheikh Ajmeri Sheikh v. Emperor (1). That is a case which dealt with facts which were entirely different and was concerned with the interpretation of s. 155, Municipalities Act. It is of no assistance in the present case. The next case relied upon is that in Nek Muhammad v. Emperor (2). That is a case decided by a learned Single Judge and the dictum that the words 'bring' and 'import' contain an element of pause and repose has been relied on by the learned Counsel. That case again dealt with a totally different point and can be of no assistance in the present case. It may also be pointed out that the dictum of the learned Judge relied on by the appellant has been dissented from by a Bench in Emperor v. Har Datt (3). In our judgment the decision of the Courts below is correct, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 482, 476
—Application under s. 476 to file complaint for offence under s. 175, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Transfer of, to District Court on abolition of Court—Application dismissed but complaint made under s. 482—Competency of.

An application under s. 476, Criminal P. O., was made, to the Subordinate Judge to file a complaint against the defendants for an offence under s. 175, I. P. O. The Sub-Court was abolished and the application was transferred to the District Court and it was dismissed on the ground that s. 476, Criminal P. O., was not applicable. But a complaint was made under s. 482 of the Criminal P. O.:

Held, that the complaint was not competent as the District Court did not order the production of any document nor, could the alleged offence under s. 175, I. P. O., be said to have been committed in the view or presence of the District Court. Queen-Empress v. Seshayya (1), relied on.

Cr. R. Case and Cr. R. P. under ss. 435 and 439 of the Criminal P. O., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of North Malabar, dated April 15, 1939, initiating proceedings under s. 482, Criminal P. O., against the petitioner 1st defendant in O. S. No. 5 of 1938 on its file.

Messrs. D. A. Krishna Variar and M. C. Sridharan, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was the first defendant in O. S. No. 12 of 1937 on the file of the Sub-Court of Tellicherry and on the application of the plaintiff an order was passed by the Subordinate Judge on October 15, 1938, directing the defendants to produce certain records by October 21, 1938, or file an affidavit if they were not available. The order was not complied with, and the Subordinate Judge closed the application with the following order

"It is to be regretted that the defendants have not complied with the order and the plaintiff may take such steps as he may find necessary."

An application under s. 476 of the Criminal P. O., was made, to the Subordinate Judge on November 8, to file a complaint against the defendants for an offence under s. 175, I. P. O., and some documents were filed by the petitioner on November 18, with an application to excuse his failure to produce them earlier. The documents were ordered to be received on November 26, after notice to the plaintiff and the Sub-Court was abolished on December 23, 1938. The application under s. 476 of the Criminal P. O., was transferred to the District Court and it was dismissed on April 15, 1939 on the ground that s. 476, Criminal P. O., was not applicable. But a complaint was made under s. 482 of the Criminal P. O., and the question is whether this complaint is competent. The District Court did not order the production of any document nor, as pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Seshayya (1), can the alleged offence under s. 175, I. P. O., be said to have been committed in the view or presence of the District Court. The revision petition is therefore allowed and the complaint will be withdrawn.

BEAUMONT, C. J. AND KANIA, J.
SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE—

versus

GORDHANDAS I. PATEL AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Will—Construction—Principles—English precedents—Bequest to further principles of particular parties, whether charitable—Clause in will handing over residue to certain person to be spent by him for political uplift of India—Clause held constituted trust which being not for charitable purpose and being also vague was invalid—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 138—Whether applies to gift followed by direction amounting to trust—Trust—Charitable trust—Language should be clear—General charitable intention shown but particular charitable purpose indicated failing—General charitable intention will be given effect to—Trust to advance political purpose, whether good.

To construe one will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other wills is for the most part an unprofitable exercise. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills which cumber the English Law Reports, in order to understand and interpret wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd. Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (8), relied on. [p. 475, cols. 1 & 2.]

Gifts or bequests for furthering the principles of particular political parties are not charitable bequests. Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd. (6) and 182 Ind. Cas. 882 (7), relied on. [p. 476, col. 1.]

After paying certain legacies, the testator by his will directed the residue of the assets to be handed over to certain person to be spent by him or by his nominee for the political uplift of India and preferably for publicity work on behalf of India's cause in other countries:

Held, (1) that the words constituted a trust, and that there was no beneficial gift to the donee; [p. 472, col. 1.]

(2) that the trust was not for general or specific charitable purpose;

(3) that the trust being vague could not be enforced. Hence it was invalid. There was consequently an intestacy in respect of property covered by the clause.

Section 138, Succession Act, has no application to the case of a gift followed by a direction which amounts to a trust. In such a case the gift is not to the legatee absolutely, but to him upon a trust, which is nonetheless a trust because it is introduced by the word "direct." [p. 472, col. 1.]

Every trust must be expressed in sufficiently clear language to enable the Court to ascertain what are its purpose and object. This is so under English Law and also under s. 6, Trusts Act, and the principle applies to charitable trusts. The test must ultimately be whether, if the Court be called upon to administer the trust, the Court would be able to do so. Morice v. Bishop of Durham (5), relied on. [p. 474, col. 1.]

Where a testator shows a general charitable intention, but the particular charitable purpose indicated for some reasons fails, the Court will give effect to the general charitable intention and will get over the defect in the particular intention by framing a scheme. [p. 474, col. 1.]

A trust to advance a political purpose is clearly bad on the ground that a trust for the attainment of political objects is invalid, not because it is illegal, but because the Court has no means of judging whether any proposed political change will or will not be for the public welfare or benefit. Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd. (6), relied on. [p. 474, col. 2.]

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Bose (Calcutta Bar), M. L. Manekshah and M. M. Javeri, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Joshi, for the Advocate-General.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of B. J. Wadia, J., and it raises a question as to the validity of the gift of residue contained in the will of the late Vithalbhai J. Patel. The will was made on October 2, 1933 and the testator died on 22nd of the same month. Probate of his will was subsequently granted by this Court. By cl. 9 of his will the testator appointed executors and then gave four legacies, and the only relevance of those legacies is that they are all directed to be "given" to the beneficiaries. Then in sub-cl. (5) the testator disposes of his residue in these terms:

"The balance of my assets after the disposal of the above mentioned four gifts is to be handed over to Mr. Subhash Chandra Bose (son of Janaki Bose) of 1 Woodburn Park, Calcutta to be spent by the said Mr. Subhash Chandra Bose or by his nominee or nominees according to his instructions for the political uplift of India and preferably for the publicity work on behalf of India's cause in other countries."

Then the will goes on:

"In the event of my death in Europe I desire that Mr. Subhash Chandra Bose shall take charge of my body and make the necessary arrangements for sending it to Bombay for cremation on the Chaupaty Sands along side the place where the late Lokamanya Bal Gangadhar Tilak's body was cremated."

The question is whether or not that gift of residue is valid in law. The learned Judge held that it was invalid and that the residue was undisposed of. The argument in this Court has been based on two grounds. First, it is said that on the true construction of cl. (5) the residue is given to Mr. Bose absolutely, the direction as to how it is to be spent being merely the expression of the motive for the gift, or possibly of the testator's hope or belief as to the way in which the money would be spent. It is fair to Mr. Bose to say that his Counsel disclaims on his behalf any desire to utilize the money for his own purposes; he claims to be absolutely entitled to it in order that he may apply it under the will. The argument is that if the gift had stopped after the name of Mr. Bose, that is to say, if there had been nothing but a direction that the residue was to be handed over to Mr. Bose, that would have been a good bequest to Mr. Bose beneficially and that no doubt is so. But it is to be noticed that there are in the residuary clause no words of gift such as are contained in the case of the other legacies. The residue is not in terms given to Mr. Bose, still less is it given to him for his own use or benefit. The words are "to be handed over to Mr. Subhash Chandra Bose," an expression apt to introduce a trust, and the whole direction being to hand the money over to Mr. Bose to be spent in a particular way. I cannot entertain the slightest doubt that the words constitute a trust, and that there is no beneficial gift to Mr. Bose. Reliance has been placed on s. 138, Succession Act, which provides :

"Where a fund is bequeathed absolutely to or for the benefit of any person, but the will contains a direction that it shall be applied or enjoyed in a particular manner, the legatee shall be entitled to receive the fund as if the will had contained no such direction."

But that section, to my mind has nothing whatever to do with the creation of a trust. The condition precedent to the coming into operation of the section is that the fund is bequeathed absolutely to or for the benefit of any person. That, to my mind, means 'is bequeathed beneficially to any person.' All that the section does is to provide that where you have an absolute gift to a beneficiary you cannot cut that down by subsequent directions as to how the money is to be applied, either for the benefit of the beneficiary, or of anybody else; but the section has no application to the case of a gift followed by a direction which amounts to a trust. In such a case the gift is not to the legatee absolutely, but to him upon a trust, which is nonetheless a trust because it is introduced by the word "direct." Mr. Sarat Bose has further argued that the case can be brought within s. 139, Succession Act, which seems to me to be directed to the rule, well-known in England as the rule in Lassence v. Tierney (1) namely, that if you have a gift in the first instance absolute in terms, and then trusts are imposed upon it which do not, in the events which happen, exhaust the gift, the original gift takes effect to the exclusion of the residuary legatee, or the next of kin. But here there is no absolute gift in favour of Mr. Bose in the first instance. The only gift to him is upon a trust specified in the latter part of the clause. That disposes of the first question raised.

The second contention of Mr. Sarat Bose is that the trust, if there be one, is a valid charitable trust. The essence of the trust is that the moneys are to be spent for the political uplift of India. It is argued by Mr. Sarat Bose and also by Mr. Joshi on behalf of the Advocate-General, that the political uplift of India is something quite different from the advancement of certain political purposes. It is said that the political uplift of India necessarily denotes a political advance or improvement, the raising of India to a higher political level by improving the methods and machinery of Govt. or possibly by advancing the knowledge of the people on political subjects. At any rate, it is said that the gift is for the improvement of India; and having got so far, Mr. Sarat Bose says that the gift is really equivalent to a gift for general public utility in India, or possibly for the people of India, and he refers to the definition of "charitable purpose" contained in s. 2, Charitable Endowments Act of 1890, which is that "charitable purpose" includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief, and the advancement of any other object of general public utility, but does not include a purpose which relates exclusively to religious teaching or worship. There is a similar definition of "charitable purpose" in the Income Tax Act, 1922, except that it does not refer to religious trusts.

Mr. Bose argues that in India a trust for general public utility would be valid, and that the Courts are not bound by the English cases which exclude such a purpose from charitable trusts, and he contends, secondly, that even if we are bound by the English cases, nevertheless this gift is equivalent to a gift to India and falls within the line of cases which may be referred to as "the locality cases." We have been referred to a great many of the English cases, and I think, not for the first time in my life, that they are not by any means in a satisfactory condition. In Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income-tax v. Pemsel (2) Lord Macnaghten ventured on a definition of charity in the legal sense, that is as falling within the Statute of Elizabeth. He says this (p. 583):

"'Charity' in its legal sense" comprises four principal divisions: trusts for the relief of poverty; trusts for the advancement of education; trusts for the advancement of religion and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community, not falling under any of the preceding heads."

That definition, except in relation to religion, which is obviously not in the same position in India as in England, where there is only one religion, is very much the same as the definition in the Indian Charitable Endowments Act. Now very soon after Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income-tax v. Pemsel (2) had been decided the Courts in England unfortunately, as I venture to think, held that the fourth class in Lord Macnaghten's definition, viz. trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community was not really a definition at all, that all that Lord Macnaghten meant was that charity in the legal sense might embrace purposes beneficial to the community, but that all purposes beneficial to the community were not charitable. That was laid down as early as In re Macduff; Macduff v. Macduff (3) and the result was largely to destroy any practical utility in the definition given by Lord Macnaghten, because instead of having merely to enquire whether a particular gift fell within one of the four classes, if such gift fell within the fourth class the Court had to go further and enquire whether it was charitable or not. However, undoubtedly under English case-law a gift for general public utility is not a good charitable gift, because it might be employed for purposes which are not considered charitable. But side by side with cases of that nature there exists another line of cases which have been referred to as "the locality cases" in which it has been held that a gift for the benefit of a particular place, whether a parish, a city, a county or a country is charitable, although the purposes of the gift are not specified and the gift could apparently be applied for the general purposes of the locality. I need not refer to the cases in detail, because they are all collected and discussed in Smith, In re; Public Trustee

v. Smith (4), in the English Court of Appeal. Those cases undoubtedly exist and show that a gift for the benefit of a locality is good. I must confess that I feel great difficulty in seeing how those cases can be brought within the purview of the law relating to charitable trusts. It is very difficult to see why if a gift for the general purposes of the community is not charitable, because it might be applied for purposes which are not charitable, a gift to a particular place is charitable, though that also might apparently be applied to non-charitable purposes in the locality. And this difficulty is not diminished where the locality is extended to the whole of England as it was by the case in Smith, In re; Public Trustee v. Smith (4) where the gift was to England. Lawrence, L. J., at the end of his judgment pointing out the principle on which the judgment was based, says (p. 173*):

"The conclusion I have arrived at after considering all the authorities to which our attention has been drawn, is that the present case falls within the principle of the cases in which the gift is for the benefit of a particular class and therefore for a specified public purpose, and not within the line of cases in which the gift is for public purposes of a general and wholly unrestricted nature."

I do not myself see why a gift to a class if it be regarded as being for a specified purpose should be any more for charitable purpose than a gift to the community or to an individual. However there the cases are, and if we had in this case a gift to India, or a gift to the people of India, we should have to consider whether the principle of those cases should be applied in India, and if so whether that principle which has been gradually extended from a parish to a country should now be extended to a sub-continent. However, as we have not got a gift to India, or the Indian people, that interesting question does not arise for decision. With regard to the more general argument of Mr. Bose that what we have got here is in effect a gift for the general public utility of India, I would only say that if we really had such a gift, I should approach the argument of Mr. Bose that a gift for general public utility is a good charitable gift in India with much sympathy; and if the authorities were not too strong for me I should be glad to hold in favour of the argument, relying on the statutory definitions of "charitable purpose" in India, and also having regard to the rather unsatisfactory state of the English authorities. But again we have not got here a gift for the general public utility of India, and therefore that question also does not call for decision.

What we have got here is a gift for the political uplift of India, and one cannot possibly disregard the adjective "political." Assuming that the meaning of those words is that for which Mr. Bose contends, i.e., that they denote improvement in the political system of India, and therefore to that extent must be beneficial to India, the difficulty is that the words are too vague. Every trust must be expressed in sufficiently clear language to enable the Court to ascertain what are its purpose and object. This is so under English Law and also under s. 6, Trusts Act, and that the principle applies to charitable trusts was laid down as long ago as the case in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (5). The test must ultimately be whether, if the Court be called upon to administer the trust, the Court would be able to do so. Here, it seems to me impossible for the Court to determine what is embraced in the term political uplift of India. To take an obvious test. Suppose this trustee honestly considered that it would be for the political uplift of India, that India should sever her connection altogether with the British Empire, and proposed to apply the funds for that purpose, and suppose that the Advocate-General, representing the public, were to take the opposite view and were to allege that the trustee was misapplying the funds, and supposing the question was brought before the Court, how could any Court possibly determine judicially whether the separation of India from the British Empire was for the political uplift of India? It is a question on which Judges may have their own private opinions, but, it is not a question on which it would be possible to obtain evidence on which a judicial decision could be based. This trust is so worded as to make it impossible for any Court to say which of two contradictory lines of conduct properly comes within the terms of the trust.

This is not a case, as Mr. Sarat Bose has argued, of a general charitable purpose and a defect only in the expression of the testator's particular intention. Where a testator shows a general charitable intention, but the particular charitable purpose indicated for some reasons fails, the Court will give effect to the general charitable intention and will get over the defect in the particular intention by framing a scheme. But here there is no general charitable intention; there is no intention whatever expressed, except that the money is to be used for the political uplift of India, and if that is too vague to be enforced, there is nothing left.

Mr. B. J. Desai on behalf of some of the beneficiaries has challenged the view that political uplift of India in this will does indicate a desire for the general improvement of the political status in India. He argues that political uplift in this will means the advancement of India's claim to independence, that is the advancement of a particular political purpose and in support of that contention he relies on the position of the testator. Unfortunately, the affidavit in support of the summons does not state any facts relating to the testator, but we can, I think, take judicial notice of the fact that he was a well-known Indian leader and had been President of the Legislative Assembly, and indeed the direction he gives as to the disposal of his body indicates to anybody with local knowledge that he was an Indian nationalist leader. Mr. Desai contends that political uplift in the mouth of an Indian nationalist leader would mean the advancement of India's claim to independence, and that view of the matter derives support from the words which follow—"preferably for publicity work on behalf of India's cause in other countries." It is difficult to see what India's cause means, if the political uplift of India denotes the general raising of the political status or conditions of India; it is easy to see what the words mean if political uplift denotes advancement of a claim to independence. A trust to advance a political purpose is clearly bad on the ground given by Lord Parker in Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd. (6), that a trust for the attainment of political objects is invalid, not because it is illegal, but because the Court has now means of judging whether any proposed political change will or will not be for the public welfare or benefit. Mr. Sarat Bose has drawn our attention to the fact that that dictum is criticised by the learned authors of Edn. 5 of Tudor on Charities, but the dictum was accepted by the Privy Council in Trustees of Tribune Press v. Commissioner of Income.

tax, Punjab (7). I think the Privy Council in that case were definitely of opinion that if the Tribune newspaper was employed for the advancement of particular political purposes the trust under which it was managed would not be charitable. In my opinion, whatever meaning one attaches to the expression "political uplift of India," it is impossible to give effect to it as a valid trust, because it is too vague for the Courts to enforce.

In my opinion, therefore the judgment of the learned Judge was right and the appeal fails. With regard to costs we direct the appellant to pay one set of party and party costs of the executors and one set of party and party costs for all the beneficiaries, between them two Counsel certified. The difference between party and party and attorney and client costs of the executors to come out of the estate. With regard to the Advocate-General, he was a necessary party and we think that his costs must be provided for. He supported the appellant but failed. We think that a reasonable order—though perhaps not a very logical one—is to direct that half his costs should be paid by the appellant and the other half should come out of the estate.

Kanla, J.—Two points have been urged before us by the learned Counsel for the appellant. The first is that the clause in question amounts to an absolute bequest in favour of the appellant. In support of that contention he pressed the argument that the Court should lean against a construction leading to intestacy, and where possible two clauses or two sentences in the same clause should be so construed as to avoid a conflict. There is no dispute about the principle of construction. The first point is whether in fact there is a gift at all, and if so, an absolute gift in favour of the donee. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (8) observed as follows (p. 26*) :

"To construe one will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other wills is for the most part an unprofitable exercise. Happily that method of interpretation has gone out of fashion in this country. To extend it to India would hardly be desirable. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills, which cumber our English Law Reports, in order to understand and interpret wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd."

Bearing these observations in mind if the present will is approached, it is noteworthy that when the testator wanted to bequeath property to his legatees he deliberately used the word "give." This is seen in the preceding four sub-clauses of cl. 9. It was urged that if the sub-clause in question stopped after the name of the donee that would have been an absolute bequest in favour of the donee. Without contesting that proposition it must however be conceded that when words in fact find place in the same sentence or clause they have got to be taken into consideration in giving the proper meaning to the preceding words. Here the words following the name of the donee clearly control the preceding words, and it is not possible to construe the clause as one amounting to a gift or an absolute gift in favour of the donee. The first contention of the appellant must therefore fail.

The next question is : Is there a valid trust? In that connection three positions appear clear from the decided cases and the Acts in force in India. If a general intention of charity is found in the deed, the law does not allow the trust to fail because of the failure of a particular charitable object named in the deed. The reason is that because of the judicial decisions it can now be definitely stated what charity means. The other position is where a specific charitable bequest only (without a general charitable intention) is given and the Court is called upon to inquire whether that should be enforced. The third position is when there is no charitable bequest general or specific. Section 6, Trusts Act, provides that in order to constitute a valid trust the beneficiaries must be indicated with reasonable certainty. Turning to the facts here it has first got to be ascertained whether there is any general charitable intention found in this will. On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the words "political uplift of India" are words of general charitable bequest. It is significant that in this will the word "charitable" is nowhere found. In this connection the appellant relied on cases which may for convenience be described as locality cases. In those cases the bequest was either to a parish or to a town or to England. Those cases are recognized as occupying a class by themselves. No case has been pointed out which shows that a general charitable intention should be read into a deed or a will where the word "charity" has not been used at all.

It was urged that "political uplift of India" was an object of "general public utility" and therefore was covered by the definition of "charitable object" as found in s. 2 Charitable Endowments Act, and s. 4 (3), Income Tax Act. Section 18, T. P. Act, was also relied upon in this connection. Relying on those sections it was urged that the Courts should not adopt in India the narrow meaning of "charitable object" as found in the English decisions. I am unable to accept that contention. The definitions contained in the aforesaid Acts are expressly for the purposes of those Acts only. It should be noted that "religion" is omitted in those definitions. Moreover, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Runchordas v. Parvatibai (9), in construing the word dharam has adopted the meaning given to charitable objects in England to interpretation of wills in India. The word dharam was held to be vague because it included objects which were not necessarily charitable but also philanthropic and benevolent. That decision was given when all the aforesaid three Acts were in force in India.

It was urged that as in the locality cases if the gifts were for the "benefit of India" the gift would be good. The difficulty of reconciling these cases with the accepted definition of the word "charity" in English cases has been stated by Lord Sterndale in Tetley, In re National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Ltd. v. Tetley (10), at p. 266. I do not propose to attempt to reconcile the principle found in these locality cases with the restrictions otherwise put on the word "charity" as understood in the decided cases. It is sufficient here to distinguish these locality cases from the present one on the ground that the words used in the clause in question are not general, i.e., for the benefit of India. It is recognized in England that gifts or bequests for furthering the principles of particular political parties are not charitable bequests: Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd. (6), at p. 442*. This principle, if there was any doubt about its applicability to India, has been accepted by the Judicial Committee in Trustees of Tribune Press v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab (7).

It is clearly stated there that if the dominant purpose of the trust was a political purpose it would not be upheld as a charitable trust. The question therefore is whether political uplift of India is not a political object under the trust intended to be created by the clause in question. In answer to Court the learned Counsel for the Advocate-General stated that that was the result which was to be attained by modes to be selected by the donee but that was not the object. Speaking for myself, I entirely fail to notice any distinction between result and object thus attempted to be made. If the result to be obtained by the steps to be selected by the donee is the political uplift of India, in my opinion, it is the same as stating that the object of the steps was the political uplift of India. I am unable to construe the words as equivalent to "benefit of India," because "benefit of India" would include several heads such as educational uplift, social uplift, religious uplift. In order to succeed the appellant must establish that every one of the component parts which make the whole (the benefit) and not only a particular part in question, is charitable. It is therefore obligatory on the applicant to satisfy the Court not only that "benefit of India" is a charitable object but the particular component part, viz., political uplift of India, is also charitable, if his argument has to be upheld. No authority is cited in support of it. On the other hand, as I have pointed out, their Lordships have held that if the dominant object is political it is not charitable. In my opinion therefore, the contention that by the words "political uplift of India" a general charitable intention was disclosed must fail. It is clearly not a specific charitable object. The reasons for rejecting that contention have already been given just above.

That leaves the question whether the clause fulfils the requirements of s. 6, Trusts Act. In order to fulfil the conditions, it is necessary that the objects of the trust, i.e., the beneficiaries, must be indicated with reasonable certainty. It is obvious that different objects would be included under the heading "political uplift" as understood by different people and it is open to dispute whether they are of such a specific kind as to be capable of being definitely enumerated. If it is not possible, the Court when called upon to determine whether there was a breach of trust will be unable to decide the question. On that ground starting with the decision of Lord Eldon in Morice v Bishop of Durham (5), it has been held that when the objects of the trust are not capable of being sufficiently defined so as to enable the Court to enforce them, the trust must be held bad on the ground of vagueness. In my opinion, the attempt of the testator falls in that category and under the circumstances the trust must fail. As the bequest does not fall within any of the recognized classes of valid bequests it must fail and it must be held that there is an intestacy in respect of the property covered by the clause in question. The appeal must therefore fail.

B. K. MUKHERJEE AND LATIFUR

RAHMAN, JJ.

JADUNATH BANERJEE—PLAINTIFF—

versus

RESPONDENT

Bengal Embankment Act (II of 1882), ss. 43, 68, 56, 57—Removal of Sch. 'D' embankment and construction of new one in its place—Original embankment removed from Sch. 'D' by notification—New embankment does not become Sch. 'D' embankment without notification under s. 43—Civil Court, whether can enquire into question whether Collector has apportioned costs on land not liable to be charged—Proper course for aggrieved party—Apportionment—Notice under s. 56 or s. 57 is condition precedent—Recovery of costs of repairs of several years—Notification for each repair, if necessary.

Where upon an application being made to the Collector for shifting a Sch. 'D' embankment, the Govt. orders by a notification that the embankment should be removed and a new one with drainage sluices be constructed in its place but by a subsequent notification the Govt. orders that a portion of the original Sch. 'D' embankment should be removed from the Sch. 'D' then unless the Govt. by a notification issued under s. 43, Ben. Embank. Act declares that embankment as included in the Sch. 'D' such portion of the new embankment does not become a Sch. 'D' embankment. The mere fact that it replaced a Sch. 'D' embankment does not necessarily mean that it must be included in the Sch. 'D' without any further notification.

A Civil Court cannot enquire into the question whether Collector has apportioned costs on land not liable to be charged. The apportionment of costs by Collector on lands which he should not have done under the provisions of the Ben. Embank. Act is at the most an erroneous decision or an irregular exercise of the jurisdiction which the Collector undoubtedly possesses and in no sense it can be said to be a usurpation of jurisdiction by the Collector which would make the order a nullity or without jurisdiction. It is open to the party aggrieved to take an appeal against that order to the Commissioner as provided for in s. 84 or to invoke the powers vested in the Commissioner and the Govt. as provided for in s. 85 of the Act.

A notice under s. 56 or s. 57, Ben. Embank. Act is a condition precedent to creation of liability of the proprietor or the tenure-holder as the case may be under the Act, and unless and until due publication or service of the notice is proved the very foundation of the liability is taken away.

Where the costs of embankment which the Govt. seeks to recover are the costs of repairs of several years for each particular repair there must be a notification upon the parties interested, their objection must be heard, and then only can an order of apportionment be passed by the Collector under the provisions of s. 68.

A. from the appellate decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Perganas at Alipore, dated May 15, 1937.

Messrs. Amarendra Nath Bose, Hemanta Kumar Bose and Biswa Nath Naskar, for the Appellant.

Dr. Basak and Mr. Ramaprosad Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

B. K. Mukherjee, J.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff, and the suit was one for a declaration that the embankment described in the schedule to the plaint, was a Sch. 'D' embankment for which the Govt. was not entitled to realize costs from private proprietors under the Ben. Embank. Act. It was also alleged that the order of apportionment passed by the Collector under s. 68, Ben. Embank. Act was illegal and ultra vires, and that as there was no notice served on the plaintiff in compliance with the provisions of the Act no liability attached to him under law. The plaintiff further claimed a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from realizing the embankment costs from the plaintiff. The defence was really of a twofold character. The first defence was that the embankment in dispute was not a Sch. 'D' embankment; and it was contended in the second place that notices were duly served on the plaintiff and other parties interested, and that the Collector was quite within his rights in making the order of apportionment under s. 68 of the Act and to this order no exception could be taken in a Civil Court. Both the Courts below have accepted the defences of the defendant and have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is against this concurrent decree of dismissal that the present second appeal has been preferred.

The first question that arises for our determination is as to whether or not the embankment in suit is one which is included in Sch. 'D' Ben. Embank. Act of 1873, and in which case it is admitted, the costs are to be borne by the Govt. and not by the proprietors or tenure-holders. The facts seem to be, that there was a Sch. 'D' embankment on the left bank of the river Piali which protected the major part of Touzis Nos. 208, 1515 and 1124 of the 24-Perganas Collectorate, which are owned by the plaintiff. In 1901 one Brojendra Kumar Ghose applied to the Collector for shifting the embankment, so that a greater area might be protected, and he also proposed that the new embankment should be provided with sluices through which the area protected might be properly drained. It appears that the Collector took action on the application and the construction of the present embankment was started on the basis of a notification which is dated August 11, 1903. The notification runs as follows:

"The Lieutenant-Governor having considered the report and the Board's recommendation of the project, is pleased to order under s. 14 of the Act, that the embankment in question shall be removed and a new one with two drainage sluices constructed in its place at an estimated cost of Rs. 68,151 in accordance with the plan by the Executive Engineer."

Later on in 1907 by another notification the Govt. ordered that a portion of the original Sch. 'D' embankment should be removed from the Sch. 'D'. Under s. 43, Embank. Act, the Govt. is competent, at any time, to direct by notification published in the Official Gazette, that any embankment not mentioned in Sch. 'D' be included therein, and the provisions of the section shall apply in that case to such embankment. It is not disputed that in the present case, there was no such notification issued by the Govt. under s. 43. Mr. Bose on behalf of the appellant lays stress upon the words "in its place" which occur in the Govt. notification mentioned above. I am unable to accept his contention as sound. It is a new embankment altogether raised on a perfectly new site. The mere fact that it replaced a Sch. 'D' embankment does not necessarily mean that it must be included in the Sch. 'D' without any further notification. In my opinion, the words "in its place" used in the notification of August 11, 1903 meant nothing more than that the new embankment was intended to serve the same purpose as was served by the old embankment. As in my opinion, it is not a Sch. 'D' embankment, it is not necessary for the Govt. to rely upon s. 18 of the Act to realize its costs from private proprietors and it is not necessary for us to consider the question as to whether or not the area is a prohibited area within the meaning of s. 6. The next question raised by Mr. Bose is that under s. 42, Embank. Act, the Collector could have apportioned or charge the costs of repair only on lands not protected by the old embankment; but in the present case he has imposed the costs upon the entire lands of the three touzis including lands which were protected by the old embankment. The Courts below have overruled this point by saying that there was no evidence to show that the Collector has apportioned the costs on lands not liable to be charged. Mr. Bose has taken exception to this finding and he has placed before us several pieces of documentary evidence which would have a bearing on the point as to whether or not the lands protected by the old embankment were included in the present case.

It seems to me that there is some substance in the argument of Mr. Bose. But even if that be so, I do not think that this is a question that can be enquired into by a Civil Court. The order of the Collector was passed under s. 68, Embank. Act, and it was open to the plaintiff to take an appeal against that order to the Commissioner as provided for in s. 84. There are also powers of general control and supervision vested in the Commissioner and the Govt. as provided for in s. 85 of the Act; and it is expressly laid down in s. 86, that subject to the provisions mentioned aforesaid, the order passed by the Collector under s. 68 shall be final. Mr. Bose contends that the Civil Court would have jurisdiction if the order of the Collector was ultra vires. But the whole question is whether it would be ultra vires simply because the Collector apportioned costs on certain lands which he should not have done under the provisions of the Act. In my opinion, this may be at the most an erroneous decision or an irregular exercise of the jurisdiction which the Collector undoubtedly possessed, and in no sense it can be said to be a usurpation of jurisdiction by the Collector which would make the order a nullity or without jurisdiction. I am unable therefore to accede to this contention raised by Mr. Bose.

Mr. Bose then argues that his client could not have preferred an appeal to the Commissioner, or taken the matter before the Board of Revenue because he did not receive any notice prior to the apportionment order under the provisions of s. 56 or s. 57 of the Act. In my opinion, a notice under s. 56 or s. 57 is a condition precedent to creation of liability of the proprietor or the tenure-holder as the case may be under the Ben. Embank. Act, and unless and until due publication or service of the notice is proved the very foundation of the liability is taken away. In this particular case, the question of notice was certainly raised by the plaintiff in his plaint, and he denied that he received any notice preparatory to the passing of the apportionment order by the Collector under s. 68. This allegation was traversed by the defendant in the written statement. The trial Court observed in its judgment that from the evidence it appeared that every attempt was made by the Collector to have the notice served and to act according to law, but whether that notice was served in the proper manner or not was a question of fact into which the Judge did not think it proper to enter. It is difficult to appreciate this part of the judgment of the Special Subordinate Judge, and the question does not seem to have been discussed at all by the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Mukherjee points out that this question was not raised in this specific manner before the Courts below. All that was said was that the order of amalgamation of costs made by the Collector was wrong in law. It may be that the question of notice was really argued as part of this other argument, but in point of fact, the question does appear to have been raised before the trial Court, and the evidence bearing upon it was considered. Now, from the evidence, as it appears on the record, I find that the costs of embankment which the Govt. sought to recover from the plaintiff are the costs of repairs of several years from 1917 to 1925. It is not disputed before us that for each particular repair there must be a notification upon the parties interested, their objection must be heard, and then only could an order of apportionment be passed by the Collector under the provisions of s. 68. What appears to have been done here is this: there were two proceedings, one of the year 1921-22 and another of the year 1924-25. In the first of these proceedings an order was passed not only for the costs of that particular year but of four previous as well. Similarly in the proceedings of 1924-25 the costs of two previous years were added to and amalgamated with the costs which were incurred in that year. If there were really separate proceedings in respect of separate repairs and notifications were duly issued in respect of all of them in compliance with the provisions of the Act, the mere order of amalgamation would be a purely formal matter which could not injure any party, and could not be regarded as illegal. But what is pointed out here is, that there is no evidence to show that there was notification issued in respect of the costs of repairs of the four years previous to 1921-22 or two years prior to 1924-25. The order sheet, (Exs. D and D-1) and also the notices (Ex. E series) seem to support this contention on behalf of the appellant. They all refer to the notices issued in respect of the costs incurred in the years 1921-22 and 1924-25. There is no material whatsoever from which it could be gathered that there was any notice in respect of the costs of the earlier years.

Mr. Mukherjee raises the objection that this is a new point which was not raised in either of the Courts below, and the appellant should not be allowed to make out a new case for the first time in second appeal. But I think as there was a general denial of the service of notice in the plaint, it would be incumbent upon the defendant before he can fasten the liability upon the plaintiff to prove that there was notification issued in pursuance of the provisions of the Act, which was a condition precedent to create the liability so far as the present plaintiff was concerned. Of course, if there was no evidence adduced on the side of the plaintiff, the order sheet and the notices would be prima facie sufficient to discharge the burden on the defendant. But here it is pointed out by Mr. Bose that neither the order sheet nor the notices mention the name of the present plaintiff, and it does not show that any notice was issued or served on him. At any rate, these papers do not show that there were notices issued upon the parties interested in respect of the costs incurred in years other than the years 1921-22 and 1924-25. In my opinion, this is a matter which requires investigation and in the circumstances, I am constrained to set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court in order that the appeal may be re-heard on this point alone. The Appellate Court will consider as to whether there was proper service of notice under s. 56, Embank. Act, upon the plaintiff, for the years that the embankment costs are sought to be recovered from him, and come to a decision on the evidence adduced. It would be open to him to ask the parties to adduce additional evidence on the point, if it thinks desirable. If the lower Appellate Court holds that there was due service of notice the decree of dismissal made on the previous occasion will stand. If, on the other hand, it is found that there was no service of notice for all or any of the years the plaintiff will be entitled to a declaration that the costs of those years are not realizable from him. There will be no order for costs of this appeal. Future costs will abide the result.

Latifur Rahman, J.—I agree.

Jurisdiction Small Causes—Nature of small cause suit—Suit for fixed amount—Defendant's plea giving rise to settlement of accounts—Nature, if changed—Suit against agent for value of tickets received and not accounted for is cognizable by Small Cause Court—Small Cause Courts Act (Bhopal).

The essential nature of a suit for accounts is that therein the plaintiff does pray for a decree for a fixed sum of money, but only wants rendition of account by the defendant followed by a decree for the amount found due. Such suits are excluded from the purview of Small Cause Courts Act. But a suit which is essentially of small cause nature does not change its character merely because the defendant has chosen to raise a plea of account. It is possible that even in claims for a fixed amount the defendant's plea might some time give rise to the necessity of settlement of account, but this alone would not convert a suit for a fixed sum into a suit for account. Even if the Court has to go into the parties' account to a certain extent, the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court is not ousted. A suit against an agent for value of goods received and not accounted for by him would lie in a Court of Small Causes.

The plaintiff had given to the defendant a number of admission tickets in connection with a wrestling match to be sold on commission. The defendant sold these tickets to the public and pocketed all the money realized thereby. Thus the plaintiff neither got any unsold tickets back from the defendant, nor any money on account of such tickets as were disposed of. The price of the tickets was fixed and their number was in dispute. The plaintiff brought a suit in Small Cause Court to recover full face value of the total number of tickets :

Held, that the suit was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. Konduru Runga Reddi v. Subbiah Setty (1), 21 Ind. Cas. 761 (2) and 20 Ind. Cas. 518 (3), relied on.

O. R. of an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Bhopal.

Syed Mohammad Ali, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is a plaintiff's application praying for revision of an order passed by Judge Small Causes Court, Bhopal directing the plaint to be returned for being filed in the proper Court, and holding that the suit was not cognizable by Small Causes Court. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the suit as framed was of the nature of the small cause as defined by law and the lower Court has acted with material irregularity in returning the plaint merely because the defendant had pleaded that the suit was really one for account and as such was triable as a regular suit. The facts on record disclose that the plaintiff had given to the defendant a number of admission tickets in connection with a wrestling match to be sold on commission. The defendant sold these tickets to the public and pocketed all the money realized thereby. Thus the plaintiff neither got any unsold tickets back from the defendant, nor any money on account of such tickets as were disposed of. This suit has been filed against the defendant as an agent for the return of goods consigned or the value thereof. The price of the admission tickets was fixed and their number is also not in dispute. The defendant was obliged either to return the unsold tickets or to pay the face value thereof after deducting his commission. On these facts the nature of the suit really depends and we have to see whether the plaintiff's suit was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes or not. The Small Cause Courts Act has excluded from its purview all suits relating to settlement of accounts between the parties. The essential nature of such a suit is that therein the plaintiff does pray for a decree for a fixed sum of money, but only wants rendition of account by the defendant followed by a decree for the amount found due. In the present suit the plaintiff has sued the defendant for the full face value of the total number of admission tickets delivered to him for the simple reason that the defendant has failed to return to the plaintiff any tickets which were left unsold. If the defendant pleaded that all the tickets were not sold, still on his own plea he was obliged to pay the price of all such tickets as were sold by him after deducting his commission, returning at the same time the balance of original tickets that had remained unsold. Thus it appears that the plaintiff's claim was practically for a fixed sum of money and is not one for account. It is possible that even in claims for a fixed amount the defendant's plea might some time give rise to the necessity of settlement of account, but this alone would not convert a suit for a fixed sum into a suit for account. It is a settled principle that a suit which is essentially of small cause nature does not change its character merely because the defendant has chosen to raise a plea of account. Even if the Court has to go into the parties' account to a certain extent the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court is not ousted. This principle has been approved in Konduru Runga Reddi v. Subbiah Setty (1). Again it is not necessary to treat every case between a principal and an agent involving some accounts as one out of the purview of the Small Cause Courts Act. In a Madras case reported in Malaya Pillai Nadan v. Venganan Chetty, 24 Ind. Cas. 764 (2) it was held that a suit against an agent for value of goods received and not accounted for by him would lie in a Court of Small Causes. Similarly if an agent misappropriates any sum of money collected by him on behalf of his principal, the suit would lie in a Court of Small Causes Varadarajulu Chettiar v. Pattra Narayanaswamy Chetty, (20 Ind. Cas. 518) (3). In the present suit the plaintiff and the defendant hold the capacity of principal and agent and the suit being one for a fixed amount representing the full face value of the admission tickets was not a suit for account. The order of the lower Court in returning the plaint is not in accordance with law. It is therefore ordered that the revision petition of the plaintiff be accepted, the lower Court's order set aside, and the plaint be returned for being registered as a small cause suit for decision according to law. Costs of this petition shall be paid to the plaintiff applicant by the defendant respondent who shall bear his own costs.

December 6, 1939

BURN AND MOCKETT, JJ.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

DEYYAM CHINNAYYA—PRISONER

—ACCUSED.

Criminal trial—Confession—Murder—Accused confessing but introducing in it circumstances to avoid conviction for murder—Evidence showing and Court satisfied that violence amounted to murder—Accused can be convicted of murder on his confession.

Where an accused confesses to having caused the death of a woman and admits having robbed her after death but, during that confession he introduces into it circumstances with a view to excuse himself from a conviction for murder, and it is clear from the medical evidence and the Court is satisfied that the woman lost her life not in the least in the manner described by the accused but that by violence to the neck and pushing of the cloth into her mouth by the accused, the violence amounts to murder and the accused can be convicted of murder upon his confession.

Trial referred by the Court of Session of the Vizagapatam Division for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the said prisoner in Case No. 39 of the Calendar for 1939 on September 29, 1939.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. D. Narasaraaju, for the Accused.

Mockett, J.—The accused has been convicted and sentenced to death by the learned Sessions Judge of Vizagapatam for the murder of a woman Lakshmikantham described by some witnesses as a dancing girl, by her uncle as a prostitute. There is no doubt that on May 29, 1939, she was alive. She met her death by violence unquestionably and the only point we have to consider in this case is whether it is proved that that violence which unquestionably came from the hands of the accused was such that it can be said that Lakshmikantham was murdered by the accused.

The evidence can be very shortly summarised. On the discovery of the murder the local Police who obviously had information took steps to trace the suspected person who had gone in the direction of Narasannapet. P.W. No. 9 a jutka driver gave evidence to the following effect. He said that he heard of the death of the dancing girl on Tuesday at about noon and that the accused had come to him on the previous Sunday. He came to hire his jutka to take him to Narasannapet. He was to start on Monday i.e. May 29, the date on which this woman lost her life. But he did not come on that day. P. W. No. 9 met him in the bazar and complained that he had lost engagements by waiting for him. The accused said he would start at 3 A. M. on Tuesday and in fact he came to P. W. No. 9 at 5 A. M. on Tuesday. They started at 5 o'clock and drove to Satyavaram which is 20 miles from Tekkali, reaching that place at 7-30 A. M. At Satyavaram the accused after making excuses went into the village, without making immediate payment of his fare. Then P. W. No. 9 becoming apprehensive followed him and the accused had to concede that he had no money. But he gave to P. W. No. 9 as security a bangle which has been marked M. O. II-a in this case and which has been identified as belonging to the deceased. P. W. No. 9 drove back to Tekkali but at Narasannapet he learnt that the Police were making enquiries for a red jutka and white horse which was the description of his own. He found the Police and learned that they were investigating a case of murder of a dancing girl. He handed over the bangle to someone in the Police Station at Narasannapet. There is a slight discrepancy as to whether he handed it over in the presence of the Circle Inspector or the Sub-Inspector as he said at the Sessions or whether when he handed it over they were not present as he said in the lower Court. In our opinion in this case this discrepancy is totally immaterial. But he did hand over the bangle and went with the Police towards Urlam which is 8 miles off. There they saw the Narasannapet Police chasing a man who was caught at the village of Mathalapuvanipata which is near Urlam and when he was caught he had on him M. Os. Nos. II, III, and III-a and IV which are jewellery and ornaments belonging to the deceased. Now in this case we have not to enquire whether there is any question as to whether these jewels did belong to the deceased and as we have already indicated we have not to enquire as to whether the deceased met her death at the hands of anyone else other than the accused, because both these matters are set beyond all doubt by a confession made before the Magistrate by the accused and which has been marked Ex. D. After the most elaborate warning the accused made the following statement:

"A week back on a Sunday night I went to the house of the dancing girl Nelluru Lakshmikantham at Tekkali. As per the condition of the night's engagement I paid her Rs. 4. When I woke up at day break at 4 o'clock and when I was ready to come out, she demanded a rupee alleging that I owed her previously. There upon we both quarrelled. She beat me with a fan when I was coming out. She caught hold of my waist cloth. I put my hand on her shoulder and pushed her saying, "do you leave it or not".

She caught hold of my testicles. Thereupon after putting my hand upon her neck I pressed her hard against the cot and pushed her. The frame of the cot struck against her neck and she appeared like a person dying. The mouth was opened. I removed from her person all the jewels i.e., three pairs of gold bangles, a garland of gold miriyalu (gold balls) a gold Puducher inanu with Jigini and put them in my pocket and came out. I went to the house of the jutkawala, engaged the jut and reached Satyavaram by 7 o'clock in the morning. I got down there. I went to Dukalapadu from there. The Circle Inspector of Police of Chicacole and some others caught hold of me on the way. The Taluk Magistrate was satisfied that that confession was voluntary and made with due appreciation of what was said and of the consequences. So it will be seen that the accused admits possession of the jewels which has been also proved by the evidence of other witnesses for instance P. W. No. 20, who describes how they were in the accused's possession. P. W. No. 2 identifies the jewels as belonging to the deceased. It will be seen also that the accused describes how he used violence to the deceased. He has before the learned Sessions Judge repudiated this confession. Before the Magistrate he said that he did not commit the offence, that the Circle Inspector and others caught hold of him unnecessarily on the Urlam road, when somebody put these jewels in his hand and that he confessed owing to the Circle Inspector threatening to beat him. Before the learned Sessions Judge he stated as follows:—

"I came on May 29, 1939, Tuesday, in a Chicacole bus from Ranasthalam to Chicacole. I engaged a jutka at Chicacole and went to Dukalapadu and other places to purchase yarn. I went to Bhadrappa's house at Dukalapadu and asked him for fresh water and stood there after drinking the water. The Police came, thrust the jewels into my pocket and beat me in order that I should confess the crime. The Sub-Inspector and others told me to make a confession of crime before the Magistrate also. In the interval the Magistrate gave me time to think the matter. Head Constable and others came to me and said that if I did not make a confession I would be beaten. While I was making the confession two Constables watched at me through a window with sticks in their hands. I made the confessional statement for fear that they would beat me. I know nothing about the offence."

He was asked why the Circle Inspector should have met him in the neighbourhood and thrust the jewels into his pocket to which he replied.

"I cannot give any reason. But a purse containing Rs. 30 was taken from my pocket and these jewels tied in a cloth were put into my pocket".

The evidence of the Deputy Tahsildar who was the Magistrate for the purpose of this confession was clear that he kept the accused in a separate cell after being warned and in cross-examination no attempt was made to put to the witness the case for the defence. It may be said that there is a bare hint that the accused might have been accessible, but the suggestion that between the warning by the Magistrate and the actual confession he was under Police influence was never pressed home: no doubt for the reason that, as we are quite satisfied, the suggestion is wholly baseless.

We are asked by the learned Counsel for the appellant to say that this confession as it stands is not a confession of murder, when it must be accepted as it is and that therefore on the evidence before us it is not possible to convict this man of murder. That is a proposition which is wholly unacceptable and is contrary to practice and authority. The circumstances must be taken as a whole. What are the circumstances here, A man confesses to having caused the death of a woman and admits having robbed her after death. But during that confession he introduces into it circumstances with a view no doubt to excuse himself from a conviction for murder. Now in those circumstances it is obvious that the most vital evidence in the case is the evidence of the Medical witness P. W. No. 1. He is the Medical Officer in charge of the Tekkali Hospital. He received the body for the purpose of post mortem examination at 2-30 on the 30th and he gave a post mortem certificate. Before dealing with this evidence it will be convenient to examine that certificate Ex. A. He found injuries on this woman. There were a nail mark on the right side of the neck, four nail marks or marks resembling nail marks on the left side of the neck, bruises on the left side of the upper lip and the right leg near the knee, but the most significant of all perhaps was that in this woman's mouth between the teeth and against the tongue was thrust a small shirt which was firmly caught between her teeth and was removed with difficulty. It had been pressed in such a way that the tongue was pressed and pushed back. The cloth was stained red and on removal there was a discharge of reddish froth. It is not surprising perhaps in these circumstances and having regard also to the condition of the lungs, to say that the opinion as given in the post mortem certificate was that "the deceased would appear to have died of Syncope, probably the result of throttling." In his evidence the Doctor is quite definite, he says, in his opinion the deceased died of Syncope, the result of throttling. And he again describes, as he did in his post mortem certificate what he found. Now in cross-examination certain questions were asked to suggest apparently that this cloth could have been put into this woman's mouth when she was asleep, though what the relevance of these questions is we find it difficult to understand. In re-examination he stated if the victim was seized by the throat first she would be powerless to resist the introduction of the cloth into the mouth. So possibly questions were put in order to suggest that the cloth was inserted into this woman's mouth when she was asleep. It will be observed that in the confessional statement of the accused there is no mention whatever of the cloth. The accused says,

"Thereupon after putting my hand upon her neck I pressed her hard against the cot and pushed her. The frame of the cot struck against her neck and she appeared like a person dying."

The suggestion apparently being that in this struggle she lost her life from a blow on the back of the neck. There is nothing in the cross-examination of the Doctor to suggest that explanation and the evidence of the Doctor is wholly inconsistent with it. It is clear from his evidence and we are quite satisfied that this woman lost her life not in the least in the manner described by the accused but that she was throttled, that a cloth was stuffed into her mouth and from those causes—violence to the neck and this pushing of the cloth into her mouth—she died and there can be no doubt whatever that that violence was done in circumstances that must amount to murder. If there had been any doubt which there is not, the fact that this man afterwards robbed her of her jewellery is of the utmost significance. The learned Judge came to this conclusion and with that conclusion we entirely agree. The appellant was guilty of murder and nothing else and in the circumstances the sentence passed upon him could be the only sentence. We confirm both the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Before parting with this case we should like to express our appreciation of the detection work in this case by the Police Officers responsible. It will be noticed that this murder occurred during mid-night of 29th-30th, and that early in the morning of the 30th the Police were engaged in making investigation at a long distance from Tekkali and successfully arrested the accused a little further off on the same day. We have no doubt that our observations will be brought to the notice of the superior officer of the officers concerned.

Deed—Construction.—Precedents, value of—Mortgage—Hypothecation of property to secure only interest—Money decree for amount of principal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20, sub-s. 1, proviso—Proviso applies to sub-s. (1) only.

It is not very profitable to attempt to construe a document by reference to authorities; the words of each document must be taken and the Court must ascertain, as best it can, what the intention of the parties was in accordance with the terms expressed by them. 177 Ind. Cas. 533(1), relied on.

Where the executant (defendant) mortgages and hypothecates the lands in favour of the plaintiff not for payment of the principal but to secure payment of the interest on it and the payment of principal is not secured on the land, the plaintiff would be given a money decree for the amount of principal.

It was not the intention of the Legislature in enacting proviso to sub-s. 1 of s. 20, Lim. Act to abrogate the long-established and traditional practice by which a mortgagee in possession of land is deemed to be in receipt of interest and to have a fresh start of limitation from the period when his possession ceases and in this view the proviso was intended to apply to the first sub-section and not the second sub-section of s. 20.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Monghyr, dated September 19, 1938.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Sarjoo Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Bose and N. N. Ray, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiff-appellant to recover money advanced to defendant No. 1 as a loan. The advances amounted to Rs. 1,200 and the first defendant executed two sudhbharna deeds for Rs. 400 and Rs. 800 respectively on February 14, 1924. It was the plaintiff's case that he was put into possession of the mortgaged properties, but was dispossessed on July 26, 1934 by the defendants first party and defendants second party. The defence of the principal defendants was that actual possession of the land was with defendant No. 1 who made over to the plaintiff the produce thereof to the extent of 48 maunds of paddy annually to the plaintiff. It does not seem necessary to decide whether upto 1341 the plaintiff was in physical possession or in constructive possession by receipt of profits from defendant No. 1 who held under him. The plaintiff's case was that in 1342 the defendant No. 1 and others dispossessed him and this has been negatived by the Courts who hold that the plaintiff is still in constructive possession. That being so, the question arises whether the plaintiff can sue for his money, which was the form in which the claim was laid at first or alternatively for sale of the mortgaged property which was an additional prayer in the alternative added at the appellate stage. The point turns on whether there is a personal covenant to repay. We have been shown some authorities by both sides, but as pointed out by Wort. A. O. J. in Raj Kumar Bharthi v. Surajdeo Sahi (1): "It is not very profitable to attempt to construe a document by reference to authorities; the words of each document must be taken, and the Court must ascertain, as best it can, what the intention of the parties was in accordance with the terms expressed by them."

In these two documents which are similar in their provisions there is an express promise that :

"I (the executant) on paying up the said amount of principal in full in one lump sum in the month of Jeth 1334 Fasli and getting the endorsement of payment made on the back of this sudhbharna rehan deed by the said creditor shall take back this land."

That appears to be a plain promise to repay. Then the hypothecation clause is curious. The executant mortgages and hypothecates the lands in question not for payment of the principal but to secure payment of the interest on it. So far as appears from the documents themselves, the payment of principal is not secured on the land. That being so, I see no objection to giving the plaintiff a money decree for the amount of principal which he claims subject to limitation.

As regards interest, the bond stipulates that no interest shall be payable so long as the plaintiff is in possession of the land. Therefore, there is no cause of action for interest up to the date of suit and if the plaintiff has any grievance with regard to non-delivery of produce of the land which he has sub-let to the defendants, then that would be a separate cause of action.

Finally we have to consider the question of limitation which is raised on behalf of the respondent. The due date of payment of the one bond was about June 1926 and of the other June 1927. The suit was instituted in May 1937. The bond was a registered one. It is contended that the period of six years' limitation bars the suit; but the appellant relies on sub-s. 2 of s. 20 of the Lim. Act under which :

"Where mortgaged land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the receipt of the rent or produce of such land shall be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of sub-s. (1)"

Mr. Bose for the respondent refers to the proviso to sub-s. 1 of s. 20 which was inserted by the amendment of 1929. His contention is that this proviso applies to the whole of the section, whereas for the appellant the contention is that it applies only to sub-s. 1. It does not seem to us that the intention of the Legislature in enacting this proviso was to abrogate the long established and traditional practice by which a mortgagee in possession of land is deemed to be in receipt of interest and to have a fresh start of limitation from the period when his possession ceases and in that view I am of opinion that the proviso was intended to apply to the first sub-section and not the second sub-section of s. 20, so that the suit is not barred by limitation. In my opinion the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to a decree for the principal amount claimed and should get interest from the date of suit up to the date of decree at six per cent. simple and thereafter interest on the whole amount at 6 per cent. The decree will be against defendants Nos. 1 to 6 only with costs proportionate to his success. The defendants Nos. 2 to 6 being the sons and grandsons of defendant No. 1 are liable to the extent of their interest in the family property.

Mortgage—Mortgage by conditional sale—Conditions which the parties desire to express in regard to term—Redemption—Limitation—Mortgage before 1882—Limitation for redemption—Statutory right under Bengal Regulations I of 1798 and XVII of 1806—Redemption suit brought more than 60 years—Applicability of Art. 148, Limitation Act (IX of 1908)—Agreement that mortgagor may redeem within stipulated time, validity—Construction—Principles—Limitation—Law in force before 1877—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3—Act, if draws distinction as to whether cause of action arose with regard to document before 1877 or after it.

In a simple or in a usufructuary mortgage, the conditions which the parties desire to express in regard to a term will be different from the conditions which the parties desire to express in a mortgage for conditional sale. In the latter mortgage one of the points which the parties desire to express is the period when foreclosure will arise and another point which they desire to express is within what period redemption is to be allowed. There is no reason to make these two periods the same and the natural agreement would be to allow redemption up to a certain date, and if not made by that date then to allow the right to foreclosure to begin. No such points arise in a simple mortgage; and in a usufructuary mortgage the important point is that the usufructuary mortgagee desires to hold possession for a certain time in order that he shall have the benefit of such a period. [p. 489, col. 1.]

In case of a mortgage by conditional sale executed before 1882, (before T. P. Act), the mortgagor has a statutory right under Ben. Regs. I of 1798 and XVII of 1806 to redeem within any stipulated period provided in the deed. Therefore, even if there had been only a period of 2 years in the deed, the statutory right existed by which the mortgagors can have redeemed from the date of execution and the suit for redemption brought more than 60 years would therefore be barred by the period of limitation under Art. 148 of the present Lim. Act. [p. 490, col. 1.]

Ordinarily and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of this specified period, but there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of a mortgagor. 23 Ind. Cas. 355 (6), relied on. [p. 489, col. 2.]

In each case the Courts must look to the nature of the particular mortgage and the surrounding circumstances to ascertain what the intention of the parties was. One deed cannot be interpreted in the light of the language used in other deeds. [p. 491, col. 2.]

It is not correct to say that because the first Lim. Act was not introduced until 1877 there was no law of limitation in force in 1872. There was a law of limitation laid down in s. 14 of Regn. III of 1793 which provided a period of 12 years for the cause of action for any suit.

The Lim. Act, does not make any distinction as to whether the cause of action arose in a suit in regard to a document before or after 1877. The Act says clearly that every suit instituted after the period prescribed therefor shall be dismissed. [p. 488, col. 1.]

S. A. from the decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Allahabad, dated September 18, 1936.

Messrs. Gopi Math Kunzru and Gopalji Mehrotra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiffs whose suit for redemption was decreed by the trial Court but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it was time-barred. The question of limitation is the only one raised in this second appeal. The plaintiffs sued for redemption of a mortgage by conditional sale executed on August 7, 1872. The relevant clause for the purpose of limitation in this deed is as follows:

Bawas mubligh 1203-16 maskura bala ke rehan miadi do sal yani bai bilwafa kar diya wa tamam wa kamal sare saman apna murtahinse wasul paya ab dame wa dirame yaftani mera atimme murtahin ke baqi nahin hai aur igrar yeh hai ki andar do sal ke jab rupya mahina Sawan men naqd yekmusht ada karden tab us sal jaedad haqiqat apni fak rehan kara lewen aur agar andar do sal ke rupya ada na ho to bad do sal ke yeh bai bilwafa bai kamil hojaega our murtahin malik mustaqil shai markhuna ka hoga.

The trial Court interpreted this mortgage to mean that redemption could not take place until the period of two years had expired, i. e., on August 7, 1874. The suit was brought on August 7, 1934 and was therefore according to the trial Court within 60 years of the date when the right to redeem first accrued. Article 148 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, states that for a suit against a mortgagee to redeem or recover possession of immovable property mortgaged, the period of limitation is 60 years and, the period begins to run from the time "when the right to redeem or to recover possession accrues." On the other hand, the lower Appellate Court held that the clause quoted gave a right to redeem prior to 1874 and that therefore the period of 60 years in Art. 148 had begun to run from 1873 and had expired in 1933 and therefore the suit in 1934 was time-barred. The expression used by the Court below is that the right to sue will begin to run from the first year of the mortgage. The actual date in the mortgage of August 7, 1872 has been ascertained by learned Counsel for the appellants to correspond to Sawan Sudi 13, Sambat 1929, i. e., it is the 13th day of the month of Sawan in this year. There therefore remained 17 days in that month of Sawan in 1872 and if the interpretation adopted by the lower Court is correct then redemption could have been effected in the 17 days of the month of Sawan in the year 1872 or in the month of Sawan in the year 1873 and also in the month of Sawan in the year 1874. On the other hand, the interpretation of the learned Counsel for the appellants is that there could not be redemption until the expiry of two years and as redemption could have first taken place on August 7, 1874 the suit which was brought on August 7, 1934 was within the period of 60 years. Learned Counsel at first based his argument on the provisions of s. 60, T. P. Act, (Act IV of 1882), and his argument was that this section lays down the law in regard to redemption for mortgages generally and therefore covers the mortgages by conditional sale which are defined in s. 58, sub-s. (c) of that Act. Section 60 states:

"At any time after the principal money has become payable the mortgagor has a right of payment or tender at a proper time and place of the mortgage money to require the mortgage..."

His point was that redemption was at any time after the principal money has become payable. He further argued that in the amendment of the T. P. Act by Act XX of 1929 the word "payable" had been replaced by the word "due" and therefore he argued that this alteration should be considered to have the effect that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose should be co extensive and should run from the same point in time. Now whatever the merits of this contention are, there is a serious difficulty in the application of this argument to the present case. In the T. P. Act (Act IV of 1882), s. 2 provides:

"But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect.....(c) any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability."

The present suit is based on a mortgage executed in 1872 which was long before the T. P. Act came into force in 1882. Therefore the rights of the parties should be interpreted in accordance with the law on the subject which was in force in the year 1872 and not in accordance with the later law laid down in Act IV of 1882. The Schedule of the T. P. Act shows that there were repealed certain Regulations in regard to conditional sales and redemption, namely, Beng. Regn. I of 1798 and Beng. Regn. XVII of 1806 and in each case the whole Regulation was repealed. Therefore those Regulations had been in force up to 1882 and were in force in 1872. Now turning to these Regulations, Regn. I of 1798 in the Preamble states:

"It has been long a prevalent practice in the Province of Behar to borrow money on the mortgage and conditional sale of landed property under a stipulation that if the sum borrowed be not repaid (with or without interest) by a fixed period, the sale shall become absolute. This species of transfer has in the above Province been usually denominated bye bilwafa."

In s. 2 it is provided:

"In all instances of the loan of money on bye bilwafa or on the conditional sale of landed property as explained in the Preamble to this Regulation however denominated the borrower who may be desirous to redeem his land by the payment of the money lent upon it with any interest due thereon within the stipulated period, is at liberty on or before the date stipulated either to tender and pay to the lender the amount due to him, taking such precautions as he may think necessary to establish such tender and payment, if evaded or denied, or without any tender to the lender to deposit the amount due to him, on or before the stipulated date in the Dewanny Adawlut of the City or Zillah... and if the land be in the possession of the lender shall entitle him to demand the immediate recovery thereof."

This present mortgage is stated by the Courts below to be a rehan bye bilwafa and this point is not contested. The statutory provision in s. 2 of Regn. I of 1798 states that whatever the conditions are, "however denominated," the statutory right exists for the lender on or before the date stipulated to make payment and obtain recovery of his land. The exact provision therefore in the document cannot override this statutory right. In Regn. XVII of 1806 s. 7 made a further provision in regard to redemption which was stipulated to be additional to the provision in Regn. I of 1798. This s. 7 states:

"In addition to the provisions made in Provinces of Bengal, Behar, Orissa and Benares by Regn. I of 1798, and in the ceded and conquered provinces by Regn. XXXIV of 1803 for the redemption of mortgages and conditional sales of land under deeds of bye bilwafa, kutubaleh or any similar designation, it is hereby provided that when the mortgagee may have obtained possession of the land on execution of the mortgage deed, or at any time before a final foreclosure of the mortgage the payment or established tender of the sum lent under any such deed of mortgage and conditional sale or of the balance due if any part of the principal amount shall have been discharged, or when the mortgagee may not have been put in possession of the mortgaged property the payment or established tender of the principal sum lent, with any interest due thereupon, shall entitle the mortgagor and owner of such property or his legal representative to the redemption of his property."

This Regulation therefore extended the period for redemption to any time before a final foreclosure of the mortgage. In this connection an argument may be noted by learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants that because the first Lim. Act was not introduced until 1877 there was no law of limitation in force in 1872. This appears to me to be incorrect, because there is a law of limitation laid down in s. 14 of Regn. III of 1793 which provided a period of 12 years for the cause of action for any suit. It is true that in a number of cases which have been shown to us these Bengal Regulations have not been quoted, but as they were in force until repealed by T. P. Act in 1882 it appears to me that they govern the present case and that quite apart from any interpretation of the particular clause in the mortgage deed before us the statutory right of redemption arose prior to the period of two years stated in the document and that the mortgagor had the right to redeem on any day from Sawan 13, 1872 and as his period of limitation was 60 years from the accrual of his right of redemption his suit would be barred in 1934. The next point is what is the meaning of the particular words in the clause. No doubt the first part of the clause in question does state that there is a mortgage by conditional sale for a period of two years, but this is followed by the particular clause which gives a right to pay in the month of Sawan within two years and on such payment from that year the property will be redeemed. Then follows the clause to the effect that if within two years there is no redemption then the mortgage by conditional sale will become an absolute sale and the mortgagee will become the permanent owner. No doubt the mortgagee could not become a permanent owner without a suit for foreclosure but that point does not arise in the present case as the question is whether a suit for redemption is or is not time-barred by Art. 148, Lim. Act. It appears to me that the right of the plaintiffs to redeem began in 1872 and was subject in the first place to the bringing of a suit for foreclosure by the mortgagees which could have been brought any time from August 7, 1874 onwards. Such a suit would have terminated the right of the plaintiffs or their predecessors to redeem.

The right of redemption was also subject to the law of limitation and in the present instance the law of limitation has been applied by the Court below with the finding that the suit of the plaintiffs was time-barred.

An argument was made by learned Counsel for the appellants that their right to redeem had accrued in 1874 and that it was a substantial right and having accrued to them should not be affected by limitation which according to him began with the first Lim. Act of 1877. Now this argument is entirely contrary to what is laid down in s. 3, Lim. Act of 1908, which provides that "every suit instituted... after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by Sch. I shall be dismissed." The Lim. Act does not make any distinction as to whether the cause of action arose in a suit in regard to a document before or after 1877. The Act says clearly that every suit instituted after the period prescribed therefor shall be dismissed. Various rulings have been quoted by learned Counsel for the appellants. One of the earliest of these is Vadju v. Vadju (1). On p. 24 the ruling laid down:

"The general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation express or implied to the contrary the right to redeem and the right to foreclose must be regarded as co-extensive."

That principle is not inconsistent with the judgment of the Court below because what the Court has found is that there was a stipulation expressed to the contrary by which the right to redeem and the right to foreclose in the present case did not begin at the same time. It appears to me from the clause that the right to foreclose did not begin until two years had elapsed, whereas the right to redeem began at once with the limitation that it must be exercised in the month of Sawan within the 2 years. The next ruling to which reference was made was Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar (2). No question such as arises in the present case arose in that ruling. In that ruling their Lordships of the Privy Council dealt with a mortgage of July 26, 1912, with a period of 6 years and with a clause which stated that if there was default in the payment of annual interest the mortgagee would have the power to realize the entire mortgage money... "at all time."

(1) 5 B 22.

(2) A I R 1932 P C 207; 138 Ind. Cas. 779; 7 Luck 442; 59 I A 376; 9 O W N 638; Ind. Rul. (1932) P C 251; 63 M L J 187; 36 O W N 1017; 36 I W 246; 56 O L J 237; (1932) A L J 913; 34 Bom. L R 1600 (P O).

There was a default and the mortgagee did not sue until within the period of 12 years from the expiry of the 6 year period provided for re-payment. The sole question was whether the suit should have been brought within 12 years from the first default in payment of interest or whether it was within time when it was brought within 12 years from the expiry of the period of 6 years. Their Lordships held that the suit in this latter period was within time. Learned Counsel desires to argue by analogy from some observations on p. 452* and in particular on the sentence,

"if the principal money is 'due' and the stipulated term has gone out of the contract, it follows, in their Lordships' opinion, that the mortgagor can claim to repay it, as was recognized by Wazir Hasan, J., in the judgment in the Chief Court. Their Lordships think that this is an impossible result."

I do not think that these observations which were in regard to a simple mortgage which was executed in 1912 under the T. P. Act can be transported and applied to the mortgage by conditional sale executed before the Act in 1872. Moreover, in the mortgage before their Lordships there was a single term of 6 years provided. In the mortgage before this Court the terms in the mortgage deed are more complex. The next case referred to was Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam Jilani (3). In this case there was one mortgage of October 1, 1877, with possession (not conditional sale) and a provision for foreclosure and redemption on the expiry of 10 years. There was a second mortgage of September 25, 1878, which extended the period for redemption to the expiry of 40 years after the period of 10 years in the first mortgage. It was held that this implied that the period of foreclosure was also postponed. There was a suit for redemption brought in 1892 and it was held that redemption should be allowed as the right of redemption could not be fettered. I do not find that there is anything in this ruling to support the claim of the appellants. In Raghubar Dayal v. Budhu Lal (4), there was a simple mortgage with promise to pay the principle in 10 years executed on March 15, 1883, which was after the T. P. Act came into force. A suit for redemption was brought on July 16, 1884. It was held that a suit for redemption did not lie. The clause in this document was not at all similar to the clause in the document before us and moreover the mortgage was a simple one. In my opinion, in a simple or in a usufructuary mortgage, the conditions which the parties desire to express in regard to a term will be different from the conditions which the parties desire to express in a mortgage for conditional sale. In the latter mortgage one of the points which the parties desire to express the period when foreclosure will arise and another point which they desire to express is within what period redemption is to be allowed. There is no reason to make these two periods the same and the natural agreement would be to allow redemption up to a certain date, and if not made by that date then to allow the right to foreclosure to begin. No such points arise in a simple mortgage; and in a usufructuary mortgage the important point is that the usufructuary mortgagee desires to hold possession for a certain time in order that he shall have the benefit of such a period.

The conditions therefore in these mortgage deeds are not the same and rulings of simple and usufructuary mortgages are not likely to throw any light on the interpretation of the language in a mortgage for conditional sale. In Huseni Khanum v. Husain Khan (5), it was laid down that under ordinary circumstances a mortgagor cannot, before the time limited for payment to the mortgagee expires, take proceedings to redeem the mortgage. This ruling did not lay down that this was a fixed rule but merely that it was the ordinary rule. The ruling therefore is not in favour of the principle enunciated for the appellants. The mortgage was one of 1830 but the actual mortgage deed was not produced and there was a dispute as to what were the terms. The case was the same which was taken in appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum (6). In Muhammad Husain v. Sanwal Das (7) the reference to the Full Bench p. 958* shows that the question was quite a different one from the one before us. The mortgages were of 1902 and 1903 and were both simple mortgages and therefore came under the T. P. Act. Moreover, the language used was not at all similar to the present case. In Akbar Husain v. Shah

Ahsanul Hak (8) there was a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage executed on June 14, 1923. On p. 150* learned Counsel invites attention to the statement:

"Within the term the mortgagee cannot enforce the mortgage and within the term the mortgagor cannot sue for redemption. It was no doubt open to the parties to fix two different dates for the enforcement of the rights of the mortgagor and the mortgagee respectively, but where only one term is fixed it is to be recorded and that term is meant equally for both."

This is quoted from Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum (6). In this ruling on p. 199† their Lordships of the Privy Council stated:

"Ordinarily and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of this specified period, but there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of a mortgagor."

These are provisions which were made in regard to a mortgage of January 6, 1830. As that mortgage was prior to the T. P. Act their Lordships therefore laid down that in regard to mortgages prior to the T. P. Act it was open to the parties to make provisions by which the mortgagor might discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. The mortgage in question was one which arose under two documents, a sale deed and an agreement for return forming together a mortgage of conditional sale. This ruling is authority against the proposition advanced by Mr. Kunzru for the appellants that the rights of redemption and of foreclosure must be co-extensive in time and that it is not open to the parties to make provision to the contrary. In Shyam Lal v. Jagdamba Prasad (9) it was laid down that in the absence of any agreement express or implied to the contrary the right to redeem and the right to foreclose must be regarded as co-extensive. This proposition however does not help the appellants because there is, in my opinion, in the present mortgage deed a provision which gives the right of redemption at an earlier period than the right for foreclosure. In Kalka Prasad v. Bhuiyan Din (10) there was a sale deed with an agreement to re-convey of the year 1845. On p. 303* the judgment stated:

I do not think that this proposition will assist the appellants. Having regard to the circumstances of the present case I find two reasons against this appeal succeeding. The first reason is that there was a statutory right under the Ben. Regns. No. I of 1798 and No. XVII of 1806 which were in force in 1872 and this statutory right gave the mortgagors the right to redeem within any stipulated period provided in the deed. Therefore, even if there had been only a period of two years in the deed, the statutory right existed by which the mortgagors could have redeemed from the date of execution and the suit would therefore be barred by the period of limitation in question under Art. 148 of the present Lim. Act. Secondly, I find that the interpretation of the clause in the deed itself does give this right of redemption within the period of 2 years and in the first year of that period in the part of the month of Sawan which remained from the date of execution. For these two reasons this suit would be time-barred. No further point has been raised in the grounds of objection to the decree. Accordingly, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed. There is a cross-objection in regard to costs. The lower Appellate Court decreed that the defendants will bear their own costs although the suit was to be dismissed. The defence of limitation is a technical one and it is for this reason that the Court below exercised its discretion and directed that each party would pay their own costs. I do not see any reason for interfering with this discretion and I would dismiss the cross-objection but without costs.

Varma, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. In my judgment the point that arises for decision in this case is governed by the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum (6). The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was one for the redemption of a mortgage by conditional sale made on August 7, 1872 by Yusuf Ali and Ausaf Ali in favour of Ali Asghar. We are informed by learned Counsel appearing for the appellants that the corresponding Hindi date for August 7, 1872 was Sawan

Sudi 3, Sambat 1929. The plaintiffs are the representatives of the mortgagors and the principal defendants are the representatives of the mortgagee. The mortgage deed in question, after reciting that the total amount due from the mortgagors to the mortgagee on the date of the execution of the document was Rs. 1,203-1-6, and setting out certain other preliminary facts proceeds thus:

Baewaz mubligh 1,203-1-6 mazkura bala ke rehan miadi do sal yani bai bilwafa kardiya wa tamam wa zara saman apna murtahin se wasul paya ab dame wa dirame yaftani mera zimme murtahin ke baqi nahin hai. aur igrar yeh hai ki andar do sal ke jab rupiya mahina Sawan men naqd yekmusht ada karyden tab us sal jaedad haqiqat apni fak rehan kara lewen aur agar andar do sal ke rupiya ada na ho to bad do sal ke yeh bai bilwafa bai kamil ho jaega aur murtahin malik mustaqil shai marhuna ka hoga.

The suit was filed on August 7, 1934. The main defence was one of limitation. It was contended by the defendants that, although a term of 2 years was fixed in the mortgage deed, yet the later clause clearly conferred on the mortgagors the right to redeem before the expiry of that term if they paid the mortgage money in the month of any Sawan within that period of 2 years, that the right to redeem accrued to the mortgagors at least in the month of Sawan in 1873 A. D., and that the suit, having been brought more than 60 years thereafter, was barred under Art. 148, Lim. Act. The first Court repelled the contention of the defendants and decreed the suit but the lower Appellate Court has held that the suit was barred by time. The learned Counsel appearing for the appellants has urged that the general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation, express or implied to the contrary, the right to redeem, and the right to foreclose are co-extensive, and has cited the case in Vadju v. Vadju (1). His argument is that there is no "stipulation, express or implied, to the contrary" in the mortgage deed in question. He has further argued that, on a true construction of the deed, the mortgagee was not entitled to foreclose before the expiry of the 2 years mentioned in the deed and that it must therefore be held that the mortgagors also were not entitled to redeem at any time before the 2 years had expired. He urges therefore that the right to redeem accrued for the first time on August 7, 1874 and that the suit, having been filed on August 7, 1934, was within time.

The question that arises for consideration is whether the learned Counsel is right in contending that there is no "stipulation to the contrary" in the mortgage deed in question. It seems to me that there is a clear stipulation in the deed which expressly provides for an exception to the general principle relied upon by the learned Counsel. There is no doubt that it is open to the parties to a mortgage transaction to enter into an agreement that the mortgagor shall be at liberty to redeem within that term. In Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed on p. 199* of the record :

"Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of the mortgagor."

It is not necessary in my opinion to consider whether the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants that the mortgagee in this case could not foreclose before the expiry of the term of 2 years is correct or not. Assuming that his contention is well founded it is open to the parties to agree that, although the mortgagee shall not be entitled to foreclose before the expiry of the term, the mortgagor shall be entitled to redeem before its expiry. If I may say so with respect, the point has been well put by Niamatullah J., in his judgment in the Full Bench case in Muhammad Husain v. Sanwal Das (7) at p. 968 of the record :

"..... A condition like the one found in these deeds is always for the benefit of the mortgagor, who cannot be sued by the mortgagee within that term but may himself pay it if he likes. The term is always intended as a measure of forbearance which the mortgagee agrees to show."

The only question therefore that arises for consideration is whether, on a true construction of the mortgage deed in question, there is a stipulation entitling the mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the term fixed. It seems to me that that question must, in view of the language of the deed be answered in the affirmative. I have already quoted the relevant passage. The provision that whenever the mortgagor paid off the mortgage money in any Sawan within the 2 years he would be entitled in that year to redeem the mortgage clearly shows to my mind that the intention of the parties was that the mortgagor was to have the right to redeem before the expiry of the term of 2 years. It is hardly necessary to point out that one deed cannot be interpreted in the light of the language used in other deeds as was observed in Kalka Prasad v. Bhuiyan Din (10) at p. 303* :

The language of the deed, what we have to consider, leaves no room for doubt in my opinion that the parties clearly intended that the mortgagor would have the right to redeem before the expiry of the term. In Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum (6) their Lordships, after making the observations quoted above, proceeded to consider whether in the case before them there was any stipulation entitling the mortgagor to discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Their Lordships found that it was admitted in paras. 2 and 8 of the plaint in that case that there was such a stipulation between the parties. That being so, their Lordships held that the suit for redemption was barred. It is to be noted that in that case the mortgage deed itself was not on the record and the only evidence of the transaction was to be found in a certain proceeding of the Collector's Court. In the case before us the deed has been filed and, as already observed, on a true interpretation of its language the only conclusion possible is that the parties did enter into an agreement laying down the clear "stipulation to the contrary." The general principle relied upon by the learned Counsel, namely that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are co-extensive, is therefore not applicable in the present case.

Learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar (2). The point that arose for their Lordships' consideration in that case was in my opinion a different one. What their Lordships had to consider was whether, as the result of an option given to the mortgagee, to call in his money before the expiry of the term fixed, the "money becomes due" within the meaning of Art. 132, Lim. Act. The question that arises in the case before us, on the other hand, is when the right to redeem or to recover possession accrued to the mortgagors within the meaning of Art. 148, Lim. Act. The other cases cited by the learned Counsel for the appellants are also inapplicable as has been pointed out by my learned brother. I also agree that the cross-objection is without force and should be dismissed, but would make no order as to costs.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs throughout. The cross-objection is dismissed, but no order as to costs of the cross-objection is made.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 22, 90—Suit against joint family—Pleader appointed by Court as guardian ad litem on behalf of minor members—In execution, another mentioned as guardian—No order removing Pleader and appointing another as guardian ad litem—Sale held unsustainable against minors—Sale also held should be set aside in its entirety.

Once the Court has found that the legal conditions do not exist for proceeding with an execution, then there is a lack of jurisdiction in the carrying on of that execution; and all the proceedings taken in the execution which was not properly constituted in the absence of proper notice under O. XXI, r. 22 must fall to the ground.

The Court appointed a Pleader on behalf of the minor members of the joint family in a suit against them, to be their guardian ad litem. But in the execution application no mention was made of the Pleader. The execution was sought to be taken against minors as under guardianship of another person. No notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was sent to the Pleader guardian and to the minors through him. There was no order removing him and appointing another as guardian ad litem so as to authorise the latter to represent the minors in the execution proceedings or to make any admission on their behalf or any terms with the decree-holders with reference to the proceedings in the execution and to such matters as adjournments on conditions:

Held, that the sale of the shares of the minors could not be sustained. Walian v. Banke Behari (1) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (2), distinguished.

Held, also that since the sale of the entire joint family property was found to be without title against the share of the minor members, and it was not confirmed by the time when the minors objected to the sale and there was no mutual understanding between the Court and the bidders as to what was being put to sale, the sale should be set aside in its entirety and not only as against share of the minors.

A. from the original order of the Sub-Judge, Patna, dated July 11, 1938.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad and Chowdhury Mathura Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. P. Sinha and Kaushal Kishore Sinha, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This is an appeal by the decree-holders who in execution of a money decree against a number of members of a joint family put up to sale certain properties of the joint family. After the sale three of these members presented objections under s. 47, Civil P. C., and also under O. XXI, r. 90 contending that the execution as against them was not properly constituted at its inception and the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with it. The Court allowed the objection and declared that the sale which had been held should not affect the interest of the minor judgment-debtors who were petitioners before it. The facts as to representation of these minors are that in the original suit they were represented by a Pleader, Babu Jagdish Chandra Mitra, appointed by the Court to be their guardian ad litem; but in the execution application no reference is made to the above-named Pleader. Execution was sought to be taken against the minors describing them as under the guardianship of Gobardhan Das who is brother of one and uncle of others of the minors and is the managing member of the joint family. In the course of the proceedings in execution Gobardhan appeared. He took time and he obtained adjournments of the sale from date to date, asking for adjournments on some of these occasions in the name of all the judgment-debtors including the minors and waiving all objections regarding the necessity of issuing a fresh sale proclamation in consequence of the sale having been adjourned. The sale was eventually held on May 5, 1938 and the property knocked down to the decree-holders and the objection under s. 47 and the application under O. XXI, r. 90 was presented on June 4, 1938. It is presented in the name of the minors through Babu Radha Kishun Daga their maternal uncle. An application was presented for the discharge of Babu Jagdish Chandra Mitra and appointment of the maternal uncle as their next friend. It is obvious that the failure in the execution petition to name Babu Jagdish Chandra Mitra as the guardian ad litem of the minor and to issue notice to him under O. XXI, r. 22 and to the minors through him was in contravention of the correct procedure. It is clear too that there is no order of the Court either removing him or appointing Gobardhan Das as guardian ad litem so as to authorize the latter to represent the minors in the execution proceeding and to make any admissions on their behalf or any terms with the decree-holders with reference to the proceedings in the execution and to such matters as adjournments on conditions. The question is whether these defects are to be considered fatal to the proceedings.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad has relied on the Privy Council decision in Walian v. Banke Behari (1) in which a decree and sale in execution had been obtained against minors whose mother had been nominated by the opposite party to be guardian ad litem and had in fact appeared and acted as such throughout the proceedings, but the Court had never passed a formal order appointing her to be guardian ad litem. In a suit brought by the minors years afterwards to set aside the sale and recover possession of the property the Privy Council held that the sale was not a nullity, that the alleged irregularities had not caused prejudice to the plaintiffs and they could get no relief. The position here, however, is not quite on all fours. In Walian v. Banke Behari (1) all the parties had for years acted on the supposition that the mother had been properly appointed and had acted as guardian lawfully and regularly. The proceedings were held not to be bad merely because that understanding proved in fact to be mistaken. In effect, an arrangement had been proposed and carried out for the representation of the minor, an arrangement which, if the attention of the Court had been given to it, would have been clearly unobjectionable and would have been approved. But in the case before us, it is not so; on the face of the record it was apparent that the proposal to appoint Gobardhan to represent the minors was highly objectionable for the obvious reason that there was already a guardian ad litem appointed for the suit, including the execution proceedings also, therefore an order appointing Gobardhan can hardly be supposed to have been made by implication when in the circumstances it could not be made. No doubt it was possible for the Court to remove the Pleader and thereafter to appoint Gobardhan, but the Court at this stage was not asked to remove the Pleader. So the condition precedent to Gobardhan being appointed or acting as guardian ad litem did not exist. Along with the difficulty arising out of O. XXXII, Civil P. C., we have also to consider the bearing of O. XXI, r. 22 which requires a notice to be served on the judgment-debtor to show cause why execution should not be levied. No such notice was served on the guardian ad litem appointed by the Court who should have received notice on behalf of the minors.

It is said that a notice was served on Gobardhan and Mr. Mahabir Prasad suggests that this notice though served on a wrong person may suffice to give the Court jurisdiction to proceed with the execution. No doubt the service of notice on a wrong person does not in all cases invalidate the proceedings in execution. There was the case in Malkarjun v. Narhari (2) in which the notice had been served on the wrong person as the legal representative of a deceased mortgagor. An objection was taken in those proceedings that the person on whom notice had been served was not the legal representative. The Court considered that objection and decided against it. The property was sold. Years afterwards when a suit was brought to avoid the sale on account of the defect in the proceedings owing to the wrong person having been brought on the record and the right person not having been brought on the record, their Lordships held that the sale could not be defeated as the Court had jurisdiction to hold it; it had jurisdiction to hold rightly or wrongly that the person who had been brought on the record was the legal representative of the deceased debtor. But this case is different. Here we are not trying after long lapse of time the effect of proceedings which have long ago reached their conclusion in the Court which was seised of them. But we are dealing with a pending case and a sale which has not yet been confirmed. We are also not dealing with a case in which the Court has mistakenly held that Gobardhan was the right person to be served with the notice. On the contrary as soon as its attention was drawn to the matter, the Court had no hesitation in finding that Gobardhan was not the right person. Once the Court has found that the legal conditions do not exist for proceeding with an execution, then there is a lack of jurisdiction in the carrying on of that execution; and all the proceedings taken in the execution which was not properly constituted in the absence of proper notice under O. XXI, r. 22 must fall to the ground. It follows therefore that the sale of the share of the respondents was rightly held by the Subordinate Judge to be unsustainable.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad's last contention was that the sale which purported to be a sale of the entire property, a house, should either stand or be set aside as a whole. There is I think substance in the contention. This is not a case in which the sale has been confirmed, possession taken and enjoyed for years but in respect of part or a share of the property without title. In that state of things there are cases in which the purchaser has retained possession of so much of the property as could in those proceedings have been validly sold to him. It was indeed too late to set aside the entire sale. But here the sale not having been yet confirmed (I speak with reference to the date of the objections before the Subordinate Judge) it is to be considered what was being put up for sale and for what the purchaser was bidding. If there was not a mutual understanding between the Court and the bidders as to what was being put up to sale, it is difficult to say that such a sale can be confirmed. For the respondents Mr. C. P. Sinha has no objection to this direction being given. In the result the appeal is dismissed subject to a direction that the order of the Subordinate Judge be read as an order setting aside the sale in its entirety. The respondents are entitled to their costs actually incurred by them.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Application in Suit No. 941 of 1939

August 8, 1939

KANIA, J.

SHRIRAM HANUTRAM—PLAINTIFF

versus

MOHANLAL & Co.—DEFENDANTS.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Fact of contract itself disputed—Arbitrators, if can decide that point—Court, if can grant stay—Submission in writing—S. 19, nature of.

As the Arbitration Act requires a submission in writing, the fact that a contract or submission in writing exists is to be established by the person who comes to Court and applies for a stay. On the assumption that a contract which contains a submission in writing exists, an application may be made because on that assumption the fact of the contract cannot be decided by the arbitrators. It is the normal course of procedure in such cases (337 (2) and 69 Ind. Cas.)

Merely sending a copy of the contract without any confirmation by the party does not amount to a submission required by the Act (s. 19), explained.

Section 19, Arbitration Act, summary procedure in cases of lengthy or protracted contracts.

Mr. M. C. Setalvala for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah for the Defendant.

Order.—This is an application under s. 19, Arbitration Act, for an order setting aside the award of the arbitrators. The plaintiff alleges that the arbitrators, by awarding the contract to the defendant, have acted in violation of the terms of the contract. The defendant, who is a member of the East India Company Ltd., claims that the award is valid and that the plaintiff is bound by it. The plaintiff claims that the award is invalid and that the contract is void. The arbitrators have held that the contract is valid and that the plaintiff is bound by it. The plaintiff claims that the arbitrators have acted in violation of the terms of the contract. The defendant claims that the arbitrators have acted in accordance with the terms of the contract. The court has heard the arguments of both parties and has decided in favour of the defendant. The award is valid and the plaintiff is bound by it.

Mohanlal agreed that the contract notes were sent to the plaintiff through mistake. The plaintiff thereupon personally went to the defendants' shop and returned the contract notes to the defendants. According to the plaintiff therefore he had given no instructions for those transactions and had not accepted the contract notes.

The first question which arises is whether there is a submission in writing as required by the Arbitration Act. The only submission in writing which can be alleged is in the contract notes sent by the defendants to the plaintiff and alleged to be accepted by the plaintiff. In this connection the defendants rely on the decision of Blackwell, J., in Rambaksh v. Bombay Cotton Co. (1). On behalf of the plaintiff, on the other hand, it is contended that the contracts are not signed by him. He denies acceptance thereof and he has contended that Rambaksh v. Bombay Cotton Co. (1) has no application to the facts of this case. On behalf of the plaintiff it is further urged that the arbitrators have no jurisdiction to determine whether the contracts in fact were made, i e., instructions were given by the plaintiff to the defendants which resulted in contracts of sale and purchase as put forward by the defendants. As that goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the arbitrators, the arbitrators cannot decide the point and therefore the application cannot be entertained. In respect of the option transactions the plaintiff contends that the agreement is of reference according to the rules and bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association, Ltd. Rule 38-A does not deal with option transactions at all and there is no other rule which can cover an arbitration in respect of option transactions. It is further urged by the plaintiff that in respect of the option contracts also there is no reference in fact to arbitration although the contracts state that the disputes shall be referred according to the rules of the East India Cotton Association, Ltd. On the affidavits it appears to be common ground that if no claim is left in respect of the sale and purchase of the 2000 bales no money is due by the plaintiff to the defendants. The principal questions therefore to be determined are: (1) whether in respect of the forward transactions of sale and purchase of 2000 bales there is a contract between the parties; and (2) whether there is a submission in writing as required by the Act.

(1) 32 Bom. L. R. 1451; 128 Ind. Cas. 881; A. I. R. 1931 Bom. 81; Ind. Rul. (1931) Bom. 97.

In Mahomed Haji (2) a petition was awarded inter alia on arbitrators had no jurisdiction whether the 800 and 100 bales as contracts there. In that were repudiated by the confirmation notes were. In the course of Wadia, J. observed as "The very factum or contracts being denied, there out of or in relation to the red to arbitration."

After considering the learned Judge (p. 701*):

"... but in my opinion in relation to a contract is denied are not disput have jurisdiction to decide arbitrators have no jurisdiction in fact the contracts were made."

Jai Nerrain Babu Jaini Mal (3) was aside an award. Shivering the judgments (p. 305†):

"Now it is quite clear profess to determine the factum or the validity think that either of these cognizance of the arbitrators."

A distinction exists which is voidable on outside the contract itself whether there was a submission in writing, the fact that a submission in writing exists by the person who applies for a stay. On a contract which contains writing exists, an application because on that assumption have jurisdiction. If the itself is disputed then decide the point, an normal course would be present case as the computation, I do not think jurisdiction to decide contract at all, and the must fall on that ground.

Gorakhpur, dated September 15, 1931.

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and Shambhu Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sri Narain Sahai, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by the plaintiff Baba Jagtanand Brahmchari whose suit has been dismissed by the learned Civil Judge of Gorakhpur. The suit as brought was in the first instance for a declaration that a number of sale-deeds between 1893 and 1916 were not binding on the math and Mahadeoji installed in Mauza Mathia Muafi in Gorakhpur District and the plaintiff might be put in possession of the property.
Later, this relief was struck out and the relief asked was a simple decree for possession of the property in favour of the plaintiff. This point is of importance because the allegations for a suit asking for the first relief are materially different from the allegations in a suit asking for possession.
The plaintiff headed his plaint by describing himself as "disciple of Swami Lachchmi Charan, deceased, residing at the math at Mauza Mathia Muafi." It would appear therefore that he at first thought of claiming as a disciple or chela of one of the mahants, but that was not proved by the evidence and the learned Counsel for the appellant-plaintiff states that he does not now claim to be a chela of a mahant. The status of the plaintiff is set out in para. 10 of the plaint:

"The plaintiff is also a Nihang sanyasi. He has for the last four years, been performing all the religious services relating to the math and Shri Mahadeoji, installed in the said math. He has also started a Sanskrit and Hindi Pathshala under the auspices of the said math. He personally performs the service and worship of Shri Mahadeoji, aforesaid and imparts religious teachings and has it done by others."

The table attached to the plaint shows that the property in question is situated in a number of villages. There were various written statements. One of these, on p. 13, para. 5 states that there was never any math in Mauza Mathia and in para. 10:

"The entire Mauza Mathia Muafi was originally the family property of Mahipal Singh. The ancestors of the said proprietors personally gave some land by way of birt to Shambhu Gir, Ratan Gir, Thamman Gir, Bhawani Bakhsh Upadhis, Kunjan Gir and Pargash Singh. Thus the persons mentioned at the end were the owners in possession of the property aforesaid and in every way entitled to transfer it. Accordingly, on the death of Shambhu Gir, his son and disciple Bundel Gir, became owner in possession by right of inheritance...

The Court framed issue No. 1 which was: "Whether the plaintiff can maintain the present suit or is it barred by s. 92, Civil P. O.?" The latter part of the issue does not now arise as the suit was altered to one for possession. On p. 22 the plaintiff gave evidence and he stated that his residence was at math Kuber Nath which is another place from the alleged math a Mauza Mathia. He states on p. 23, line 27:

"I was born in Mauza Koraya at a distance of 5 or 6 miles from village Mathia Muafi...my wife is alive, but I have no issue."

On p. 22 he states:

"I was married at the age of 10 years by my parents. I left my home when I was about 12 years of age for my father used to punish me...I became a sanyasi about 25 or 30 years ago...I became a sanyasi at Deoghat Asthan in Raj Naipal. I came back to a place called Kuber Nath in this District about 8 or 9 years ago...In village Kuber Nath there is a temple of Shiva known as Kuber Nath temple...I got the temple repaired and started a Sanskrit school...From Kuber Nath I used to go out for collecting funds by begging to the neighbouring villages and once I happened to reach the village Mathia Muafi about four or five years ago...In village Mathia Muafi I discovered a temple of Shiva and a math in ruins. A math means a monastery. The residents of village Mathia Muafi and even of other places requested me to take some interest in the shrine and the monastery in the village Mathia Muafi. I got the shrine and the math repaired and white-washed and started a school there for the study of Sanskrit and Hindi. The worship in the shrine in village Mathia Muafi is conducted by myself when I am in the village. But when I am not there the Sanskrit teacher conducts the worship."

Now this statement shows that the plaintiff is not in any way connected with the alleged math at the village of Mathia Muafi. He happened to come there as it was a suitable place to have a school, and finding an image there he conducts some worship of that image, but there is no math shown to be in existence at this place called Mathia Muafi and the plaintiff cannot be said to be in possession of a math in any way. We do not think that on his own allegation the plaintiff has shown that he is a person who could bring a suit like the present which is a suit for possession. No doubt anyone who is a worshipper at a temple or of an image, if he obtains permission under s. 92, Civil P. O., can bring a suit for the declaratory reliefs allowed by that section; but the present is not a suit under s. 92, Civil P. O., and we consider that for a suit like the present for possession of property, alleged to have been illegally transferred by previous persons who were in legal possession of that property, the plaintiff would have to show some right or title to claim possession. The mere worship of the image does not constitute a math, nor does it give the plaintiff any right to bring such a suit for the possession of zamindari property. Learned Counsel referred to a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council: Ram Charan Das v. Naurangi Lal (1), at p. 328, where their Lordships stated:

"Their Lordships however are not now concerned with any question of title because both the Courts below have found that the plaintiff is the person in actual possession of the Paliganj math and as such entitled to maintain a suit to recover property not for his own benefit but for the benefit of the math."

That dictum will not apply to the present case because the plaintiff fails to establish that he is in any way in possession of a math. As regards the question as to whether there ever was a math or any endowed property, we have been taken over a number of documents which learned Counsel for the appellant has had printed in a supplementary record. (After examining certain documents the judgment concluded as follows.) Having examined these documents, we find that there is no document whatever which purports to be the endowment of a math or the creation of endowed property or the endowment of a temple or of deities. It is therefore clear that the plaintiff has failed to prove that there ever was any endowed property or any math or that he is in possession of any math. The plaintiff therefore has in our opinion failed to show that he has a right to obtain possession of property which was transferred by the documents between the years 1893 to 1916. These documents were executed by persons who were at the time in legal possession of the property and during all the years from the time of those documents until plaintiff filed the suit in 1930 no one made any challenge of the right to transfer. It remained for the plaintiff who is a mere wandering sanyasi claiming to be a Nihang sanyasi to bring the suit. The word "Nihang" means celibate and it is clear from the fact that in this property the succession was from father to son that the persons were not celibates. We do not think that the plaintiff has any right of suit. Accordingly we dismiss this first appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Application No. 15 of 1939

August 15, 1939

DIVATIA, J.

P. M. DIXIT—APPLICANT

versus

SENIOR INSPECTOR OF FACTORIES—

OPPONENT

Payment of Wages Act (IV of 1936), ss. 15, 15(3), 3, 19—Revision—Finding whether wages were delayed and mill was working during material period cannot be disturbed—Claim for delayed wages—Proceedings under s. 15(3), against whom to be taken.

A finding of the lower Court on the question whether the wages were delayed and whether the mill was working during the material period or not, cannot be disturbed in revision application, whether the finding is right or wrong.

If a manager of a factory is appointed by the owner the proceedings on an application under s. 15(3), Payment of Wages Act, for a claim of delayed wages should be against the manager alone, but if no manager is appointed they should be against the employer. The liability of the employer would arise only if it is subsequently found that the whole or part of the amount could not be recovered from the manager. The use of the word "or" instead of "and" clearly shows that the proceedings under s. 15 are to be instituted against only one person, whether he is the manager or the employer, but not against both.

C. R. App. against an order of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 463 of 1937.

Messrs. M. G. Purohit and N. N. Majumdar, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. G. Rao, Assistant Govt. Pleader, for the Opponent.

Order.—This revisional application arising under the Payment of Wages Act is preferred by original opponents Nos. 1 and 3 against whom, along with opponent No. 2, the original application was filed by the Senior Inspector of Factories. Opponents Nos. 1 and 2 were described as co-owners of a mill called the Vimal Mills Ltd., at Ahmedabad and the third was described as the manager. It was filed to recover Rs. 2,000 odd as the delayed wages of workers in the mill under s. 15 of the Act under which the authority, in this case the Stipendiary Magistrate, is to hear the applicant and the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3, and, after such further inquiry as may be necessary, direct the payment of the delayed wages. Various defences were taken on behalf of the opponents. One of them was that the owner or employer, who was opponent No. 1 (opponent No. 2 was not found to be a co-owner), could not be impleaded in the application, under s. 15. It was further contended that the application, which was originally filed in the Court of the Additional City Magistrate, Ahmedabad, was transferred by the District Magistrate to the Court of the City Magistrate, and that the District Magistrate had no power to direct such transfer. It was also contended that the mill was not working at the material time for which the application was made, namely the period between March 28, 1937 to April 30, 1937 and that therefore the mill authorities were not liable to pay any wages to the workers.

The learned Magistrate held that opponent No. 2 was not liable on the ground that he had no interest in the mill, and the application as against him was dismissed. On the merits the learned Magistrate found that part of the mill was working up to April 30, 1937, that the manager, who was opponent No. 3 was also working as such till that date, that there was, therefore, no reason why the workers should not have been paid up to the period when the mill was working, that is, up to April 30, 1937 and that no reason was given on behalf of the opponents why payments were not made to the workers in time. The learned Magistrate, therefore, passed an order for the payment of the delayed wages plus Rs. 5 per head as compensation against opponent No. 3, i. e., the manager, in the first instance, and directed that if the whole or part of the amount could not be recovered from him, the balance should be recovered from the employer, i. e., opponent No. 1, under s. 19 according to which if the authority passing the order of payment under s. 15 or s. 17 against any person (other than an employer) liable under s. 3 is unable to recover the amount, it shall be recovered from the employer.

Against this order there was an appeal by opponents Nos. 1 and 3 to the Court of the District Judge at Ahmedabad as provided in s. 17 of the Act. On behalf of opponent No. 1 it was contended that no order could be passed against him under s. 15 as his liability would arise only under s. 19 if and when the whole of the amount could not be recovered from the manager. It was also contended on the merits that the mill was not working during the material period, and therefore, no party was liable. The contention urged before the Magistrate as to the illegality of the transfer by the District Magistrate was also repeated before the learned District Judge.

The learned District Judge has rejected the appeal on all the grounds and has confirmed the order of the learned City

Magistrate. With regard to opponent No. 1, the learned Judge does feel a difficulty in passing the order as against the employer, i. e., appellant No. 1 before him, and he says that the contention as urged by him is correct, but though the proceedings under s. 15 were to be taken against the person responsible, namely the manager, still as the trial Court had directed that the employer was liable only for that much of the amount which could not be recovered from the manager, there was no illegality in that order. Besides, appellant No. 1 had no right of appeal as no appeal by an employer against an order passed under s. 19 of the Act had been provided. On the other points, the learned Judge has confirmed the findings of the Magistrate and held that part of the mill was working till April 30, and that the original opponent No. 3 continued to work as manager during that whole period. With regard to the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate to make the transfer, the learned Judge was rather doubtful as to who was the officer who could make an order for transfer in this case, but as the City Magistrate was one of the authorities mentioned in s. 15 (1), who could take cognizance of the application under that section, he was of opinion that there was no illegality because ultimately the Magistrate who tried the case was a Magistrate who had jurisdiction to do so under the section. Against this order of the District Judge dismissing the appeal the two opponents have come to this Court in revision under s. 115, Civil P. O., and all the grounds urged by them before the lower Court have been also urged before me.

With regard to the merits of the case as to whether the wages were delayed, and, secondly, whether the mill was working during the material period or not, both the Courts have found against the present petitioners on the evidence, and whether those findings are right or wrong, they could not be disturbed in this revision application. But even apart from that, I am satisfied that the mill had not entirely closed down and no notice had been given to the workers that the mill would stop working after a particular time. It is also found that opponent No. 3, i. e., applicant No. 2, here, did work as manager during that period. Therefore there is no doubt in this case about his liability under s. 15 (3) of the Act. The only point that requires consideration is about the liability of the first applicant in this application under

s. 15 (3) under which the authority is to hear the applicant and the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3. Under this section every employer shall be responsible for the payment to persons employed by him of all wages required to be paid under the Act: provided that in the case of persons employed in a factory if a person has been named as the manager of the factory under the Factories Act, the manager would be responsible for the payment; in the case of industrial establishments, if there is a person responsible to the employer for the supervision and control of that establishment, then such person who is responsible to the employer is liable and thirdly, in the case of railways, if the employer is the railway administration and the railway administration has nominated a person in this behalf for the local area concerned, then the person so nominated shall be responsible. The present case is that of a factory, so that if a person is named as the manager of the factory under the Factories Act, then he would be liable for the payment of wages.

Now, turning back to s. 15 (3), it says that "the authority shall hear the applicant and the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages." On behalf of the applicants it is contended that the proper party, or rather the only party, to these proceedings is the manager if the employer has appointed any such manager. In this case it is clear that Mr. Dave, original opponent No. 3, has been employed as manager. It is therefore contended that the application should have been filed against him alone and not against the original employer Mr. Dixit. In reply to that it is contended that the section speaks of the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3, and that therefore the case of the employer is also included in this section, so that he also could be proceeded against. Although it is conceded that by virtue of the provisions of s. 19, the employer cannot be made responsible for the amount in the first instance but that he is responsible only for the balance which could not be recovered from the manager, it is urged that it is not illegal on the part of the Magistrate to direct, if the employer is made a party, that the amount should be recovered in the first instance from the manager, and in so far as the whole or part of the amount could not be recovered from him, the balance should be recovered from the employer. The learned Judge himself has felt some difficulty in maintaining the order as originally passed against opponent No. 1. He says that the contention of the employer seems to be correct because the proceedings under s. 15, are to be taken against the person responsible under s. 3, i. e., the manager in this case, but that when the authority is unable to recover the amount from him, it can give a direction to recover the amount from the employer under s. 19. Then he says that it was not however clear whether the lower Court found before passing the order under s. 19, that the money could not be recovered from the manager and he winds up his reasoning by observing: "There are however no provisions for an appeal against an order passed under s. 19."

If the learned Judge was of opinion, as he seems to have been, that petitioner No. 1 was a proper party under s. 15, it is erroneous to say that he has no right of appeal on the ground that no right of appeal has been provided under s. 19, because in that case the order against the employer would be both under ss. 15 and 19. Besides, his further reasoning that although it was not yet clear that the money could not be recovered from the manager, still an order could be passed against the employer before that is ascertained appears to me to be incorrect. The point is in what sense is the word "employer" used in sub-s. (3) of s. 15? The words are, "the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3." Does it mean the employer where no manager is appointed, or also the employer where a manager is appointed? It is contended on behalf of the opponent here that the word "employer" is also used in the sense of an employer where a manager is appointed, and that therefore even though the manager would in the first instance be liable, the employer could also be made a party in the proceedings under s. 15 and an order against him be passed under s. 19. This argument however seems to me to be erroneous. Section 3, speaks of the liability of an employer or any other person who is named as the manager. In other words, the section means that in all cases where a manager or a responsible person or a nominated person is appointed then these persons are liable, but where no such persons are appointed or nominated in the case of factories, industrial establishments or railways, then in those cases only it would be the employer who would be responsible for the payment of wages and therefore it is that the words as they appear in sub-s. (3) of s. 15 are "the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3." It should be noted that the words are not "the employer and other person responsible," but they are "the employer or other person responsible for the payment of wages under s. 3." In other words, it is distinctly contemplated that the proceedings in the first instance should be against either the employer or against the manager but not against both. Therefore, if a manager is appointed the proceedings should be against the manager alone, but if no manager is appointed they should be against the employer. I think the use of the word "or" instead of "and" clearly shows that the proceedings under s. 15 are to be instituted against only one person, whether he is the manager as in this case, or the employer, but not against both.

It is true that if after the order is passed against him the whole of the amount could not be recovered from the manager, the balance could be recovered from the employer under s. 19 and no appeal is provided against an order passed under s. 19, with the result that as the employer cannot be made a party to the application under s. 15, in the first instance, and if subsequently an order is passed against the employer to recover the balance from him, the employer has no right of appeal against that order passed under s. 19 and that it may appear inequitable that the employer should be saddled with liability without giving him any right of appeal against the order. But the remedy, if at all, to that defect is, in my opinion, in the hands of the Legislature. It cannot however be contended that in order to give a right of appeal to the employer, he should also be impleaded as a party in the first instance where a manager has been appointed. Looking to the plain phraseology of s. 15 (3) and reading with ss. 3 and 19, I think it is clear that the manager alone in this case ought to have been made a party to the application, and that the liability of the employer would arise only if it is subsequently found that the whole or part of the amount could not be recovered from the manager. I think the Legislature contemplated that before fixing the employer with any liability, it must be first found that the whole or any part of the amount could not be recovered from the manager. There is no such finding in this case, and there could not be any such finding as the stage of recovery from the manager has not yet come.

In the result therefore I am of opinion, that Mr. Dixit, opponent No. 1, i. e., applicant No. 1 here, was not a proper party to this application under s. 15 and that the order against him should be set aside. The order against applicant No. 2, i. e., the manager Mr. Dave, is maintained. As regards applicant No. 2 the rule is discharged with costs. As regards applicant No. 1 the rule is made absolute with costs.

D.

First Appeal No. 209 of 1937

THOM, C. J. AND GANGA NATH, J.

JAGGO BAI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

HARIHAR PRASAD SINGH, PLAINTIFF

AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS

Vendor and purchaser—Breach of contract—Held vendors and not vendee liable for breach—Specific performance—Alternative claim for refund—Claim by vendee for specific performance or in alternative for refund of purchase money—Withdrawal of former claim—Vendee, if can claim refund—Interest—Purchaser, if entitled to interest on purchase price.

Vendors made an offer to the vendee to execute a deed of transfer of their mortgagee rights. The offer, however, was not bona fide. One of the vendors who by separate agreement had covenanted to transfer his share in the mortgagee rights to the vendee, if called upon, did not carry out his part of the agreement:

Held, that the vendee and not the vendors committed the breach of the contract.

Where upon a breach of contract by the vendors the vendee claims a decree for specific performance or in the alternative a refund with interest of the amount of the purchase price paid by him but withdraws during the pendency of the suit his claim for specific performance and the vendors do not suffer from the suit, the vendee is not debarred from claiming the refund as the claim seeks only restitutio in integrum and is not strictly one of damages. 111 Ind. Cas. 413 (1), distinguished. Nicholson v. Brown (2), discussed. 94 Ind. Cas. 782 (3), relied on.

In a suit on breach of contract by the vendor, the vendee is entitled to a claim for interest upon the amount of purchase price paid by him to the vendor and retained by him even after his repudiation of the contract. 173 Ind. Cas. 15 (4) and 119 Ind. Cas. 615 (5), referred to.

F. A. from decision of the Civil Judge. Banda, dated March 19, 1937.

Sir Syed Wazir Hasau, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ambika Prasad, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff prayed for the following reliefs:

"(a) That the defendants be ordered to execute a deed of assignment of their mortgagee right under the mortgage deed, dated February 18, 1921, executed by the late Bindeshwari Prasad in favour of the defendants on payment by the plaintiff of a sum of Rs. 23,000, the balance of the amount of sale consideration, or any other amount that the Court may be pleased to fix, and a decree in favour of the plaintiff be passed for the specific performance of the contract against the defendants. (b) That if, for any reason, in the opinion of the Court a decree for specific performance of contract cannot be passed, the defendants may be ordered to refund the sum of Rs. 29,000 with interest to the plaintiff, and a decree for a sum of Rs. 26,000 be passed against defendant No. 1 and for a sum of Rs. 3,000 against defendant No. 2 with interest by way of compensation from the date of payment up to the date of realization, and the Court may grant any further relief."

On December 16, 1928 the appellant, Mst. Jaggo Bai, agreed to transfer to the plaintiff her mortgagee rights under a mortgage executed by Bindeshwari Prasad on February 1, 1921. The sale price of the mortgagee rights was fixed at Rs. 52,000. The material clauses of the deed executed by Mst. Jaggo Bai are as follows:

"Accordingly negotiations for transfer of the document aforesaid together with all the rights were started with Rai Bahadur B. Harihar Prasad Singh through B. Girja Shankar Vakil of Lucknow, and it has been settled that I shall transfer the amount of the mortgage deed aforesaid with interest together with all the rights and powers for a sum of Rs. 52,000 and I shall see that the Rai Bahadur aforesaid acquires the entire property permanently. In case the legal advisers of the Rai Bahadur aforesaid consider that I would not be in a position to transfer the entire property mentioned in the mortgage deed free from all defects and disputes, unless Seth Beni Chand is made to join the deed of transfer, I shall transfer to the Rai Bahadur aforesaid one-half of the property mentioned in the document aforesaid for a sum of Rs. 26,000 without raising any plea or objection. Whenever within three years the Rai Bahadur aforesaid wants I shall execute the deed of transfer in respect of the mortgage deed, dated February 18, 1921, and have it registered in any way and in favour of anyone proposed by him. For the present, I have already received a sum of Rs. 7,000 out of the amount agreed upon by means of a cheque No. 4-A 19897, dated November 28, 1928, and I have this day received Rs. 19,000 by means of cheque No. 4-A 19893, dated December 16, 1928, i. e., in all I have received a sum of Rs. 26,000. At the time of compliance and completion of the deed of transfer I shall, as directed by the Rai Bahadur aforesaid, allow credit for the sum of Rs. 26,000 and accept the balance of the amount settled, whatever it might be, subject to the terms noted above."

The mortgage deed of February 18, 1921 was executed for a sum of Rs. 60,000 in favour of defendant No. 1, Mst. Jaggo Bai, and defendant No. 2, her son Seth Beni Chand. The plaintiff avers that the defendants refused to implement the agreement of December 16, 1928. He accordingly claimed a decree for specific performance or, in the alternative, a decree for refund of Rs. 26,000 plus interest thereon. After the evidence had been completed and during the course of arguments in the trial Court the plaintiff withdrew his claim for decree for specific performance. This was done by means of a statement made by the plaintiff's Pleader, which is in the following terms:

"Babu Makut Behari Lal, Pleader for the plaintiff, stated that regard being had to the facts of the case, he does not want to press the point re-specific performance prayed for in relief (a)."

The plaintiff's claim was contested by both the defendants upon various grounds. In the trial Court, as is apparent from the judgment of the Court, the main issue was as to whether defendant No. 1, Jaggo Bai, had validly executed the agreement of December 16, 1928. In her written statement she averred that she had no knowledge of the contents of the document which she signed. She is a pardanashin lady, and the onus was therefore upon the plaintiff to prove that she had fully understood the import of the document which she signed. The learned Judge in the trial Court held that the plaintiff has discharged that onus. He has accepted the evidence of Mr. Rahim Bux, a leading Mukhtar of Banda, who advised Mst. Jaggo Bai in connection with the execution of the aforesaid agreement. This finding of the learned Civil Judge was not challenged before us in appeal. The decision of the learned Civil Judge was challenged upon two grounds. It was maintained in the first place that the evidence established that the defendants were not in breach of their contract, but that the plaintiff had failed to implement his obligations in connection with the contract, in the second place, it was contended that, assuming that the defendants were in breach of the contract, inasmuch as the plaintiff had withdrawn his claim for decree for specific performance, he was debarred from insisting upon his alternative claim for refund of the amount of the purchase price paid by him to defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The learned Civil Judge granted a decree in terms of the alternative claim, that is, he granted a decree against defendant No. 1 for Rs. 26,000 and interest thereon, and against defendant No. 2 for Rs. 3,000 and interest thereon. Defendant No. 2 filed an appeal against the decision of the learned Judge, but that appeal has been dismissed for default. In regard to the appellant's first contention that she is not in breach of her contract, it is necessary only to refer to the documents' record. (His Lordship then dealt with the correspondence between the parties, and after a full consideration of the same came to the conclusion that the defendants repudiated the contract with the plaintiff. The judgment then proceeded.) It was contended for the appellant that the contract was one under which the plaintiff agreed to accept the transfer of the mortgagee rights under the mortgage of 1921 from Mst. Jaggo Bai and Seth Beni Chand and that they had together offered to transfer these rights to him on December 14, 1931. There are two answers to this contention. The first is that under the deed of agreement of December 16, 1928 Mst. Jaggo Bai covenanted to transfer the half share in the mortgagee rights to the plaintiff, if called upon. The plaintiff did call upon Mst. Jaggo Bai to implement this covenant on December 7, 1931. Mst. Jaggo Bai quite obviously refused to carry out this part of the agreement. Secondly, the offer of December 14, 1931 to execute a deed of transfer of the mortgagee rights by Mst. Jaggo Bai and Seth Beni Chand on payment of Rs. 26,000 was not a bona fide offer to carry out the contract. The sum due by the plaintiff under the contract was Rs. 23,000, and not Rs. 26,000. In these circumstances, in our judgment, the defendants, and not the plaintiff, are in breach of the contract. The appellant's second contention now falls to be considered. As before mentioned, it was maintained on her behalf that in view of the withdrawal of the claim for the relief for specific performance the plaintiff had debarred himself from claiming damages. This contention was based by learned Counsel for the appellant upon the decision of the Privy Council in Ardeshir H. Mama v. Flora Sasoon (1). In that case it was decided that "in a case of breach of contract by one party the other party may elect to put an end to the contract and to sue for damages, or he may keep the contract open and sue for specific performance. In the latter case he must, if required, prove a continuous readiness and willingness from the date of the contract to the time of the hearing to perform the contract on his part. If during the progress of the suit and before the hearing he abandons his claim to specific performance or disentitles himself to that relief by some act on his part, he cannot claim or be awarded by the Court damages in lieu of specific performance of the contract. Jurisdiction to award damages in substitution of the relief for specific performance remains so long as the plaintiff does no act on his part to disentitle himself to a decree for specific performance. A Court may allow a plaintiff for specific performance to be amended into a plaintiff for claim of damages, pure and simple, but discretion to allow such an amendment should be exercised with great care and caution."

It is to be observed that this decision is no authority to the proposition that the Court is precluded from awarding damages in a suit for specific performance where the plaintiff during the pendency of the suit withdraws his claim for specific performance. After an exhaustive review of the law upon the question the Board observed :

"In other words, that the Court should have the power of granting such amendment in a proper case is salutary and indeed necessary. The possibility that the power will be exercised may, in certain cases, be the only effective check upon a defendant to a specific performance suit, who by delay, expensive appeals and other device, sets himself to starve a relatively impecunious plaintiff into submission by making continued performance of the contract on his part beyond his power. And such a power is possessed by the Court in England, and in a proper case and under suitable conditions it may be used see Nicholson v. Brown (2). But it is one to be most carefully and jealously exercised in all the circumstances of each individual case and with due regard to its effect upon the position both of the plaintiff and the defendant. If the defendant is to be prevented by the possible exercise of the power from starving a plaintiff out of his rights, the plaintiff must not by its ill-considered exercise be permitted to turn his suit into a gamble for himself at the defendant's expense. Indeed, so serious in many cases is the exercise of this power that to their Lordships it would appear to be a wise precaution for a Judge before allowing any such amendment in a contested case to require the plaintiff to be actually remodelled in a form appropriate to an action seeking compensation for breach of contract and nothing else. The extent and propriety of what is asked for will thus be made apparent, and the amendment will be allowed or refused with a due appreciation of the position."

The circumstances in the present case are not such, in our judgment, that the Court should refuse to allow the plaintiff to withdraw his claim for specific performance and insist on the alternative claim for refund of part of the purchase price which was paid by him to the defendants. The defendants have not in any way suffered by the suit which has been maintained against them by the plaintiff so far as their rights under the mortgage are concerned. Indeed, they have instituted a suit against the mortgagors on the basis of the mortgage and that suit is still pending. In claiming the refund the plaintiff is not strictly claiming damages at all. He is seeking restitutio in integrum the contract, having fallen through.

In the present suit further there is no question of re-modelling the plaintiff. The plaintiff does not, in fact, sue for damages for breach of contract. He claims the equitable relief that the contract between him and the defendants having fallen through he is entitled to what he has paid to the defendants in respect of the purchase price of the mortgagee rights, which under the contract were to be transferred to him. That the plaintiff is in equity entitled to claim the refund of the portion of the purchase price paid by him we have no doubt and in this connection we would refer to the decision of the Privy Council in Chiranjit Singh v. Har Swarup (3). The facts in that case were that under a document of sale of immovable property the purchaser was bound to pay Rs. 20,000 as earnest money, and the remaining sale consideration in two instalments. The purchaser however could not pay the earnest money as agreed, and later paid in a large sum which the vendor acknowledged as having received 'towards the sale price' out of the agreed consideration. The purchaser subsequently repudiated the contract and sued to recover the money paid by him. It was held that in those circumstances there was no supersession of the original contract; and there was nothing to show that the vendor agreed to sacrifice the stipulated earnest. The purchaser therefore, it was, held must lose his earnest money, but was entitled to recover the balance of his payment to account. Now, if a defaulting purchaser is entitled to recover the balance of his payment to account, there can be no question that a purchaser, who is not in default, is entitled to recover the balance of what he has paid towards the purchase price from the defaulting seller. We hold therefore that the plaintiff in the present suit is entitled to insist upon his claim for refund of the sum of Rs. 26,000 from Mst. Jaggo Bai. The learned Civil Judge in the Court below has granted a decree to the plaintiff against Mst. Jaggo Bai for the sum of Rs. 26,000 plus interest on the said sum from the date of payment of the said sum.

It was contended for the appellant that in the circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to interest. It was urged that since the plaintiff maintained up to February 20, 1937 his plea for specific performance, he was certainly not entitled to interest prior to that date. It was contended that interest upon the sum of Rs. 26,000 was in the nature of damages suffered by the plaintiff as a result of the breach of contract. We do not agree that the interest upon the sum of Rs. 26,000, which the plaintiff claims, can be regarded strictly as compensation in respect of damage resulting from the appellant's breach of contract. It appears to us that the appellant having obtained this sum without any willingness on her part to perform her obligations under the agreement of December 16, 1928, she is bound in equity not only to return the sum of Rs. 26,000, but to pay a reasonable interest thereon. She has had the use of this sum which she should have returned to the plaintiff when she decided to repudiate the contract. In this connection we refer to the decision of the Privy Council in B. N. Ry. Co., Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji (4). It was held in that case that the proviso to s. 4, Interest Act, applies to a case in which the Court of equity exercises jurisdiction to allow interest, but that in order to invoke a rule of equity, it is necessary in the first instance to establish the existence of a state of circumstances which attracts the equitable jurisdiction. In the course of the judgment the observation of Lord Tomlin in Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co., Ltd. v. Alice M. Hart (5), was quoted with approval, viz.:

"In order to invoke a rule of equity it is necessary in the first instance to establish the existence of a state of circumstances which attracts the equitable jurisdiction, as for example, the non-performance of a contract of which equity can give specific performance: see p. 70 of B. N. Ry. Ltd. v. Ruttanji (4), col. 1."

In our judgment it would be highly inequitable in the present case to refuse the plaintiff his claim for interest upon the sum of Rs. 26,000 which the appellant had no right to retain in view of her refusal to implement her obligations under the deed of December 16, 1928. We hold therefore that in equity the plaintiff is entitled to interest. Taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration we fix interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. The interest will run from December 16, 1928 to the date of payment. In the result the appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Court below is modified. The plaintiff is granted a decree against the appellant for the sum of Rs. 26,000 plus interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from December 16, 1928 down to the date of payment. As the appellant has substantially failed, the respondent is entitled to his costs in this appeal.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow of predeceased brother adopting subsequent to partition between remaining co-parceners—Adopted son, if entitled to share.

A co-parcenary consisted of two brothers and a son of one of them. After the death of one of the brothers leaving behind him his widow, the remaining brother and his son made a partition of the family property. Subsequently the widow of the pre-deceased brother adopted a son who brought a suit against the partitioning members for half share in the family property:

Held, that though the adoption was valid, the adopted son was not entitled to half-share in the property which had already been partitioned. Shivappa Jayappa v. Yagappa Shiddappa, F. A. No. 247 of 1935, followed, 180 Ind. Cas. 295 (4), distinguished.

N. J. Wadia, J.—This appeal raises a short and interesting question with regard to the law of adoption. The plaintiff, who is respondent No. 1 before us, claimed to be the adopted son of one Shivalingayya, and filed the suit to recover possession of his half share in the suit property from defendant No. 1 Irappa, who was his paternal uncle, and defendant No. 2 Gurbasappa, who was the son of Irappa. Shivalingayya, the plaintiff's adoptive father, and his younger brother Irappa were the sons of one Lokappa who died in the year 1915. Shivalingayya himself died in 1925. At the time of his death he was joint with his brother Irappa. He left a widow Parawwa who was defendant No. 3 in the case and who is respondent No. 2 before us. On September 18, 1933, Irappa and his son Gurbasappa, who were at the time the only members of the co-parcenary, divided. The partition deed (Ex. 70) mentions that the partition had been effected because Gurbasappa, who had come of age, had taken to bad habits and bad company and was constantly quarrelling with his father and demanding separation. The property of the family was partitioned. The deed mentioned that Parawwa kom Shivalingayya, the widow of Irappa's brother, had obtained a decree in the Bijapur Court awarding her maintenance at Rs. 165 per annum—and provided that this maintenance should be paid to her by Gurbasappa alone. About two months after this partition, on November 10, 1933 Parawwa adopted the plaintiff, and on January 24, 1935, the plaintiff filed the suit out of which this appeal arises to recover a half share in the family property from Irappa and Gurbasappa.

The defendants had contended inter alia that in fact no adoption had taken place although an adoption deed had been executed, and that the adoption was also invalid because of the unchastity of Parawwa. The learned Judge has found that unchastity on the part of Parawwa during the lifetime of her husband has not been proved, and this point was not seriously pressed before him. At the trial, the defendants admitted the factum on the plaintiff's adoption and the plaintiff admitted that there had been a partition between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on September 18, 1933. But he added that that admission was subject to his right to show that the partition was not bona fide and was intended to defeat the rights of others. No issue was sought or raised with regard to the dishonest nature of the partition. The learned Judge found on the admission of the plaintiff himself that the partition had taken place, and on the admission of the defendants, that the plaintiff's adoption had taken place on November 10, 1933. He held that the adoption was valid.

On the view which has now been taken by the Privy Council, Parawwa was clearly entitled to make an adoption. The only question is whether as a result of that adoption the plaintiff acquires any right to a share in the property which had originally belonged to the joint family and which had been partitioned by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 prior to the plaintiff's adoption. The learned Judge held that it was not permissible for the defendants to put an end to the co-parcenary by separation, and that the plaintiff by reason of his adoption was entitled to a share in the joint family property. He therefore made a decree giving the plaintiff a half share in the suit property. Against that decree the first two defendants Irappa and Gurbasappa have appealed, and the only question before us is whether the adoption of the plaintiff by Parawwa after co-parcenary had come to an end by the partition between Irappa and Gurbasappa, who were the only members of the co-parcenary, could revive the co-parcenary and entitle the plaintiff to claim a share in the co-parcenary property which had been divided between defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In the recent Full Bench decision of this Court Balu Saktharam v. Lahoo (1) to which I was a party, it was held by the majority of the Full Bench that (p. 414)

"where a co-parcenary exists at the date of the adoption, the adopted son becomes a member of the co-parcenary, and takes his share in the joint property accordingly. [But] where the adoption takes place after the termination of the co-parcenary by the death, actually or fictionally, of the last surviving co-parcener, the adoption by a widow of a deceased co-parcener has not the effect of reviving the co-parcenary, and does not divest property from the heir of the last surviving co-parcener (other than the widow) or those claiming through him or her."

In principle I am unable to see any distinction between the extinction of a co-parcenary by the death of the last surviving co-parcener and its extinction by partition, so far as the rights of an adopted son adopted after the extinction of the co-parcenary are concerned. The effect of a partition is to dissolve a co-parcenary, with the result that the separating members hold their respective shares as their separate property after the partition. In Hirachand v. Rowji Sojpal (2) it was held by Rangnekar, J., sitting singly that "under Hindu Law, on the extinction of a co-parcenary by a partition, the widow of a co-parcener, who had died long before the partition cannot make a valid adoption."

In dealing with the effect of partition Rangnekar, J. said (p. 766*):

"The effect of partition under the Mitakshara is the conversion of an indefinite joint right in the whole into a specific right in part. The effect of partition is to dissolve the co-parcenary, with the result that the separating members thenceforth hold their respective shares as their separate property, and the share of each member dying without issue will pass on his death to his heirs. But if a member, while separating from his other co-parceners, continues joint with his own male issue, the share allotted to him on partition will in his hands retain the character of co-parcenary property as regards his male issue

"In the face of these principles, which are as old as the hills, it is difficult to appreciate the argument that the nature of the property remains the same after a partition as before it, or that the nature of the property remains dormant. True, that qua a divided member and his issue a co-parcenary comes into existence, but it is not the co-parcenary which subsisted before the partition. It is a new co-parcenary; and in that way a partition may at once give rise to several co-parcenaries, but these co-parcenaries are quite distinct from the larger original co-parcenary in existence before the partition but destroyed by the partition."

After referring to the decisions in Balu Sakharam v. Lahoo (1) and Chandra v. Gojarabai (3), Rangnekar J. says (p. 768*):

"If therefore on the extinction of co-parcenary by reason of the property devolving by inheritance on the heir of the last surviving co-parcener, an adoption made by the widow of a predeceased co-parcener is invalid and cannot affect that property, it is difficult to hold that, on the extinction of a co-parcenary by a partition, the widow of a co-parcener, who had died long before the partition, can make a valid adoption."

Rangnekar J.'s remarks with regard to the validity of such an adoption are in accordance with the view which he took in his dissenting judgment in Balu Sakharam v. Lahoo (1). On the view taken by the majority of the Full Bench in that case such an adoption would be valid, but would give the adopted son no right to divest the property which had already vested in others by reason of the extinction of the co-parcenary whether by the death of the last surviving co-parcener or by partition. The view taken by Rangnekar J., in the above case was subsequently followed by a Division Bench of this Court, of which I was a member, in Shivappa Jayappa v. Yagappa Shiddappa, First Appeal No. 247 of 1935, decided on December 16, 1938. The facts in that case were very similar to the facts in the case before us. In that case the plaintiff, who claimed to have been adopted by the widow of one Jayappa in March 1933, brought a suit against four defendants who represented two other branches of the family to recover his one-third share in the property. Prior to the plaintiff's adoption there had been a partition in the family in the year 1901-02. The question was whether the plaintiff having been adopted in the third branch of the family long after the partition between the other two branches could claim a share in the joint family property which had gone to those branches at the partition. The judgment of Rangnekar J., in Hirachand v. Rowji Sojpal (2) was cited before us in that case, and the view taken by Sen J., and myself was that where a co-parcenary had come to an end whether by the death of the last surviving co-parcener or by partition, a son adopted subsequent to such termination of the co-parcenary should not be allowed to reopen the partition or to divest the property already vested in others.

Sen J., who delivered the judgment in that case, pointed out that this view was in accordance with the view which had been taken by the Full Bench in Balu Sakharam v. Lahoo (1) and also with the view which had been taken in Chanbappa v. Huchappa (4). In the latter case two branches of a joint family arrived at a partition of the joint family property, each branch taking a half share. One of the branches consisted of the defendant, who was the last surviving co-parcener, and the widow of his paternal uncle, who continued to live jointly. The widow thereafter adopted the plaintiff. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to obtain his half share in the property which fell to the defendant on partition, it was held that the plaintiff as the adopted son was entitled to a share in the property in the hands of the defendant, as the joint family was still subsisting and had not come to an end. The plaintiff in that case was entitled only to a share in the property which had fallen to his branch which at the time of the partition had been represented by defendant No. 3. But he was not held entitled to a share in the property of other branch. The learned Chief Justice held in that case that the half share which defendant No. 3 took on partition was taken by him as the joint family property of his branch and not as his absolute property, and that therefore the plaintiff, who was the adopted son of his father's brother was entitled to a share in what defendant No. 3 had taken. Dealing with defendant No. 3's contention that the share which he took on partition was his absolute property the learned Chief Justice said (pp. 1137-8 *):

"He (defendant No. 3) and the widow of Parappa were the only members of the joint family, and no doubt he was the sole co-parcener. But in my opinion it is not accurate to say that the co-parcenary had come to an end. I think the co-parcenary still exists in respect of the share which he took on the partition, and that on the birth of a son to him, that son would have a share in the co-parcenary, and on the adoption of a son by his father's brother's widow, that adopted son is also entitled to share."

Mr. Madbhavi for the respondent-plaintiff contends that his case is similar to Chanbasappa v. Huchappa (4), and that on the principle there laid down he is entitled to a share in the property which Irappa and Gurbasappa took at the partition. We are unable to accept this contention. The present case is clearly distinguishable. In that case there was a member of the plaintiff's branch who took a share at the time of the partition, and the view which the learned Chief Justice took was that by reason of the partition the original co-parcenary came to an end, but new co-parcenaries were created between the two dividing branches, one branch being represented by defendants Nos. 2 and 4 in that case, and the other branch being represented by defendant No. 3, and that a joint family continued within defendant No. 3's own branch represented by himself and Vairawwa, the widow of his predeceased uncle. In the case before us there was no representative of Shivalingayya's (i. e., plaintiff's) branch at the time of the partition. The only co-parceners were defendants Nos. 1 and 2 representing the other branch and after the partition there could be no state of jointness between either of them and Parawwa, the widow of Shivalingayya. The mere fact that by the partition deed Gurbasappa undertook the liability to pay the maintenance which had been awarded to Parawwa, the widow of Shivalingayya, by the Civil Court, did not create any state of jointness between Gurbasappa and Parawwa, and the subsequent adoption of the plaintiff by Parawwa could not possibly have the effect of reviving the co-parcenary between Gurbasappa and Irappa which had terminated by the partition; nor could it give the plaintiff, the adopted son, any right to divest either of them of the property which they had taken at the partition. That property ceased to be joint family property from the date of the partition. The facts in this case are, in our opinion, exactly similar to the facts in F. A. No. 247 of 1935 and the decision in that case is binding on us. On this view of the case, although Parawwa was legally entitled to adopt, and the plaintiff's adoption is therefore valid, the plaintiff would by the adoption acquire no right to a share in the joint family property which had already been partitioned two months before his adoption. His suit must fail. The appeal will therefore be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. Appellants Nos. 1 and 2 will get their costs throughout from respondent No. 1, plaintiff. Under O. XXXIII, r. 11, Civil P. C., we direct that the plaintiff should pay the Court-fees in the suit.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53, 54, 75—Order passed by Subordinate Judge under ss. 53 and 54—Second appeal, if lies.

The words "or of any nature whatsoever" in s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act, are incompatible with the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation, and that s. 4 (1) must be taken to give the Court power, subject to the provisions of the Act, to decide all questions which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case. Section 4 is not intended to cover orders made under ss. 53 and 54. No second appeal therefore lies from an order made by Subordinate Judge under ss. 53 and 54. 132 Ind. Cas. 441 (1) and 178 Ind. Cas. 373 (3), distinguished.

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 11 of 1934.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and A. G. Kotwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and M. G. Chitale for the Respondent.

N. J. Wadia, J.—This is a second appeal against the decision of the Assistant Judge of Sholapur confirming an order made by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur under ss. 53 and 54, Prov. Insol. Act. The petitioner in the application, who was the Receiver of the estate of certain insolvents, applied for setting aside a sale deed passed by the insolvents to the opponent, the present appellant, on December 15, 1930, alleging that the sale by the insolvents which had been made within two years of the insolvency was not bona fide and for valuable consideration, but was hollow and fraudulent, and intended to defraud other creditors. The trial Court came to the conclusion that the opponent was not a bona fide purchaser for value and that the sale was a fraudulent one and intended to give preference to the opponent and to defraud other creditors, and it, therefore, set aside the sale. This order was confirmed in appeal by the Assistant Judge, and the opponent has come in second appeal. A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Coyajee for the respondent that no second appeal lies. The application to the Subordinate Judge was under ss. 53 and 54, Prov. Insol. Act, and the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge, which was confirmed by the Assistant Judge, was under those sections. Section 75 (1) of the Act provides that the debtor, any creditor, the Receiver, or any other person aggrieved by a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to a District Court, may appeal to the District Court, and the order of the District Court upon such appeal shall be final. Under this section, therefore, the order made by the District Court in appeal is final and no second appeal would lie. The section provides however that the High Court, for the purpose of satisfying itself that an order made in any appeal decided by the District Court was according to law, may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. The proviso, therefore, allows a revision application to the High Court against orders made by the District Court in appeal. Proviso 2 says that any such person aggrieved by a decision of the District Court on appeal from a decision of a Subordinate Court under s. 4 may appeal to the High Court. It is contended for the appellant that all orders made under ss. 53 and 54 of the Act are also orders made under s. 4 and that a second appeal, therefore, lies in the case of such orders to the High Court from the decision of the District Court. Section 4 of the Act provides that subject to the provisions of the Act, the Court shall have power to decide all questions whether of title or priority or of any nature whatsoever, and whether involving matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court.

The question whether a second appeal lies against an order made by a District Court in appeal from an order made by a Subordinate Judge under ss. 53 and 54, Prov. Insol. Act, has been considered by this Court in two unreported cases. In Second Appeal No. 854 of 1935, Virappa Basappa Bile-angadi v. Rachappa Balappa Hosmani decided on October 7, 1937 Rangekar, J. sitting singly held that in such cases no second appeal lay to the High Court, and the same view was taken by myself sitting singly in Second Appeal No. 741 of 1935, Anant Raghunath Puranik v. Shantaram Ramchandra Pandit, decided on August 24, 1938 by N. J. Wadia, J. The view which was taken in both these cases that the words "subject to the provisions of this Act" in s. 4 were intended to take out of the purview of that section cases which are provided for by other section of the Act, such as ss. 53 and 54. It is true that cases falling under s. 53 and to some extent those falling under s. 54 would be cases involving questions of title and may to that extent be considered to fall also under the wider provisions of s. 4. The difficulty however is created by the language of s. 75. Sub s. (1) of that section expressly deals with orders made by the District Court on appeal from orders made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to the District Court. Orders under ss. 53 and 54 made by the Subordinate Courts are clearly covered by this clause, and the decision of the District Judge in appeal from such orders must, therefore, be final, and not appealable to the High Court. To hold that proviso 2 to s. 75 which allows second appeals in the case of decisions of the District Court on appeal under s. 4 covers also decisions of the District Court on appeal under ss. 53 and 54 would render the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 75 nugatory, and would in effect mean that every order made by the District Court on appeal from a decision under ss. 53 and 54 would, in spite of the express provisions of s. 75 (1), be subject to a second appeal.

The same question has been considered by a Bench of the Madras High Court in Alagirisubba Naik v. Official Receiver of Tinnevely (1). It was held in that case that no second appeal could lie against an order made by a District Munsif annulling a sale under s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act. As has been pointed out in that case s. 4 of the present Act, Prov. Insol. Act, V of 1920, did not exist in the earlier Act of 1907, and the section appears to have been introduced in the present Act because of conflicting decisions as to the power of an Insolvency Court to deal with certain questions of title or priority other than those falling under ss. 53 and 54. Provisions corresponding to the present ss. 53 and 54 existed in the Act of 1907 and under the earlier Act also no second appeal lay from a decision of the District Court in appeal from orders under those sections. No change was made by the new Act in those provisions, and it would be difficult to hold that the Legislature altered the previous procedure and provided a second appeal from orders made by Subordinate Courts under ss. 53 and 54 without expressly saying so, and merely indirectly by the provision that orders under the new s. 4 were subject to second appeal. It has been pointed out by Reilly, J., in the Madras case that s. 4 (3) of the Act of 1920 provides that the Court need not decide every question of title or priority or any question of the nature described in sub-s. (1) of that section which may arise in an insolvency case before it but may decline to go into such a question and yet may sell the debtor's interest in the property concerned. If all questions falling under s. 53 were considered as questions falling under s. 4, it would mean that the Court would have a discretion to decline in certain cases to go into the question whether a sale falling under s. 53 was voidable against a Receiver. No such discretion is given to the Court by s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act, nor had the corresponding provision of the earlier Act given any such discretion, and it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature, nor is it possible to infer from the language of the Act, that it was the intention of the Legislature to alter the law on the subject and to give to the Court under s. 53 a discretion to refuse to decide whether a particular transfer came within the purview of the section. The language of s. 4 is extremely wide. It gives the Court power to decide all questions whether of title or priority or of any nature whatsoever.

With respect, I agree with the view which was taken by the learned Judges in the Madras case referred to above that the words "or of any nature whatsoever" are incompatible with the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation, and that s. 4 (1) must be taken to give the Court power, subject to the provisions of the Act, to decide all questions which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case. That being so, if proviso 2 to s. 75, which deals with decisions of the District Court on appeal from decisions of the Subordinate Courts "under s. 4," were interpreted in the way in which the appellant asks us to, the provisions of s. 75(1), which expressly provide that no second appeal shall lie from orders made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Subordinate Court, would be rendered absolutely nugatory. The only way in which s. 4 can be interpreted so as to make the Act intelligible and consistent is to hold that it was not intended to cover orders made under ss. 53 and 54. The fact that Sch. (I) to the Act, which specifies the cases in which the decisions and orders of a District Court come to or made otherwise than in appeal are appealable to the High Court, refers separately to orders made under s. 4, and those made under ss. 53, 54 and other sections of the Act leads to the same conclusion, that it was not the intention of the Legislature that proviso 2 to s. 75 should refer to orders made under ss. 53 and 54.

No authority has been cited to us in support of the view that a second appeal lies against such order. We have been referred to two cases, Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd. v. Pandharinath (2), and Balubhai v. Kalyanji (3), in both of which second appeals were admitted from orders made under ss. 53 and 54, Prov. Insol. Act. In neither of these cases however was any question with regard to the admissibility of such appeals raised, and the attention of the Court, was therefore not directed to the point now raised before us. In another case Second Appeal No. 765 of 1938, Keshavlal Mohanlal Shah v. Ranchhoolal Maganlal Shah, Decided on October 14, 1938, by Wassoodew, J., to which also our attention has been drawn, a revision application had been filed against an order made by a Subordinate Judge under ss. 53 and 54, Prov. Insol. Act, and on a preliminary objection being raised that application was allowed to be treated as a second appeal, and was disposed of as such. The judgment does not mention the grounds on which the revision application was allowed to be converted into a second appeal, and it does not appear from the judgment that the question whether a second appeal lay was raised. In our opinion, the view taken in Alagiri- subba Naik v. Official Receiver of Tinnevely (1) and in the two second appeals, No. 854 of 1935 and No. 741 of 1935, to which I have referred, is correct, and no second appeal lies against the order made by the Subordinate Judge in the present case. The appeal must therefore be dismissed. We are asked to treat this as a revision application and we have allowed it to be argued as such. After going through the evidence we are not satisfied that we would be justified in interfering in revision.

It is contended that the burden of proving good faith under s. 53 of the Act was wrongly thrown on the opponent. The application was however both under s. 53 and s. 54, and so far as Issue No. 2 with regard to fraudulent preference was concerned, both in the Subordinate Judge's Court and in the lower Appellate Court the burden was rightly thrown on the Receiver. Both the learned Judges have accepted the statements made by the Receiver, and from those statements and the facts elicited in the cross-examination of the opponent it appears that the view which they have taken that fraudulent preference has been proved is correct. The sale was entered into on December 15, 1930, only eight days before the vendor was adjudicated an insolvent. It appears from the evidence that the insolvent had been heavily indebted to several persons, and there is ample justification for the view which both the learned Judges have taken that the opponent must have been perfectly well aware of the heavy indebtedness of the insolvent. The opponent himself has stated that he had made demands for his own outstandings and that he had not been paid. The learned Judges have found that out of the consideration of Rs. 12,000, Rs. 7,000 were paid before the Sub-Registrar. The rest of the consideration is alleged to have been made up of a debt of over Rs. 5,000 due on promissory notes. The promissory notes were not forthcoming. It is also alleged that an amount of over Rs. 2,000 was remitted and for the balance the shop of the debtor was purchased. Considering that the insolvent had very heavy debts to the extent of Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 and practically no other property from which the other creditors could have been satisfied, the transaction, in our opinion, did amount to a dishonest preference given to the opponent. We see no reason therefore for interfering in revision. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT

March 14, 1939

MOHAMAD NOOR, J.

RAMA BARIK AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS
versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144—Starting of rival business in close proximity to previously established one—Order under s. 144 against person interested in rival business, if can be issued—Order spending itself—Interference by High Court.

A Magistrate, as an emergency measure, has power to stop, by an order under s. 144, Criminal P. O. the holding of a hat, or the exercise of his rights by a man on his own land. But a man, who holds a hat on his own land, is perfectly entitled to do so and that by itself is not a wrongful act. Competition in trade, unless illegal methods are adopted, is not a wrongful act. When a rival business is started in close proximity to a previously established business the person interested in the latter is bound to object to the former and some sort of strained feeling is inevitable. This by itself is no ground for restraining the newcomer from carrying his trade unless he is doing or is likely to do any wrongful act which may lead to a breach of the peace. In such a case the best course is to prohibit the doing of the wrongful act or if necessary, to bind down the wrongdoer under s. 107, Criminal P. O. But an order more or less of a permanent nature is not justified under s. 144, Criminal P. O., which is meant for speedy remedy. 150 Ind. Cas. 118 (1), 157 Ind. Cas. 760 (2) and Satish Chandra Roy v. Emperor (3), relied on.

It is not the usual practice of the High Court to interfere with an order which has spent in its force unless there are special reasons for such interference.

Or. R. against two orders of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Jajpur, dated May 30, 1938, and July 29, 1938, respectively.

Messrs. B. K. Ray and B. Mahapatra, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. C. M. Acharjya and P. Mahanti, for the Crown.

Order.—These two applications in revision are directed against two orders of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jajpur, one under s. 144, Criminal P. O., dated May 30, 1938 and the other dated July 29, 1938 directing that a complaint be made against the petitioners for their prosecution under s. 188, I. P. O. It appears that the proprietor of the Madhupurestate had for about two years a hat, in Mauza Kainchi, called Madhuban Hat. It was being held on Wednesdays and Saturdays. No toll was levied on the shopkeepers who exposed their goods for sale in the hat. On April 5, 1938 the proprietor leased it out for Rs. 650 and for the first time toll was collected in it on April 9, 1938. This seems to have been resented to by the villagers of the locality who started a rival hat adjacent to the Madhuban Hat on a land belonging to a deity installed in the village of which the petitioners are the marfatdars or managers. The rival hat was held for the first time on a Wednesday. There was no Police report of any apprehension of breach of the peace but a complaint was made to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jajpur who called upon the petitioners to show cause why an order under s. 144, Criminal P. O. would not be passed against them. They appeared and showed cause. The learned Magistrate thereafter held a local enquiry, examined some witnesses on May 30, 1938 and holding that there was a likelihood of breach of the peace if the rival hat was allowed to be held, passed an order under s. 144, Criminal P. O. against the petitioners "restraining them from holding the hat and calling upon them to prevent the sitting of the hat on their lands by withdrawing his (their) consent which they have given to the villagers for the holding of the hat on Wednesdays and Saturdays."

The petitioners moved the District Magistrate of Cuttack under s. 144 (4), Criminal P. O. but the learned Magistrate declined to interfere and rejected the application on August 8, 1938, Criminal Revision No. 82 of 1938 is directed against this order. The order under s. 144, Criminal P. O., referred to above, was affixed in front of the house of the petitioners and was also promulgated by beat of drum. The contents of the proceeding were explained by the Sub-Inspector of Police on the spot. The Sub-Inspector of Police reported on June 13, 1938 that the new hat continued to be held within the prohibited area and that the order under s. 144, Criminal P. O., was disobeyed. The petitioners were called upon to show cause against their prosecution under s. 188, I. P. O. They did not show cause but cross-examined the witnesses who were examined in support of the report of the Sub-Inspector of Police. As the learned Magistrate has observed, the trend of the cross-examination was that no order was served upon the petitioners and that the hat was not held on the prohibited land. There was however evidence that the hat was held on June 1, 1938 and on June 8, 1938 and also on June 22, 1938 after the Police report. The learned Magistrate then directed that a complaint be made to the District Magistrate for the prosecution of the petitioners under s. 188, I. P. O. A complaint was accordingly made and the District Magistrate after taking cognizance of the offence made over the case to a Magistrate of Cut-tack for trial. Criminal Revision Application No. 91 of 1938 is directed against this order of prosecution. I shall take up these two applications separately.

It is now settled law that a Magistrate, as an emergency measure, has power to stop, by an order under s. 144, Criminal P. O., the holding of a hat, or the exercise of his rights by a man on his own land. This was the view which I took in Saligram Singh v. Baijnath Singh (1), and Rowland, J., after reviewing all the leading authorities on the subject, came to the same conclusion in Hansraj Prasad Singh v. Abdul Jabar (2). But in the former case I pointed out that a man, who holds a hat on his own land, is perfectly entitled to do so and that by itself is not a wrongful act. Competition in trade, unless illegal methods are adopted, is not a wrongful act. When a rival business is started in close proximity to a previously established business the person interested in the latter is bound to object to the former and some sort of strained feeling is inevitable. This by itself is no ground for restraining the newcomer from carrying his trade unless he is doing or is likely to do any wrongful act which may lead to a breach of the peace. In such a case the best course is to prohibit the doing of the wrongful act or if necessary, to bind down the wrongdoer under s. 107, Criminal P. O. But an order more or less of a permanent nature is not justified under s. 144, Criminal P. O. which is meant for speedy remedy. This was pointed out in Satish Chandra Roy v. Emperor (3). In the second case Rowland, J., after referring to Satish Chandra Roy v. Emperor (3), mentioned above, pointed out that "the real disadvantage of passing an order under s. 144 without going into the merits of the dispute is that on the expiry of two months which is the limit of the duration of such an order the whole dispute is left to break out again. To pass an order under s. 144 and to leave it as if that order disposed of the dispute finally is merely postponing trouble and inviting its recurrence in an aggravated and more complicated form at a later date."

It is true that in this case the learned Magistrate recorded some evidence a summary of which has been given in his judgment but his order did not touch the real trouble. From what he had said it appears that the villagers are annoyed on account of the levy of toll by the proprietor of the Madhuban Hat and are determined to hold a rival hat at a different place where they can carry on their trade without the payment of toll. Commissions of wrongful acts were alleged against one Narain Misra, Tahsildar of Ollas estate, and also against the paiks of the Madhupur estate, though the learned Magistrate has not believed the latter allegation. But no wrongful act is attributed to the petitioners. The only thing which they are said to have done is that they have permitted the villagers to hold the hat on the land which is under their management as marfatdar of a deity. In my opinion, therefore, this was pre-eminently a case in which those against whom allegations of wrongful acts were made should have been proceeded with under the suitable section of the Criminal P. O. The petitioners were ordered not to hold the hat and to withdraw their consent. There is nothing to show that they were holding the hat or were personally interested in it. I am not sure whether the withdrawal of the consent by itself will be sufficient to avert a breach of the peace if it were apprehended. Therefore though the Magistrate had power of passing an order which he did, I am not convinced of the suitability of the order which is in the nature of a permanent injunction and can hardly be said to be appropriate under s. 144, Criminal P. O. though it does come within its terms. How inefficacious in such cases an order like the one passed by the learned Magistrate is, will be apparent from what happened in this case. The order was against the petitioners in the terms already stated. Though it was published on the spot it was not directed against the villagers. Whether an order prohibiting them to hold a hat of their own and thus to force them to go to a particular hat and pay toll would have been justified is quite a different matter. They were however free to act as they liked and the hat was held.

It is clear from the facts of this case that the petitioners, apart from being the managers of the land on which the hat was being held, had no personal interest in it and, as I shall presently show, they were not responsible for the holding of the hat. Now, an order has been passed which was, as I have said, within the power of the learned Magistrate to pass and it is not the usual practice of this Court to interfere with an order which has spent in its force unless there are special reasons for such interference. There is none in this case. For this reason I reject the application in this criminal revision case.

Criminal Revision No. 91 of 1938.

The facts have already been stated. The petitioners have been prosecuted for disobeying an order passed under s 144, Criminal P. O. There is nothing on the record to show that they disobeyed the order. The only thing which appears from the order of the learned Magistrate is that the hat was held, but there is nothing to show that they did not withdraw their consent. The hat might have been held in spite of the withdrawal of consent. If the villagers held the hat, the petitioners are in no way responsible for it. The learned Public Prosecutor was unable to point to any fact on which a prosecution can be based and had to concede that there is no material for the prosecution of the petitioners. The order for prosecution is unjustified and I set it aside. The complaint filed by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate will be withdrawn and no proceeding will be taken on it and the proceeding so far taken is quashed.

D.

CHANMALAPPA GURUSIDH MALAPPA—

RESPONDENT

Grant—Grant not from Crown—Right to recover assessment or rent—Presumption—Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Math—Alienation—Effect—Whether binds successor—Grant—Construction—Inam in favour of Math—Alienation register showing grant in favour of mahant personally—Effect.

The grants which are not grants from the Crown must be construed in favour of the grantees. Unless, therefore, the right to recover assessment or rent is expressly reserved the presumption would be that that right was also granted. [p. 516, col. 2.]

In case of an inam of the nature of a devasthan inam the mahant or Shankaracharya for the time being would have no power to alienate the Math property whether by sale or permanent lease so as to bind his successors except in the case of legal necessity. The mahant, therefore, who has made the inam grants has no power to alienate permanently the right of the Math to recover assessment from the lands, or in other words to grant the lands permanently free of assessment. The grant would in each case endure only during the life-time of the mahant who made it, and succeeding mahants would be entitled to repudiate the grants and to recover assessment within 12 years of his becoming mahant. 4 Ind. Cas. 449 (1), 65 Ind. Cas. 161 (2) and 142 Ind. Cas. 214 (3), relied on. [p. 517, col. 2.]

A certain grant, according to the sanad and the decision of Inam Commissioner, was made to the Math itself for its maintenance and not to the mahant personally. But in the alienation register the grant was entered as jat or personal inam :

Held, that the fact that for some reason or other the inam was entered in the alienation register as a jat or personal inam did not make it any the less an inam to the Math, and that, being an inam to the Math, it was subject to all the conditions which attach to such inams. Mr. G. N. Thakor, Mr. S. H. Balawadi for Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Talpade, for the Respondent.

N. J. Wadia, J.—These three appeals arise out of three Suits Nos. 291 of 1932 and 667 of 1932 and 253 of 1934 which were filed by different plaintiffs against the same defendant, the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math. The contentions raised in Suits Nos. 291 and 667 of 1932 were the same and both the suits were heard together and decided by the same judgment. The appeals against both these suits were also heard together by the Assistant Judge of Satara and decided by the same judgment. Suit No. 253 of 1934 was heard separately by another Subordinate Judge and the appeal against it was also decided by a different Judge. The result in all the three cases was the same. The plaintiffs' claims were decreed. Against the decisions of the Assistant Judge in Suits Nos. 291 and 667 of 1932 second appeals were filed in this Court which were summarily dismissed by the Honourable Macklin, J. Leave to appeal was subsequently given. All the three appeals involve the same question and have therefore been heard together by us.

The appellant in all the three appeals, who was the defendant in the trial Courts, is the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math. The village of Hatnur was granted in inam by the Mogul Emperor Mohamed Shah either to the predecessor-in-title of the present Shankaracharya or to the Math itself. That grant was confirmed by the Maratha King Sambhu Chhatrapati Swami in the year 1760. In the year 1803 the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar

Math granted in inam three lands in the village to the Ayya or priest of the Lingayat Math at Hatnur, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff in Suit No. 291 of 1932, the respondent in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45 of 1936. In the years 1821 a similar grant of two lands in the same village was made by the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math to certain ancestors of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 667 of 1932, respondents in Letters Patent Appeal No. 46 of 1936; and in the year 1735 one land in the same village was given in inam to an ancestor of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 253 of 1934, respondents in Second Appeal No. 190 of 1938, by the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math.

In the year 1928 the defendant Shankaracharya claimed assessment on the lands in all the three suits from the present holders, the plaintiffs in the three suits, and on their refusing to pay he recovered it from them through the revenue authorities by filing assistance suits. The plaintiffs in all the three suits prayed for a declaration that the defendant was not entitled to recover any amount from them by way of rent or assessment for the suit lands, for a perpetual injunction restraining him from recovering anything from them in future, and for refund of the amounts which he had already recovered from them through the revenue authorities. In the suits from which Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 45 and 46 arise, the trial Judge held that by the terms of the original grant made to the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs in the two suits no exemption from payment of assessment had been granted to them. He further held that the grant made by the predecessor-in-title of the present Shankaracharya was not binding on his successor, the present defendant, and that the defendant's right to recover assessment had not been extinguished by lapse of time. He therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suits.

In appeal the learned Assistant Judge of Satara held that by the terms of the grants made to the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs in the two suits the plaintiffs were entitled to hold the lands free of rent and assessment. He further held that the grant of the village to the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math was a personal and not a devasthan inam and that therefore the alienations made by the Shankaracharya in 1803 and 1821 to the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs in the two suits were binding on the defendant. He also held that the plaintiffs' claims were not barred by limitation. He therefore reversed the decrees of the trial Judge in both the suits and granted the declarations and injunctions prayed for. In the third suit No. 253 of 1934 both the trial Judge and the Appellate Judge came to the conclusion that under the terms of the grant made to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, in that suit in the year 1735 the grantees were entitled to hold the land free from assessment or rent, that the inam to the defendant was a personal inam and not devasthan and that the alienation made in 1735 was binding on the present defendant. Both the Courts therefore decided in favour of the plaintiffs. Against all the three decrees the defendant, the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math, has appealed.

The first question that arises for consideration in the appeals is what is the nature of the inam granted to the defendant and whether that inam was granted to the Shankaracharya of the Math personally or to the Math itself. The sanad granted by the Mogul Emperor has been produced in the case. It is Ex. 61 in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45 of 1936. The exact year of the grant cannot be ascertained but the document states that it was granted in the ninth year of the reign of the Emperor Mahomed Shah. The document, which is in the form of an order to the subordinate officers, is as follows :

"Now the Mauza of Hatnur on the side of Tasgaon in Paraganah Haveli of the said circuit has been settled upon and made over to Shankarachari Math Sankeshwar by way of inam. It behoves that the revenue payable in respect of the said mauza should be given in the charge and possession of the said gentleman and his word should not be disobeyed, in order that he may spend the same on the maintenance of fakcers (i. e., religious mendicants) and engage himself in praying for the continued safety of the everlasting kingdom. They should consider him to be exempted from all civil dues and official taxes. No one should under any circumstances come in the way of the said gentleman for the purpose of recovering the revenue, etc."

In the year 1760, by which time the country had come under the rule of the Maratha Sovereigns a fresh sanad was granted by the then Maratha King Shambhu Chhatrapati Swami. The document, which is also in the form of an order to Balaji Babajirao Pandit Pradhan (Prime Minister) runs as follows :

"Srimant Shankaracharya ordered the Swami at Karavir that there are inam villages for the maintenance of the Sansthan of Maths at Karavir and Sankeshwar by way of sewa inam. But to continue the annachatra, and other religious performances in the Sansthan continuously, the Maharaja should agree to continue the same in inam and should give his sanction and the order be sent to the Ministers that the income should be continued. Taking this into mind that those villages which are inam to Shri's Math should be continued permanently as before. By maintaining the annachatra and other religious duties of the Maths and performing of the festivals of the anniversary days, would bring welfare to the Maharaja and his kingdom, the said villages with kul-bab, kul-kannun, hali-patti, pestai pati and with all trees, water, stones and all other incidents are granted in inam to Shri's Math, excepting previous hakdars and inamdars."

Then follows a description of the eight villages among which is Mauje Hatnur Karyat Tasgaon. The document continues:

"In all the said eight villages with their previous boundaries are given in inam to Shri's Math. So you should send orders to all the villages concerned and should send annually all the income from the same to Shri's Math permanently and should continue in the line of disciple of Shri's Math. You should not ask for a fresh order every year and a copy of this be taken and the original should be given to Shri's Math for possession and the said villages should be continued as inam with Tijai, Chouthai and Ghasdana, Sahotra and Panchotra and Dulani, Vadhava, etc. . . . You should send orders to all the villagers concerned so that the income of the said inam should go yearly for the maintenance of the Sansthan."

If the terms of the sanad granted by the Mogul Emperor be looked at by themselves it is arguable that the grant was personally to the Shankaracharya of the Math for the time being and not to the Math itself. The document refers to the revenue being given to the "said gentleman" personally and contains a direction that his word should not be disobeyed and mentions that the grant was in order that he may spend it for the maintenance of fakiers and engage himself in praying for the continued safety of the kingdom. There can however be no doubt whatever, that the subsequent Maratha sanad, which purported to continue and confirm the inam which had been granted by the Mogul Emperor, was a grant not to the Shankaracharya personally but to the Math, and for the maintenance of the Math. In the Preamble of this document the original Mogul grant is mentioned as having also been a grant for the maintenance of the Math, and the language of the Maratha grant shows clearly that the inam was granted to the Math for the maintenance of the Math, the continuance of the annachatra (feeding of the poor) and other religious objects of the Math, and the performance of the festivals of the Math. The grant mentions that "those villages which are inam to Shri's Math should be continued permanently as before." Reading the two documents together, we are of opinion, that the Mogul grant must also be taken to have been a grant to the Math. There can be no question that the Maratha document undoubtedly was a grant to the Math for the maintenance and religious purposes of the institution.

The next question to be considered is what were the terms on which the inam was continued by the British Govt. For some years prior to 1863 an inquiry was conducted by the Inam Commission in connection with inams, and the decision with regard to the village of Hatnur arrived at in 1863 by the alienation settlement officer, which is Ex. 47 in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45, was that the village of Hatnur was to be continued as surva inam continuously to the Math of the Swami of Sankeshwar so long as the jahagirs attached to the said Math are continued, subject to such nazarana as Govt. may think fit to levy. From the language of the Maratha grant as well as from the terms of the decision of the Inam Commission of 1863, it would appear that the inam was a devasthan inam granted to the Math, but in the alienation register of the village of Hatnur, Ex. 57 in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45, the village is classed as jat inam, and it is stated that "it is to be claimed till the Sankeshwar Math is in existence," the authority for this being given as Govt. Resolution No. 1980 of March 22, 1849. It is contended for the respondents in all the three appeals that the entry in the alienation register showing the village as jat or personal inam shows that it is not devasthan inam or inam to the Math but an inam personally to the Shankaracharya for the time being. We are unable to accept this contention. The description of the village in the alienation register as a jat or personal inam cannot be regarded as conclusively determining the nature of the inam. That must be taken as determined by the decision of the Inam Commissioner (Ex. 47) which was that the inam was to the Math of the Sankeshwar Swami, and not to the Swami personally, and that it was to be continued so long as the Math remained in existence. It is clear, therefore that the British Govt. continued the inam as an inam to the Math. It is difficult to understand why the inam continues to be classed as jat or personal inam. But whether that entry in the alienation register is correct or not, it cannot alter the real nature of the inam, which must be taken to be an inam to the Math, and therefore in the nature of devasthan inam.

In this connection it may be pertinent to observe that with regard to certain other villages in the district of Belgaum which were also given in inam to the Sankeshwar Math an order was made by the Govt. in the year 1918 that the inam should be converted from personal inams to devasthan inams. There is nothing before us to show whether the omission of the village of Hatnur from this order was deliberate or accidental. From the terms of the decision of the Inam Commissioner (Ex. 47), it is clear that the inam was continued by the British Govt. as an inam to the Math and not to the Shankaracharya personally. The fact that for some reason or other the inam is entered in the alienation register as a jat or personal inam does not make it any the less an inam to the Math, and it must be held that, being an inam to the Math, it is subject to all the conditions which attach to such inams.

The next question is what was the nature of the grant made by the Math or the Shankaracharya for the time being to the predecessors-in-title of the present plaintiffs in the years 1803, 1821 and 1735. The terms of the grants in all the three cases are the same. The only difference is that while in the case of the plaintiffs in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45 the grantee was a Lingayat Math and the grant was to the Ayya or priest of the Math for the maintenance of the Math, in the case of the plaintiffs in Letters Patent Appeal No. 46 the grantees were private persons, the ancestors of the plaintiffs, to whom the grant was made for the maintenance of their family and in consideration of the fact that they had served the Sankeshwar Math loyally for a long time and had been very useful. In the third case, Second Appeal No. 190, the grant was made to a Brahmin who had been performing his daily religious duties in the Math and who was well-versed in the Shastras and Vedas. In all cases the deeds of grant mention that the land had been granted in inam. The document of grant in the case of the plaintiffs in Letters Patent Appeal No. 45, which is in form of an order to the village officers of Hatnur, is as follows:

"The Ayya (Lingayat priest) of Charanti Math in the said village (Hatur) came to Sankeshwar Math personally and made a request through all of you that there is a Math in the said village and that there is no property for the said Math. So Shri be pleased to give some inam land on karar (agreement) so that he should live in the said Math in the village. Taking this into consideration and the fact that the Math of Ayya is old and it must be maintained, the land adjoining the Math on the western side measuring 5 bighas, the khata of which stands in the name of Devaji Bava is

The plaintiffs' contention in all the three cases is that the terms of the grant implied that the land was granted in inam free of the liability to pay assessment, while the defendant contends that the grant was merely of the soil and not of the royal share of the revenue which had been reserved by the grantor to himself. There is admittedly nothing in the terms of the grants to show any express reservation of the right to recover assessment or rent. The grantor, who had himself been given an inam of both the soil, of the village and of the royal share of the revenue, made a grant to the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs as sub inamdars of certain lands in the village. The grants in these three cases are not grants from the Crown and they must, therefore be construed in favour of the grantees. Unless, therefore, the right to recover assessment or rent is expressly reserved the presumption would be that that right was also granted. The ordinary meaning of inam according to Molesworth's Marathi-English dictionary is "a grant in perpetuity without conditions," and the ordinary interpretation of the grants in these cases would, therefore be that they included the right to assessment, that is to say, that the lands were given free from the liability to pay rent or assessment. If that liability was reserved that should have been expressly stated in the documents of grants. This interpretation derives strong support from the fact that in all these three cases, in one of which the grant was made as far back as 200 years ago, and in the other two cases as far back as 100 to 125 years ago, there is no evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant to show that assessment had ever been demanded or recovered till the year 1928. It is difficult to believe that if the grants had not been intended by the grantors to be free from the liability to pay assessment, they and their successors for several generations would have allowed the lands to continue with the grantees without any demand of assessment. We, therefore agree with the view which the learned Appellate Judge has taken in the two Letters Patent appeals, and the view which both the trial and the Appellate Judges have taken in Second Appeal No. 190, that under the terms of the grants made to the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs in all the three cases the lands had been granted free from the liability to pay assessment.

The question, however still remains whether the present Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math is bound by the alienations made by his predecessors-in-title in 1735, 1803 and 1821 and it is in connexion with this question that the nature of the grant made to the defendant Math assumes great importance. If the grant was, as contended by the plaintiffs, a personal grant to the Shankaracharya of the Math, and not to the Math itself or in the nature of a devasthan grant, the alienations made by the previous Shankaracharyas would be binding on their successors. But if the inam was an inam of the nature of a devasthan inam, the Shankaracharya for the time being would have no power to alienate the property of the Math, whether by way of sale or a permanent lease so as to bind his successors, except in the case of alienations for legal necessity. In the three cases before us there is no question of the alienations having been made for any legal necessity. The alienations in all the three cases were without consideration. In the case of Letters Patent Appeal No. 45 the alienation was made by the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math to the priest or Ayya of a Lingayat Math, i. e., a Math not subordinate to the Shankaracharya's Math nor belonging to the same sect of Hinduism. The law dealing with the power of the head of a Math as regards alienations of Math property has been laid down by the Privy Council in several cases. In Abhiram v. Shyama Charan (1), it was held that :

"The power of the Mahant of the endowment for the time being to alienate debottar property is, like the power of the manager of an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity, and apart from such necessity to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in the Mahant... [and that such a] permanent lease granted by the Mahant of the endowment for the time being, on the most favourable construction, enures only for the lifetime of the grantor."

In the well-known case in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (2), it was held that :

"Except for unavoidable necessity, the head of a Math cannot create any interest in the Math property to endure beyond his life. A lessee, however, has not adverse possession under Art. 141 of the Schedule [to the Lim Act] until the death of the head who granted the lease. If the lessee's possession is consented to by the succeeding head, that consent can be referable only to a new tenancy created by him, and there is no adverse possession until his death."

The same principle was followed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the subsequent case in Ram Charan Das v. Naurangi Lal (3), in which it was held that :

"Where a Mahant alienates property appertaining to the Math without any legal necessity, the alienation is not void, but is good though good only to the extent of creating an interest in the Math property which endures during his tenure of office of Mahant of the Math, with the result that the alienee's adverse possession of the property alienated only commences when the alienating Mahant ceases to be Mahant by death or otherwise. In this respect, there is no distinction in principle between a disposition purporting to be a grant of a permanent lease and a purported out and out grant by way of absolute sale. In each case, the disposition by the Mahant is good and effective so long as he continues to be a Mahant."

The Mahant, therefore, who made the inam grants in the three cases before us had no power to alienate permanently the right of the Math to recover assessment from the lands, or in other words to grant the lands permanently free of assessment. The grant would in each case endure only during the life-time of the Mahant who made it, and succeeding Mahants would be entitled to repudiate the grants and to recover assessment. It is admitted that the present Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math became the head of the Math sometime after 1925, when his predecessor-in-office died, and he asserted his right to recover assessment, and actually recovered it in all the three cases with the assistance of the revenue authorities in 1928. No question of limitation therefore would arise. Section 10, Lim. Act, provides that :

"Notwithstanding anything herein before contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

And the amendment made in that section by Act I of 1929 provides that :

"For the purposes of this section any property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment shall be deemed to be property vested in trust for a specific purpose, and the manager of any such property shall be deemed to be the trustee thereof."

The defendant's inam being in the nature of a devasthan, that is, an inam to a religious institution, each succeeding head of the institution would not be bound by any alienations not for legal necessity made by his predecessor, and would be entitled to repudiate them within twelve years of his becoming Mahant. The defendant in the present case did so. It was contended by the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondents in Letters Patent Appeal No. 46 and Second Appeal No. 190 that the defendant Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math had, by his conduct in filing assistance suits in which he described the position of the plaintiffs as that of inferior holders, accepted the grants made by the previous Shankaracharyas, and that it was not therefore open to him now to repudiate those grants, which on the view taken by us as well as by the Courts below were grants of the assessment also. We see no reason why the defendant should not be able to take up this position. It was his contention at the time he claimed and recovered the assessment that the original grant was not a grant of the assessment at all but only of the soil. Even on the view which we have taken that it was a grant of the assessment also, it was perfectly open to the present Shankaracharya to say that he had no desire to resume the grant so far as it related to the soil and that he desired to repudiate the grant only so far as it related to the payment of assessment. His act in demanding and recovering the assessment was in itself a clear indication that he was prepared to continue the grants, as each succeeding Mahant has a right to do if he chooses, so far as the lands themselves were concerned.

The fact that in the case of Second Appeal No. 190, the alienation was made in 1735, at a time when the property was presumably held by the Shankaracharya of the Sankeshwar Math under the terms of the Mogul grant, does not, in our opinion, make any difference. In discussing the terms of that grant we have held that although taken by itself that document might suggest that the grant was to the Shankaracharya of the Math personally, reading that document along with the subsequent Maratha document which refers to it and purports to continue the inam, it may be inferred that the grant was from the beginning a grant to the Math and not to the individual. In any case, we have to consider the position as it is at present. The property which was alienated was property held in trust for a religious institution, and under the law as it now stands the present head of the Math would be entitled to repudiate the alienation made by his predecessor-in-office. On this ground therefore the plaintiffs in all the three cases must fail. The appeals will therefore be allowed and the plaintiffs' suits dismissed with costs throughout.

PATNA HIGH COURT

February 12, 1940

AGARWALA AND ROWLAND, JJ.

JAGA SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
APPELLANTS

BASDEO SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1934), s. 26-O, Sch. III, Art. 3—Applicability of s. 26-O—Distinction when landlord is plaintiff and when he is defendant—Landlord's fees, if can be deposited after appellate decree but before it becomes conclusive—Applicability of Art. 3—Decree for rent arrears—Holding put to sale—Landlord himself purchasing—Tenant dispossessed—Article, if applies.

In the applicability of s. 26-O, Bihar Ten. Act, a distinction cannot be drawn between pending suits in which the landlord is a plaintiff and pending suits in which the landlord is a defendant. The title of the transferee would not become extinct by the passing of a decree against him unless and until such decree has become final as it might by the lapse of the period of limitation for an appeal and the omission of the defendant to file an appeal against the decree. The landlord's transfer fee under s. 26-O can, therefore, be deposited after the trial Court as well as the Appellate Court has decreed the landlord's suit but before such decree becomes conclusive. 160 Ind. Cas. 105 (1), explained, 179 Ind. Cas. 104 (3), applied.

Where a landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent puts the holding to sale, purchases it himself and obtains delivery of possession as auction-purchaser such dispossession of the tenant is not a dispossession by the landlord within the meaning of Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bihar Ten. Act so as to make that article applicable. A suit to recover possession is governed by the ordinary law of limitation. 125 Ind. Cas. 565 (4), followed.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated February 19, 1938.

Messrs. N. K. Prasad II and Ramanugrah Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Sahay, D. L. Nandkeolyar and Gholam Mohammad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit to declare title and recover possession over 5 bighas 3 kathas 2 dhurs of land. It is common ground that this was formerly the occupancy holding of Duli Rai. In 1927 the plaintiff-respondent brought a mortgage suit against Duli Rai to enforce a mortgage on this land. He obtained a preliminary decree dated June 23, 1928, and a final decree dated February 25, 1929. The mortgaged property was put to sale in Execution Case No. 12 of 1930 and was purchased by the decree-holder, now the plaintiff who took delivery of possession on September 19, 1930. The landlord's consent was not taken to the purchase of this property by the plaintiff but after the passing of the Bihar Ten. Amendment Act of 1934 he deposited the fee under s. 26-O of the Act with the Collector on March 12, 1937. That is the plaintiff's title which the Courts below have accepted and given him a decree against which an appeal is preferred by the principal defendant who is the landlord of the holding. This defendant brought Rent Suit No. 2376 of 1927 against Duli Rai and obtained an ex parte rent decree on which he took out Execution Case No. 992 of 1928 and put the holding to sale on December 18, 1928, about six months after the preliminary mortgage decree of the plaintiff. The landlord himself became auction-purchaser and took out his delivery of possession on September 28, 1930 that is 9 days after the delivery of possession in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied under O. XXI, r. 90, to set aside the sale alleging that the processes had been suppressed. The application was rejected by the first Court on April 7, 1931, and it is the plaintiff's allegation that his actual dispossession by the defendant took place on April 8, 1931. The plaintiff appealed against the order of April 7, dismissing his application under O. XXI, r. 90 and an event that took place sometime in the year 1931, was the death of the original tenant, Duli Rai. The plaintiff's appeal succeeded and the District Judge set aside the sale on April 16, 1932. On September 12, 1932 the plaintiff moved the Court for restitution of the property and obtained on February 13, 1933 an order of the first Court for restitution, but this order was on August 19, 1933, set aside on appeal by the District Judge because the rent decree had not been set aside or varied so as to import the provisions of s. 144 and also because it was not alleged by the plaintiff that his dispossession had been by the Act of the Court in delivering possession on September 28, 1930, but by an act of the opposite party, the auction-purchaser.

In revision this Court, on February 1, 1934, declined to interfere. The present suit was instituted on February 1, 1936 by the plaintiff to recover possession. In the meantime the amendments made in the Bihar Ten. Act, by the Local Act VIII of 1934 had received the assent of the Governor on October 31, 1934 and came into force in June, 1935. The enactment of s. 26-O gave the plaintiff a right to pay to the landlord or deposit with the Collector the prescribed fee in respect of the transfer and sub-s. (3) enacted that the consent of the landlord should be taken to have been given to the transfer on the day on which the receipt for the same is granted by the Collector. As already stated, the deposit was made on March 12, 1937, which is during the pendency of the suit. The suit has been decreed on the view that ss. 26-N and 26-O of the Bihar Ten. Act are retrospective and that the plaintiff by making the deposit referred to has perfected his title which cannot be defeated. The District Judge relies on the decision of the Privy Council in K. C. Mukerjee v. Ram Ratan Kuer (1) and subsequent decisions of this Court.

In second appeal it is contended that the object of ss. 26-N and 26-O being as was stated in the judgment of the Privy Council "to quiet old titles" they must be considered to have retrospective effect in favour of raiyat who is in possession of the land transferred to him but not in favour of one who is out of possession so as to enable him to disturb the landlord who has lawfully entered. The second point taken is that the suit is barred by the special period of two years' limitation laid down in Art. 3 of Sch. III to the Bihar Ten. Act. As to the first point we can find nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council in K. C. Mukerjee v. Ram Ratan Kuer (1) to suggest that their Lordships intended that distinction should be drawn between cases in which the landlord is the plaintiff and cases in which the tenant is the plaintiff. The case before their Lordships was one under s. 26-N; but in the course of their judgment their Lordships referred to s. 26-O and said:

"It will be seen that in the case of a transfer made after January 1, 1923, but before June 10, 1935 the provision is that the transferee may pay or deposit the landlord's transfer fee and thus perfect his title."

There is no suggestion that a transferee shall be incompetent to make the payment or that the Collector shall refuse to receive money in any case in which the transfer is impugned in a pending suit. We find nothing here to warrant us in drawing a distinction between pending suits in which the landlord is a plaintiff and pendenciesuits in which the landlord is a defendant. In the cases of this Court to which we have been referred we are unable also to find that such a distinction is to be drawn. Mr. Nawal Kishore Prasad II was in fact forced to put his argument in this form because, so far as cases in which the landlord is plaintiff are concerned the decisions hopelessly concluded him.

In Walihan v. Parmeshwar Narain Patakh (2) the landlord's transfer fee under s. 26-O had been deposited after the trial Court as well as the Appellate Court had decreed the landlord's suit and it was contended that the title of the transferee had become extinct by the decrees already passed against him before he made the deposit. The contention was negatived. It was held that the title of the transferee would not become extinct by the passing of a decree against him unless and until such decree has become final as it might by the lapse of the period of limitation for an appeal and the omission of the defendant to file an appeal against the decree. So far as s. 26-N is concerned there is a direct authority in Thakur Rai v. Issardayal Parshad (3) that in applying this section we cannot draw distinction between the cases in which the landlord is a plaintiff and cases in which the tenant is a plaintiff for the suit out of which the appeal arose was one instituted by the transferee to recover possession. The only case which has not yet directly arisen seems to be the case where both the transferee is the plaintiff and the section applicable is not s. 26-N but s. 26-O. In my opinion, it is not possible to draw a distinction and to say that the observations of the Privy Council do not apply in the case like the present either on the ground that the plaintiff is the transferee or on the ground that the section we are applying is s. 26-O and not s. 26-N. That being so the plaintiff was entitled to a decree unless the suit is barred by limitation.

Mr. Nawal Kishore Prasad II argued that the suit was well within the definition in Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Ten. Act, being a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as a raiya or under-raiya and the defendant in the suit being in fact the landlord of the holding. We have not however to give our own reading of the article as if the matter were res integra; we are bound to follow the decision of the Special Bench of this Court in Gajadhar Rai v. Ram Charan Gope (4). There, on a review of all the authorities, it was held that where a landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent puts the holding to sale, purchases it himself and obtains delivery of possession as auction-purchaser such dispossession of the tenant is not a dispossession by the landlord within the meaning of Art. 3, Sch. III of the Ben. Ten. Act, so as to make that article applicable. A suit to recover possession is governed by the ordinary law of limitation. The case before the Special Bench was a case in which the landlord had obtained delivery of possession through the Court and Mr. Nawal Kishore Prasad II tries to distinguish it on the ground that in the present case, on the plaintiff's own pleading, the delivery of possession issued by the Court was fraudulently suppressed and the defendant did not take possession until April 8, 1931 when without the assistance of any Court Officer he is said to have forcibly dispossessed the plaintiff. But the distinction will not assist the defendant when we look to the occasion which led to the dispossession. It was on April 7, 1931, that the plaintiff's application under O. XXI, r. 90, was rejected and it was on the very next day that possession was taken by the defendant according to the pleadings. So there can be no doubt in what capacity the defendant considered himself to be taking possession or in what capacity the plaintiff thought the defendant to be ousting him. We hold, therefore, that the case falls within the principle of the Special Bench decision cited and the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit within twelve years from the date of dispossession, that is to say, both points taken in the appeal fail and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

Civil Revision No. 681 of 1936

July 30, 1937

POLLOCK, J.

DWARKAPRASAD—APPLICANT*versusEMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 439—Proceedings under s. 476—Finding that inquiry into offence is expedient in interests of justice, if necessary—Mere omission to record such finding—Interference in revision.

In proceedings under s. 476, Criminal P. O., the Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made, but the absence of such a finding does not mean that the point has not been considered and when it is clear that the Court has considered that an inquiry was necessary in the interests of justice and that a prima facie case had been made out, the High Court should not necessarily interfere in revision merely because the words of s. 476 have not been copied out. 134 Ind. Cas. 914 (1), 113 Ind. Cas. 842 (2), 132 Ind. Cas. 160 (3) and 140 Ind. Cas. 323 (4), relied on.

App. for revision of the order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated September 7, 1936.

Mr. E. M. Joshi, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Complainant.

Mr. J. Sen, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant sued on a bond in the Small Cause Court, Janjgir, and relied on a payment endorsed on the bond to save limitation. It was held that the date of payment has been fraudulently altered by the plaintiff in order to save limitation, and in proceedings under s. 476 of the Criminal P. O., the Court ordered that the plaintiff should be prosecuted under ss. 193 and 471 of the I. P. O. On appeal the order for prosecution under s. 471, alone was upheld.

Section 476 of the Criminal P. O., provides that, when a Court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into certain offences, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court did little beyond referring to his judgment in the civil case, but I think it is obvious that he thought that there was a prima facie case against the applicant and that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into the offence. Although these points were specifically raised before the Additional District Judge, he gave no finding on the question whether an inquiry was necessary in the interests of justice or whether a prima facie case had been made out.

There has been some difference of judicial opinion on the point, but I respectfully agree with the decision of Rankin, O. J., in Nawabali Khan v. Chandrakanta Banerji (1), in which he explained his previous decision in Keramat Ali v. Emperor (2) and held that there should not necessarily be an interference in revision merely because the words of s. 476, have not been copied out. To the same effect is the decision in Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Ijjatulla Paikar (3). I respectfully agree with the decision in In re Chilukuri Ramayya (4), that the Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made, but I do not think that the absence of such a finding means that the point has not been considered and that it is necessary to interfere in revision. In Balgovind v. Jamnabai (5), it was stated that it was not incumbent on the appellate or revisional Court to assume that the first Court had properly considered the matter and come to a correct conclusion, but that does not mean that the Court must assume that the first Court has not considered the matter.

It is clear that the Appellate Court considered that an inquiry was necessary in the interests of justice and that a prima facie case had been made out, although it is unfortunate that it omitted to record a finding on either point. In the circumstances therefore I decline to interfere in revision. The application is dismissed with costs. No Counsel's fee.

Appeal from Original Decree No. 9 of 1937

AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Fraud on registration—Property not intended to pass included in mortgage deed to get document registered in sub-division, where it was situated—Whether fraud—Registration, if valid—Party to document, if can challenge registration—Proof of intention that the property was not intended to pass, if can be given—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, Proviso (1)—Insufficient description of such property, rendering it unidentifiable, if ousts jurisdiction of Sub-Registrar to register document.

There is no effective registration unless the deed of mortgage relates to land situate in the sub-district in which the deed is registered. It is not sufficient that the land mentioned in the sale or the mortgage deed exists. The document cannot be said to relate to land in a registration district unless it was the intention of the parties that such land, even if it exists, should in a sale deed be transferred or in a mortgage deed form part of the security. [p. 526, col. 2.]

Where the land certainly existed in Sub-Division where the deed was registered but the insertion of it in the mortgage deed gave the mortgagee no security whatsoever and the land being undefined could not effectually form part of the security, and on the evidence it was clear that it was never intended to form part of such security:

Held, that the registration of this mortgage deed must be held to be invalid. [ibid.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

Held, also that the mortgagor could raise this question of want of valid registration though he was a party to the fraud on the registration laws. 63 Ind. Cas. 770 (2) and 161 Ind. Cas. 29 (4), applied. [p. 527, col. 1.]

Held, further that there was nothing in s. 92 of the Evi. Act, to render evidence of the intention of the parties inadmissible. It was not evidence which varied the terms of the written document as between the parties and their representatives. It was evidence which went to show that the document did not relate to land within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered it. Further, it might well be said that evidence of this kind was evidence which tended to render the document invalid and such was admissible under the first proviso to s. 92 of the Evi. Act. 150 Ind. Cas. 545 (3) and 161 Ind. Cas. 29 (4), relied on. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Held, still further that it could not be held that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to register this sale deed by reason of the insufficiency of the description of the land situate. The Legislature intended that such errors or defects should be classed under the general words "defect in procedure" in s. 87 of the Act; so that innocent and ignorant persons should not be deprived of their property through any error or inadvertence of a public officer, on whom they would naturally place reliance. [p. 529, col. 2.]

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated September 24, 1936.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, B. P. Sinha, Shambhu Banneshwar Prasad, Prem Lall and J. C. Mullick, for the Appellants.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji and Mr. Lal Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal from a decree of the learned Third Subordinate Judge of Gaya decreeing the plaintiffs' claim in a mortgage suit.

On July 9, 1921 the mortgage in suit was executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of Deoki Singh, the deceased father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and grandfather of plaintiff No. 4. The mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 10,000 carrying interest at the rate of 13 annas 3 pies per cent. per mensem with annual rests. The claim was for Rs. 34,268-13-6. A mortgage decree was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge for Rs. 39,261-0-11 with future interest at six per cent. per annum till realisation.

The properties mortgaged consisted of a 16 annas share in a village called Bara Keyam Faridpore and 16 annas share in village Daniala covered by Tauzi No. 287 and situate in the District of Gaya together with 5 kathas of land in village Mera within the Mahal Akbarpore Bhadwa covered by Tauzi No. 4593 and situate in the District of Patna. The mortgage bond was registered in the District of Patna.

The defendants took a number of pleas in their written statement but for the purposes of this appeal it is only necessary to refer to one of them. They pleaded inter alia that the mortgage bond could not be enforced by reason of the fact that it had not been validly registered. According to the defendants, the only properties mortgaged effectually were the villages of Bara Keyam Faridpore and Daniala. Both these villages were situate in the Gaya District, and therefore the Sub-Registrar at Patna had no jurisdiction to register the mortgage. It was alleged by the defendants that the 5 kathas of land in village Mera situate in Patna District were never intended to form part of the mortgage security and that that parcel of land was only inserted in the mortgage deed as a device to defraud the registration laws.

The learned Subordinate Judge found all the issues except the one as to registration in favour of the plaintiffs. He, however, accepted the defendants' contention that the 5 kathas of land in village Mera in the Patna District were never intended to form part of the security and that the insertion of the same was a device to defeat the registration law. The Subordinate

Judge, however, came to the conclusion that the defendants were themselves parties to this fraud and, therefore, they could not set up their own fraud to avoid the effect of the mortgage bond which they had executed. The result of his findings was that he passed a decree as indicated previously.

The appellants' argument has been confined in the main to the question of registration. No point has been taken on any other of the issues which the learned Subordinate Judge decided against the defendants.

On this question of registration the defendants' case was that the 5 kathas of land in Mera in the Patna District had been inserted to defraud the registration law. According to the defendants, they were in urgent need of money. Defendant No. 1 had to meet the expenses of a criminal case which had been instituted against him and he had instructed a well-known lawyer in this district, namely, Mr. Hasan Imam, who required his fees in advance. It was estimated that Rs. 10,000 would be required for the expenses of the defence in this criminal case, and accordingly the defendants approached Deoki Singh for a loan of that amount. Deoki Singh agreed to lend the money and, it is said, that he was quite satisfied with 16 annas share in the two villages in the Gaya District. It appears that he already held a usufructuary mortgage of these two villages, but the interest of the mortgagor in the villages far exceeded the value of Rs. 10,000. As these two villages were situate in the Gaya District, registration would have to be effected either at Gaya or Jehanabad; but according to the defence, there was no time to go to either Gaya or Jehanabad as the presence of defendant No. 1 at Patna was essential to instruct his Counsel Mr. Hasan Imam. An attempt was made to obtain the money before the deed was registered, but Deoki Singh would not agree to this. On behalf of the defendants it is said that owing to this urgency Deoki Singh agreed that 5 kathas of land in Mera in the Patna District should be inserted in the mortgage in order to enable the deed to be registered in the Patna District and thus avoid the delay in going to Gaya or Jehanabad. It is to be observed that the 5 kathas of land in village Mera are not defined in any way. No boundaries are given, and there is nothing in the deed to suggest what kind of land in Mera was mortgaged. Mortgaging a mere 5 kathas of land without any description whatsoever would give the mortgagee no security of any kind. It would be impossible to bring such land to sale because it could not be identified.

On behalf of the plaintiffs, however, it was alleged that the 5 kathas of land in village Mera were intended to form part of the security. It is said that one Bedman Missir negotiated the loan and that he persuaded Deoki Singh to insist that some property in village Mera should be included. It was alleged that Bedman Missir who lived in Mera had acquired under a deed of gift some land in a village called Puran from his mother-in-law and Bedman Missir persuaded Deoki Singh to obtain a mortgage of some property in Mera so that Bedman Missir could exchange his property in Puran for property in Mera in the event of Deoki Singh enforcing his mortgage and obtaining possession of the Mera property by purchase in execution of his decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge declined to accept the plaintiffs' version of this transaction. It is clear that the explanation given by the plaintiffs of the part played by Bedman Missir in this transaction cannot possibly be true, as Bedman Missir did not obtain any property in Puran by deed of gift until May 20, 1922, whereas the mortgage in suit was dated July 9, 1921. Further, it would be extremely difficult to accept the plaintiffs' version that the land in village Mera was intended to form part of the security. As I have stated, the land is not described in any way and could not effectively be brought to sale in execution of a mortgage decree. Chandradip Narain (P. W. No. 2) admitted that he was aware that a full description of property should be given in deeds, and he admitted that when his father saw the draft mortgage bond he did not require the boundaries of the 5 kathas of land to be mentioned. Neither did they require defendant No. 1 to mention in the kabala the khassra number of the land at Mera nor whether the land was raiya bakasht or sikan or waste or cultivated land. From the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs, it is clear that the land at Mera was never inspected and Deoki Singh appears to have known little or nothing about this village. Yet 5 kathas of land in this village is stated to be part of the security.

On behalf of the defendants a number of witnesses were called who stated that the 5 kathas of land in Mera in the Patna District were mentioned in the mortgage deed merely for the purposes of registration. According to these witnesses, it was never the intention of either of the parties to the mortgage deed that this 5 kathas of land should be effectually mortgaged and form part of the mortgage security. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji who has appeared on behalf of the plaintiff-respondents has challenged the finding of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge and has asked the Court to accept the evidence of Raktoo Singh (D. W. No 5). This witness supported the defendants' story that there was great urgency in the matter. At p. 31 in the supplemental paper-book he stated :

"He (Deeki Singh) said that he would pay the money after the bond was registered. Ramnandan then said that as the Counsel wanted Ramnandan the next morning there was no time for registration of the deed and so he would execute the bond and get it attested by any Pleader if Deeki Singh so chose and on that Deeki Singh should advance the loan. But Deeki Singh said that he would not pay the money before the registration of the bond. Ramnandan then said that he could not go to Jehanabad to register the deed as his Counsel wanted him the following morning with the papers. To that Deeki Singh said that there was no necessity to go to Jehanabad to register the bond and that the bond could be registered at Patna if 2 to 4 kathas of land situate at Patna was given as security in the mortgage bond. Ramnandan agreed to this proposal. Ramnandan then asked Lalli Lal to say what 2 to 4 kathas of land in the District of Patna should be mortgaged by the bond and Lalli Lal said that 2 to 4 kathas of village Mera should be given as mortgage. Deeki Singh and Ramnandan agreed to the same."

It is true that this witness says that 2 to 4 kathas of land were agreed to be given in mortgage but it is clear that no attempt was made to identify this land and that the 2 to 4 kathas of land were only to be inserted in the mortgage to enable it to be registered at Patna. The other witnesses make it clear that the 5 kathas mentioned in the mortgage deed were never intended to form part of the security, and in my view that is the true effect of Raktoo Singh's evidence. The very fact that no attempt whatsoever was made by either of the parties to identify the land, though the plaintiffs well knew that such was essential, establishes to my mind beyond all doubt that 5 kathas of land in Mera in the Patna District were only mentioned in the mortgage deed to enable the document to be registered in Patna. The nature of the property and the urgency support the defendants' contention, and in my view the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the 5 kathas mentioned in the deed were never intended to form part of the mortgage security.

It has been urged by Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji on behalf of the respondents that as the 5 kathas of land exists it must be regarded as having been mortgaged, and that being so the deed could validly be registered in the Patna District. Section 28, Indian Regis. Act, 1908, deals with the place for registering documents relating to land.

The section is in these terms :

"Save as in this part otherwise provided, every document mentioned in s. 17, sub-s. (1), cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d), and s. 18, cls. (a), (b) and (c), shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situate."

A mortgage bond for Rs. 10,000 requires registration, and by the terms of s. 28 it can be registered in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which the mortgage relates is situate. The question to be decided in this case is whether this mortgage related to or included any property in the sub-district of the Sub-Registrar who registered it. If the document relates to no such property, then the mortgage bond has not been validly registered.

This section has been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a number of cases. The first case was Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Haridasi Debi (1). In that case the plaintiffs' (appellants') claim was based on a mortgage decree passed in a suit brought in the High Court at Calcutta on its Original Side to enforce a mortgage executed in the plaintiffs' favour. The defendants (respondents) were the mortgagor (who did not appear) and two other persons who disputed the mortgagee's title. These defendants (who had not been parties to the suit on the mortgage) alleged that the mortgage deed had not been legally registered, because no portion of the property mortgaged was situated in Calcutta where the deed had been registered and the decree had therefore been made by a Court which had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit on the mortgage, and the plaintiff had no title to maintain the suit. The only portion of the property in the mortgage deed alleged in the suit on the mortgage to be situate in Calcutta, was parcel No. 28 in the Schedule, and was described as "25 Guru Das Street;" but the property so described was found to be non-existent, the wrong description being said to be due to a mistake though no evidence of it was given. The Court directed an amendment, and the description was altered to "25 Ashutosh Dey Lane" which was in Calcutta, and was comprised within the same boundaries as those given in parcel No. 28 of the Schedule to the mortgage deed. In the present suit no evidence was given either by the mortgagor or the mortgagee to show that there had been any mistake in the description of the property; but it was proved by the defendants that the property contained within the boundaries given in parcel No. 28 was property which did not belong and never had belonged to the mortgagor. Both the Courts below, like the High Court in the suit on the mortgage, found without any evidence that there had been a mistake in the entry of parcel No. 28 and held that part of the property being in Calcutta the deed had been properly registered there, and that the decree in the mortgage suit had been rightly made, and with jurisdiction. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, reversing the decision of the High Court, that it was open to the defendants (not having been parties to the mortgage suit) to contest the validity of the decree, and for the same reason the direction of the High Court that the entry in the Schedule should be amended did not affect them; and that under the circumstances of the case the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the entry in that parcel was not a fictitious entry, which onus he had not discharged. Further, their Lordships held on the conduct of the parties and the evidence in the case, that that parcel was in fact a fictitious entry and represented no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage, or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. Such an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact existed, was a fraud on the registration law, and no registration obtained by means thereof was valid. No such fictitious item inserted to give a colourable appearance to the deed relating to property in Calcutta when in reality such was not the case, could bring the deed within the limited jurisdiction of the Court.

The High Court, therefore had no jurisdiction to make the decree; and the deed not having been registered in accordance with the Regis. Act (III of 1877), the mortgagee had no title to maintain the suit.

It will be noted in this case that the property inserted in the deed was a fictitious property which did not belong to the mortgagor. The mortgage deed, therefore, did not relate to any property in Calcutta and could not be registered there so as to give the High Court of Calcutta jurisdiction in the matter.

This case was followed in the case of Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2). In that case a mortgage bond for Rs. 8,000 which purported to mortgage a 7 anna share in a village in the Darbhanga District and 1 kauri share in the Muzaffarpur District was registered only in the Muzaffarpur District. The mortgagor had purchased the 1 kauri share shortly before the execution of the mortgage and in order that he might register in Muzaffarpur. He paid Rs. 50 for the 1 kauri share, but there was no registered instrument or delivery of possession as required by s. 54 of the T. P. Act, 1882. Their Lordships found that none of the parties intended that the 1 kauri share should vest in the mortgagor, or pass under the mortgage and subsequently, held that the mortgage was invalid under s. 54, T. P. Act, under which a mortgage for over Rs. 100 can be made only by a registered instrument. In this case the property inserted in the mortgage actually existed, though the mortgagor's title to it was defective. It was not fictitious property in the sense that it did not exist, but as the property had not vested in the mortgagor and was never intended to pass under the mortgage it was held that the document did not relate to any property situate in the Muzaffarpur District, and, therefore, the mortgage could not be validly registered in that district.

The matter was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sunder Mal (3). In that case a sale deed comprised four villages within the D sub-district for registration purposes and also a one-third share in a garden-room within the G sub-district. The deed gave the purchasers no access to the garden-room, and one of the purchasers admitted that it was of no value to them. The deed was registered in the G sub-district. It was held that the deed was not validly registered under the Indian Regis. Act, 1908, s. 28, as the evidence showed that the parties did not intend that the share in the garden-room should really be sold, its inclusion in the deed being a mere device to evade the Act. It was further held that the word "fictitious" used in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Haridasi Debi (1), is not confined to non-existing property, it is satisfied if the deed does not relate to a specified property for any effective purpose of enjoyment or use. At p. 495* Lord Blanesburgh, who delivered the judgment of the Board, observed as follows:

"In reaching that conclusion, however, they failed to refer to or take into account all the circumstances which their Lordships have detailed, and it becomes the duty of the Board to consider the question afresh in their light.

They have done so and, having regard specially although not exclusively, to the facts that this undivided share in this sitting room was agreed by one of the purchasers to be of no value, that both in respect of the interest taken in it and in respect of its complete inaccessibility it was incapable either of being utilised or enjoyed by the purchaser, that the vendor refused to include in the sale any subject in Gorakhpur to which these disadvantages did not attach, they think that one of two inferences alone is possible: either that it was never intended by either party that the sitting room should for any purpose other than that of registration be subject of sale at all, or that the vendor only included it because he knew that it never could become an effective subject of enjoyment or occupation by the purchasers. The word "fictitious" used in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Haridasi Debi (1) is not confined to non-existing properties. It is satisfied if the deed does not 'relate' to the specified property for any effective purpose of enjoyment or use."

The last case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council is the case of Inuganti Venkata Rama Rao v. Sobhanadri Appa Rao (4). In that case in a sale of land situated in one registration district there was included a yard of land situated in another registration district in which the purchaser neither resided nor owned property. There was no explanation of the use to which he could put it. The title of the vendor to it was doubtful, the purchaser made no attempt to take possession of it and it was built over by the owner of adjacent property. In those circumstances, their Lordships held that there was no intention to convey the square yard of land and the registration of the sale deed in the district in which the yard of land was situated was a device to evade the law of registration. There was, therefore, no effective registration and the deed was invalid.

In my view these cases lay down that there is no effective registration unless the deed of mortgage or sale relates to land situate in the sub-district in which the deed is registered. It is not sufficient that the land mentioned in the sale or the mortgage deed exists. The document cannot be said to relate to land in a registration district unless it was the intention of the parties that such land, even if it exists, should in a sale deed be transferred or in a mortgage deed form part of the security. In the present case 5 kathas of land certainly exist in village Mera; but the insertion of these 5 kathas in the mortgage deed gave the mortgagee no security whatsoever. The land being undefined could not effectually form part of the security, and on the evidence it is clear that it was never intended to form part of such security. It follows, therefore, that if the defendants can raise this question the registration of this mortgage deed must be held to be invalid.

The learned Subordinate Judge, as I have already stated, came to the conclusion that as the defendants were a party to this fraud on the registration law, they could not now allege that the document had not been validly registered. The learned Judge relied upon the case of Vadde Venkataswami v. Bomaraju Venkata Subbaya (5) in which it was held that a vendor of immovable property cannot be allowed to plead or to take advantage of the invalidity of the registration of his sale deed on the ground that by the inclusion of a particular item of property in the document and getting the document so registered in an office where otherwise it could not have been registered a fraud on the registration law was committed, in which he participated. Their Lordships laid down that as a general rule a plaintiff cannot plead his own fraud or illegal act as a basis of his claim or as a necessary step towards the success of his claim. His position in that matter was not made better by showing that the defendant had joined him in the fraud or illegal act or by the fraud or illegal act not being pleaded but coming to light in the course of the trial of the suit or even in the hearing of an appeal. The rule applied even where the fraud or illegality disclosed was in contravention of some rule of public policy embodied in a statute. In this case Reilly, J., relied on a number of English authorities and did not refer to the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council to which reference has already been made in this judgment. Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., also referred to a large number of English cases and at the end of his judgment stated:—

"The Privy Council decisions in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Haridasi Debi (1) and Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2) are not really applicable to the exact point that we are now considering. The question there was not whether the plaintiff could be allowed to set up his own fraud, but whether registration was properly and validly effected when the question arose with reference to third parties."

In my judgment, this Madras case is no authority for the proposition that a mortgagor defendant cannot raise this question of want of valid registration though he may be a party to the fraud on the registration laws. In Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2) a mortgagor defendant raised the same question; and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the deed had not been validly registered. That was a case in which the executants of the mortgage deed were sued and where they, who were parties to the fraud, successfully pleaded want of valid registration. The question did not arise with reference to third parties, as stated by Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., but arose in a suit between the mortgagees and the mortgagors. Again in the most recent case, namely, Inuganti Venkata Rama Rao v. Sobhanadri Appa Rao (4) the plaintiff was allowed to put forward the fraud of his father who had acted as his guardian when the property in question was sold. It appears to me that the Court is bound to hold that the defendants are entitled to raise this plea having regard, in particular, to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2). In my view the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the mortgagor defendants in this case could not raise the question of want of valid registration.

It was further urged by Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji on behalf of the respondents that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in admitting evidence as to the intention of the parties to this mortgage. He relied upon s. 92 of the Indian Evi. Act. That section is in these terms:—

"When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives-in-interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms."

To this section there are a number of provisos, and by proviso (1)

"Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, want or failure of consideration, or mistake in fact or law."

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji has relied upon a number of cases, the first of which is Lachman Das v. Ram Prasad (6) in which Ashworth, J., appears to have held that evidence as to intention was not admissible in considering the question of registration. The point was again expressly considered by Mukerji, J., in Kunwar Ram Krishna v. Anand Krishna (7). The learned Judge held that it was not open to a party to a registered sale deed to prove an oral agreement by evidence either oral or documentary contemporaneous with the sale deed, that in spite of a certain property, belonging to the vendor, being entered in the sale deed, title to it would not pass to the vendee. He further held that where the parties intended to hoodwink the Sub-Registrar by entering a piece of property within his jurisdiction in the sale deed, in order to give that officer jurisdiction, the parties contemplated a fraud on the law of registration and so should not be granted any relief in a Court of Justice. A similar view was taken by the Bombay High Court in the case of Vishvanathbhat Annabhat Pujari v. Mallappa (8). At p. 825 Macleod, C. J., stated:

"The appellant relies for his argument that there was a fraud on registration on two cases; Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Haridasi Debi (1) in which it was held that none of the properties appearing in the document to be registered was within the jurisdiction of the Registrar, and therefore, registration was invalid; and Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2) in which it was proved that the transferor had no title to the property mentioned in the transfer deed which would bring it within the jurisdiction of the Registrar. Neither of those cases is applicable to the facts in the present case. But the appellant wishes us to extend those decisions to the facts before us. We are concerned at present with the registration of the sale deed. The Registrar had jurisdiction to register that document, because a portion of the property mentioned in the deed was within his jurisdiction. Clearly, if no property belonging to the transferor appearing in the document to be registered is within the jurisdiction of the Registrar, registration by such Registrar of that document would be invalid. But we are not prepared to go further and say that evidence can be led with regard to the intention of the parties at the time the principal document was registered to deal again with the portion of the property which was within the jurisdiction of the Registrar and which rendered its registration valid."

These cases certainly afford support for the contention that evidence as to the intention of the parties is not admissible; but in my view such evidence has been clearly admitted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases to which I have referred. In the Calcutta cases evidence was adduced to show that the property was fictitious in Harendra Lal Roy Chaudhury's case (1), and that the mortgagor's title to it was imperfect in Bawanath Prasad's case (2). Further evidence was admitted in the latter case with a view to showing that the property was never intended to form part of security. In the case of the Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal (3) their Lordships at p. 494* made the following observation:—

"In the High Court the learned Judges were of opinion, and their Lordships think rightly so, that they were bound to go into this question of intention, and having done so they arrived at the conclusion that the entry of the sitting room in the deed was not a fictitious entry within the meaning of the decision of the Board already cited."

Here they expressly approved of the view of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that the Court was bound to go into the question of intention. In the judgment of Lord Blanesburgh reference is made to the evidence. At p. 494* there appears this observation:

"And this conclusion is assisted by some evidence of Shiam Rathi, the scribe who prepared it. He asked his principal, Ram Ghulam, why a third share of the room was being entered in the deed, as it would be of no use, whatever. The answer given in no way disputes that statement of Shiam Rathi's who was an ingenuous witness. He knew, he said, that if he agreed that the room was mentioned in the deed merely to enable its being registered at Gorakhpur the suit would fail on the ground of invalid registration. Yet both Courts held that the registration was valid."

In the most recent case, Inugani Venkata Rama Rao v. Sobhanaari Appa Rao (1) their Lordships again considered the question of the intention of the parties. It appears to me that if the question, which has to be decided, is the intention of the parties, evidence must be admissible though it may tend to show that property ostensibly mortgaged was not in fact intended to be mortgaged. In my view there is nothing in s. 92 of the Indian Evi. Act to render such evidence inadmissible. It is not evidence which varies the terms of the written document as between the parties and their representatives. It is evidence which goes to show that the document did not relate to land within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered it. Further, it may well be said that evidence of this kind is evidence which tends to render the document invalid and such is admissible under the first proviso to s. 92 of the Evi. Act. In my judgment the evidence as to the intention of the parties in this case was admissible and was rightly admitted by the learned Judge.

Lastly, it was contended by the appellants that the Sub-Registrar had no jurisdiction whatsoever to register this mortgage by reason of the fact that the property situate in Mera village was not sufficiently described. It was accordingly urged that this provided another ground for dismissing the plaintiffs' claim. This point does not appear to have been urged in the Court below. Section 21, Indian Regis. Act, provides:

"No non-testamentary document relating to immovable property shall be accepted for registration unless it contains a description of such property sufficient to identify the same."

It is urged that the land in Mera contains no description sufficient to identify it. What was said to be mortgaged was 5 kathas of land in Mera with no other description of any kind. The description is clearly inadequate to identify the property, and the question arises whether the Sub-Registrar had jurisdiction to register the same. Reliance has been placed by the appellants upon a number of cases. In Bairj Nath Tewari v. Sheo Sahay Bhagat (9) certain property was described in a mortgage bond as bearing Touzi No. 10, as paying a sadr jama of Rs. 719, and as lying within the jurisdiction of thana kotwali Sub-District Bhagalpur, Collectorate Bhagalpur. This description was so far erroneous, in that the property was in reality situated in thana Amarpur, (9) 18 C 553.

Sub-District Banka, and bore a sadr jama of Rs. 919-15-0. Banka was, however, within the area of the District of Bhagalpur. The mortgage bond was registered by the Sub-Registrar of Bhagalpur, who was, under s. 7 of the Regis. Act, authorized, in addition to his own duties, to exercise and perform the duties and powers of the Registrar of Bhagalpur. It was held by a majority of the Full Bench that the provisions of s. 21 of the Act, had not been complied with; that the description of the property was misleading and insufficient for the purposes of identification, and that therefore no registration of the document had been effected within the provisions of the Regis. Act. The Regis. Act referred to in this case is the Act of 1877. Section 21 of that Act was, however, in the same terms as s. 21 of the present Act. A similar view was taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Nahar Lal Shah v. Baij Nath Shah (10). It was held that when several immovable properties are mortgaged by the same deed, defect of description in respect of any one of them is sufficient to invalidate the registration of the whole deed. In that case a katha of land in Arrah was misdescribed and the description was not sufficient to identify the same. The Court held that the registration was invalid.

A Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sayed Mahmud v. Muhammad Zubair (11), expressed a similar view and held that where a letter purported to transfer immovable property and was presented as a non-testamentary document for registration but was refused on the ground that it contained no description of the property "sufficient to identify the same", such refusal was under the circumstances proper.

The effect of breaches of certain provisions of the Regis. Act was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ma Pwa May v. S. R. M. M. A. Chettyar Firm (12). Their Lordships were not called upon directly to express an opinion on the point which I am now considering; but Lord Atkin, who delivered the judgment of the Board, expressly approved of a dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Sah

Mukhun Lall Pandey v. Sah Koondun Lall (13). At p. 216 of that report Sir Barnes Peacock observed:—

"In considering the effect to be given to s. 49 that section must be read in conjunction with s. 88 and with the words of the heading of part 10, 'Of the Effects of Registration and Non-Registration'. Now, considering that the registration of all conveyances of immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upward is by the Act rendered compulsory, and that proper legal advice is not generally accessible to persons taking conveyances of land of small value, it is scarcely reasonable to suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature that every registration of a deed should be null and void by reason of a non-compliance with the provision of ss. 19, 21 or 3, or other similar provisions. It is rather to be inferred that the Legislature intended that such errors or defects should be classed under the general words 'defect in procedure' in s. 88 of the Act, so that innocent and ignorant persons should not be deprived of their property through any error or inadvertence of a public officer, on whom they would naturally place reliance."

Sections 21 and 88 of the Regis. Act, 1866, referred to by Sir Barnes Peacock have now been replaced by ss. 21 and 81 of the Indian Regis. Act, 1908; but it is to be observed that the sections are in the same terms. As I have stated, this dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock is expressly approved by Lord Atkin in the Rangoon case and, therefore, I am extremely doubtful whether the cases of the Calcutta High Court and the Allahabad High Court, to which I have referred, can now be regarded as good law. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to register this sale deed by reason of the insufficiency of the description of the land situate in Mera.

For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that the parties in this case committed a fraud on the registration law and that the registration of the document was consequently invalid. The mortgage, therefore, cannot be enforced and the plaintiffs' claim must fail.

The appellants also relied on s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, and contended that in any event a decree could not be passed for more than Rs. 20,000. That contention appears to be well-founded; but it is unnecessary to consider it as I hold that the claim fails in its entirety.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants unsuccessfully raised a number of issues in the Court below and have not challenged the findings in this Court. I would, therefore, give the defendant-appellants

GOBINDA PRASAD DAS AND OTHERS—

—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 26-G (5)—
Order on application under, if appealable.

The right of appeal is the creation of the statute and should not be inferred from analogy or deduced by implication. The words "shall have the effect of a decree" in Ben. Ten. Act do not provide for an appeal. Section 26-G (5) of the Act does not take away the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. It is optional with the mortgagor to make an application under the section and it is optional with the Court to make an order. No appeal, therefore, lies from an order passed on an application under s. 26-G (5).

O. Rule issued from an order of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated February 25, 1939.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Jana, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Saraj Kumar Maity, for the Opposite Party.

Henderson, J.—This is a rule calling upon the opposite parties to show cause why an order of the District Judge dismissing an appeal summarily should not be set aside. The opposite party filed an application under s. 26-G, sub-s. 5, Ben. Ten. Act of 1938, asking that he might be restored to possession of the property. An objection was filed by the petitioner inter alia on the ground that the mortgage was not a usufructuary mortgage. The Munsif allowed the application. The petitioner appealed to the District Court and the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal summarily on the ground that it was incompetent. The petitioner then obtained this rule. The question for our decision therefore is whether an appeal lies in these cases. The solution of the problem depends upon the meaning to be attached to the words "such order shall have the effect of a decree of a Civil Court" in sub-s. 6. In our opinion it is not necessary to consider now what precise meaning is to be attached to this provision. Undoubtedly, difficult and complicated questions of res judicata may arise which will have to be considered on an appropriate occasion, for example, the case, which is before us may raise the question whether the Munsif's decision that the mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage is res judicata or not. It will be an important question whether it is open to the petitioner to challenge that decision in a title suit. As I have already said, we do not propose to consider that matter now. The only question that arises for our decision is whether an appeal lies. The Ben. Ten. Act provides for many appeals in clear and specific terms. The right of appeal is the creation of the statute and should not be inferred from analogy or deduced by implication. In the present case if we seek to deduce an appeal by implication, an immediate practical difficulty will arise. It is to be noticed that these applications may be made either to a Court or to a Revenue Officer. The Civil P. O., makes no provision for the hearing of appeals from the decisions of Revenue Officers and, if we are to hold that the present section provides for such appeals, it will be very difficult to say what Court is competent to hear them.

The learned Advocate who appeared for the opposite party drew our attention to the fact that the Amending Act has amended s. 26-G and s. 26-F. In the latter case an appeal was provided for in clear and specific terms. He also drew our attention to the provisions of s. 158 of the Act. Sub s. 3 of that section is in these terms:

"The order on any application under this section shall have the effect of, and be subject to the like appeal as, a decree."

In our opinion this is conclusive. It shows that at any rate in this Act the words "shall have the effect of a decree" do not provide for an appeal. In the course of the argument, Mr. Janah informed us that this point was considered by Edgley, J., in an unreported case (Civil Rule No. 361 of 1939 Gadadhar Mandal v. Gobinda Prasad (1)). We accordingly sent for the record and have considered the judgment. It appears that the learned Judge did not give any reason for the conclusion at which he arrived. He seems to have assumed that there must be an appeal. He appears to have been pressed by the consideration that the question whether the applicant was an occupancy raiyyat and whether the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage could not be subsequently challenged in a proper suit. I have already said that we do not propose to consider that question, because, in our opinion it does not arise in connection with this matter. But at any rate, one thing appears to be reasonably plain. The section does not take away the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. It is optional with the mortgagor to make an application under the section and it is optional with the Court to make an order. There can be no doubt that this procedure provides a cheap and expeditious remedy by which a mortgagor can recover possession of the land and be awarded compensation for any time during which he may have been improperly deprived thereof. If the intention of the Legislature is that the decree shall have no more effect than that, then no useful purpose would be served by providing for an appeal. After all, cases in which the status of the applicant and the nature of the mortgage are in dispute, will be comparatively few. For the reasons given above, we are of opinion, that the learned Judge was right when he decided that the appeal was incompetent. The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs—hearing-fee one gold mohur.

Company—Liquidation—Debt not presently payable, if can be set-off against money owing to company—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 130—Fixed deposit receipt—Endorsement on back—Effect.

A debt, although not presently payable, can be set off against moneys owing to a company in liquidation. To allow such a set off would not amount to a fraudulent preference. In re, Washington Diamond Mining Co. (1), distinguished.

The fixed deposit receipt is not a negotiable instrument and an endorsement on the back does not have the same effect as an endorsement of a bill of exchange or promissory note.

Messrs. K. S. Sankara Iyer and M. Sundaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. C. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The applicant is a debtor of the company in liquidation. On February 17, 1938, he borrowed from this banking company a sum of Rs. 1,000, and as security for his loan he deposited 450 shares of two other companies. On May 30, 1938 repayment of this loan was demanded by the company. The applicant wrote a letter to the agent of the company on June 4, 1938. This letter is not available, but the contents are set out in the applicant's affidavit in support of his application in para. 4, and it is not controverted that his recollection in regard to the contents is accurate. The letter was to the effect that the applicant was the holder in due course of a fixed deposit receipt with the Bank for a sum of Rs. 1,000 standing in the name of Sri Bageerathi Ammal maturing on July 28, 1939, and he requested an adjustment of this debt from the company against the amount due from the applicant. An interview took place on the day of, or shortly after, the letter I mentioned, between the applicant and the agent. The substance of this interview is set out in para. 3 of the counter-affidavit and is not challenged by the applicant in his reply. At this interview, the applicant informed the agent that the depositor of Rs. 1,000, the subject of the fixed deposit receipt, had attempted to obtain payment from the company for the amount covered by the receipt but was unsuccessful, and the applicant requested that he should be allowed to set off against his debt to the company the debt which was maturing in favour of the depositor. The recollections of the applicant and the agent are now at issue in regard to what subsequently transpired. The applicant says in his affidavit that the agent promised to allow a set off; on the other hand, the Official Liquidator in his affidavit says that he was informed by the agent that he promised, on being given the fixed deposit receipt signed by the depositor, to place the matter before the management and ascertain their views. Whatever may have been said, in my view, it is quite clear from the letter of the applicant dated June 18, 1938 what was the position he accepted. Two days previously, he had been told by the company that an adjustment could not be allowed against his debt before the date of maturity of the fixed deposit receipt but that this was being held as collateral security for the loan. The applicant's reply in his letter of June 18, 1938 was that he had paid the depositor the purchase consideration and he requested that the fixed deposit should be transferred to his name if it were not possible for the company to reconsider his original request to be allowed to set off. He also asked for return of the share certificates deposited as security. It is quite clear that, whatever may have been stated, he accepted the position that on that day there was no set off and the debt due from him was still outstanding to the company.

It is urged on behalf of the applicant that no matter what may have transpired in June 1938, he is now entitled to set off against moneys due from him the moneys which ordinarily would have become due on the maturity of the fixed deposit receipt. In the light of the admissions and concessions which Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar has made on behalf of the Official Liquidators, it is not necessary for me to go into the question of the right to set off. It is conceded that a debt, although not presently payable, can be set off against moneys owing to a company in liquidation. The application of the applicant was opposed on these grounds: (1) that there was no valid assignment; and (2) if there was, to allow a set off would amount to a fraudulent preference. It is now conceded that if the assignment in favour of the applicant is binding and established, then the applicant is entitled to set off. What is disputed is whether there was a valid assignment in law.

There was a loan made to the applicant which he was requested to repay. At about the date when repayment was demanded, the depositor of the Rs. 1,000 endeavoured to obtain repayment of the money, the subject of the receipt from the bank. It was then that the applicant commenced his negotiations to set off against his debt the moneys deposited with the company by the depositor. The only documents supporting an assignment are, (a) the deposit receipt which on the back bears the signature of the depositor which signature is merely one evidencing discharge of the moneys due from the bank; (b) a letter dated June 16, 1938 signed by the depositor and addressed to the company in which it is stated that the depositor had assigned her assigned her rights in the fixed deposit receipt to the applicant and authorized the company to apply the amount towards the applicant's loan account. In the affidavit supporting this application the applicant contents himself with saying that he was the holder of this fixed deposit receipt in due course. In the counter-affidavit, in para. 10, it is stated that the Official Liquidators do not admit and put the applicant to strict proof that he is a bona fide assignee for value of the amount covered by the fixed deposit. In his reply the applicant merely says that he is a bona fide assignee for value. Seeing that it is contested that he is a bona fide assignee of this deposit receipt, one would have thought in his reply he would have set out the consideration which he paid. There is not a word about that. Learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant has referred me to s. 130, sub-s. (1), T. P. Act, 1882, which provides that "a transfer of an actionable claim whether with or without consideration shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorized agent."

There is no such document, although Counsel informed me that the assignment was effected by means of a written document. The letter written by the depositor dated June 16, 1938 to the bank to which I have referred is not an assignment. It is merely a notice to the bank that an assignment has been made. The fixed deposit receipt is not a negotiable instrument and an endorsement on the back does not have the same effect as an endorsement of a bill of exchange or promissory note. It has been argued on behalf of the applicant that the company before the winding up, accepted him as the assignee inasmuch as, having been given the fixed deposit receipt with the signature of the depositor upon the back it retained this document as a collateral security. In my view, one cannot infer from this that an assignment had been recognized. It is not infrequent that third parties' property or documents are held as security against a loan. On the one hand, the depositor was trying to obtain the amount of the deposit from the bank, upon which there was a run at the time; on the other hand, the applicant had borrowed money from the bank which he was being asked to repay. The company did not repay its debt upon the unmatured fixed deposit receipt nor did the applicant return to the bank the money he borrowed. When the Official Liquidators stepped in, having been appointed provisionally in the first instance, negotiations took place between the applicant and the liquidators as set out in para. 7 of the counter-affidavit, which is not disputed.

On July 25, the applicant wrote to the provisional liquidators asking them to make necessary adjustments in the loan account and to return to him the share certificates held by the bank as collateral security. The liquidator replied on the same day regretting that they were unable to comply with his request; on the 30th the applicant wrote that the depositor was willing to give another fixed deposit receipt in substitution for the earlier one, the other fixed deposit receipt maturing on July 28, 1938. It seems strange that if there had been an absolute assignment of fixed deposit receipt, which is being questioned in this application, why this lady was willing to exchange it for another maturing at an earlier date. It seems to me that what had happened was that there had been an understanding between the depositor and the applicant for their mutual benefit. It is significant that no reference has been made by the applicant to the consideration which had passed. I can only assume that there was none. There is no assignment in writing as required by s. 130, T. P. Act, and quite apart from that, the applicant has been put to strict proof and, it is insufficient for him to say 'I am a bona fide assignee,' and nothing more. Bearing all these circumstances in mind, in my view, the applicant has not satisfied me that he is or ever was an assignee at all. The result is that this application fails.

There has been addressed to me on behalf of the Official Liquidators an argument that if a set off were allowed, it would amount to a fraudulent preference. In my view that argument is unsound. In support of it there was cited to me In re Washington Diamond Mining Co. (1). In my view, that case is not in point in the present instance. In the case cited, a share-holder, holding shares in respect of which calls upon unpaid share moneys were due, purported to have liquidated this by means of transaction which in effect was setting off against the calls moneys due to him. Since there is no set off in respect of unpaid calls upon shares due from contributories, the transaction was held to be a fraudulent preference. No question of calls upon shares arises in the present case, and in my view, if the assignment had been established, a set off should have been allowed in respect of the applicant's debt. However, the result is that this application is dismissed with costs. Certified for Counsel.

EMPEROR—

Defence of India Act (XXXV of 1939), s. 2—Rules under—Rr. 34 (6) (g), (6) (p)—Increase in price of pair of dhotis by 10 per cent. over the price ruling on September 1, 1939—Offence under Rules, if committed—Absence of order fixing price—Effect.

An increase of roughly 10 per cent. in the price of a pair of dhotis can hardly be said to be an act likely to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of it, within the meaning of r. 34 (6) (g), whatever other consequences it may have on the public mind. Such an act is not likely to have any bearing on the efficient prosecution of the war and the defence of India or the public safety nor can it be said to prejudice the public interest within the meaning of r. 34 (6) (p).

Profiteering was not intended to be included in the definition of "prejudicial act" in r. 34 (6).

In the absence of any order fixing the price of cloth in the district it cannot be held that the accused has committed any offence under the Defence of India Rules if he increases the price of a pair of dhotis roughly by 10 per cent. over the price ruling on September 1, 1939.

Cr. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga in his letter No. 188 Cr., dated January 20/24, 1940.

Mr. C. P. Sinha, In favour of the Reference.

The Government Pleader, Against the Reference.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 438 of the Criminal P. O., by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga. The facts were as follows:—On September 24, 1939, the accused sold for Rs. 2-6 a pair of dhotis similar to a pair which they had sold on September 5, for Re. 1-13-6. The Police submitted a Namokamal charge-sheet alleging the commission of an offence under rr. 34 (h)/38 of the Indian Ordinance Act of 1939. The accused persons were sent in custody to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who remanded them to hajat until September 27, 1939. The learned Sessions Judge recommends the setting aside of this order taking cognizance of the offence on the ground that no offence has been made out by the facts alleged. The sections referred to in the charge-sheet are presumably rules embodied in the Defence of India Rules framed by the Central Govt. under s. 2 of the Defence of India Ordinance, 1939. There is no r. 34 (h) but there is a r. 34 (6) which defines what is meant by "a prejudicial act" and sub-r. (h) includes within the definition of

"prejudicial act" any act which is intended or is likely to impede, delay or restrict the distribution of any essential commodity. Essential commodity is defined in r. 34 (3) as food, water, fuel, light, power, or any other thing essential for the existence of the community which is notified in this behalf by Govt. There is no evidence before me that the Govt. has notified clothing to be an essential commodity within the meaning of this rule. Under sub-r. (g) of r. 34 (6) it is also a prejudicial act to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of the public. An increase of roughly 10 per cent. in the price of a pair of dhotis can hardly be said to be an act likely to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of it, whatever other consequences it may have on the public mind. It has also been suggested that the act complained of falls within sub-r. (p) of r. 34 (6). This sub-rule refers to acts intended or likely to prejudice the efficient prosecution of the war and the defence of British India or the public safety or interest. The increase in the price of this pair of dhotis is not likely to have any bearing on the efficient prosecution of the war and the defence of India or the public safety; nor, in my opinion, can it be said to prejudice the public interest that a shoopkeeper increased the price of a pair of dhotis by 10 per cent. I am confirmed in my view that this rule is not aimed at profiteering by a comparison of rr. 38 (5) and 81 (4). Rule 38 (1) (a) prohibits the doing of any "prejudicial act" as defined in r. 34 (6), and r. 38 (5) provides that any person who contravenes the provisions of r. 38 shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years and shall also be liable to fine. It is apparently sought to punish the accused under s. 38 (5) and if that sub-rule applies the accused is liable to imprisonment for five years for what is popularly known as profiteering.

Now, r. 81 (2) authorises the Central Govt. for the purpose, inter alia, of maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community, to provide for the control of prices at which articles or things of any description whatsoever may be sold, and sub-rule (4) provides that any person who contravenes the provisions of this rule shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term that may extend to three years and shall also be liable to fine. It will be observed, therefore that in the rule which specifically refers to the control of prices the punishment is limited to three years whereas the punishment for doing a "prejudicial act" may extend to five years. This distinction, I think, supports the view that profiteering was not intended to be included in the definition of "prejudicial act" in s. 34 (6).

The next question to be considered is whether the accused is liable by reason of r. 81 (4). For this purpose it is necessary to enquire whether in fact there has been any order controlling the price of cloth. Section 2 (4) (b) of the Defence of India Ordinance, 1939, empowers a Local Govt. to direct that any of the powers conferred upon it by sub-r. (1) shall be exercised by any Provincial Govt. or by any officer or authority subordinate to such Govt. Rule 2 (1) authorises the Central Govt. to make rules for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community. In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-r. (4) of r. 2 the Central Govt. has directed that the powers conferred on it by sub-r. (2) of r. 81 of the Defence of India Rules to provide for controlling prices shall also be exercisable by any Provincial Govt. (see Notification of the Department of Commerce No. 20 dated September 8, 1939). The notification provides that the powers thus conferred on the Provincial Govt. shall only be exercised, inter alia, in respect of the cheaper qualities of cotton cloth and that the orders issued by the Local Govt. shall not subject the prices to a minimum lower than 10 per cent. above the ruling price on September 1, 1939.

Now, in the first place, the learned Subordinate Judge pointed out that no scale of prices for cloth in the Darbhanga district had been promulgated before September 21, 1939; nor has any order fixing the price of cloth in that district been brought to my notice. Furthermore, even if the Local Govt. has fixed or does fix the price of cloth it is bound to allow 10 per cent. above the price ruling on September 1, last. Assuming that the price of the dhotis with which I am concerned was Rs. 1-13-6 on September 1, 1939, the Local Govt. was bound by any order which it issued to permit the dealer to charge up to Rs. 2 and some odd pies. In the present instance it has exceeded that price by less than six pies; but it has not been shown that the Local Govt. or the Central Govt. has in fact fixed the price of cloth in exercise of the powers conferred on them. In the absence of any order fixing the price of cloth in the Darbhanga district it cannot be held that the accused has committed any offence under the Defence of India Rules.

The reference is, therefore, accepted and the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate taking cognizance of the case is set aside.

It may be observed that the Defence of India Ordinance, 1939, has been repealed and replaced by the Defence of India Act, 1939, which received the assent of the Governor-General on September 29, 1939. Rule 21 of the Act provides that rules made under the Ordinance shall be deemed to have been made in exercise of powers conferred by or under the Act as if the Act has come into operation on September 3, 1939. It has not been shown that any fresh rules have been issued under this Act relevant to the present question.

Order accordingly.

It is true that in a case for the assessment of rent evidence of long possession without payment of rent might in certain circumstances lead to an inference that a former proprietor of the estate had created a rent free title in respect of the land in suit. But even in such a case it would be essential that such evidence should be of a definite character and cover a sufficiently long period to allow such an inference to be drawn. In a case in which it is sought to annul a tenure under s. 37 of the revenue sale law a fortiori the proof of long possession without payment of rent must be of a very definite and convincing nature such as would be sufficient to enable the Court to draw the inference that the niskar grant in respect of the tenure had been made prior to the Permanent Settlement. 99 Ind. Cas. 189 (5), relied on. [p. 537, cols. 1 & 2.]

The auction-purchaser is entitled to eject all under-tenants who hold their land entirely within his estate but he is not entitled by this section to eject an under-tenant who holds an under-tenure partly within his estate and partly within other estates. Where, therefore, the tenures are held by the defendants not only under the touzi purchased at a revenue sale by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff but also under other touzies, these tenures cannot be annulled in part and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief by any way of ejectment. Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory, S. A. No. 797 of 1936, Sooharam Barma v. Doorga Charan Das (6), 55 Ind. Cas. 645 (7) and 135 Ind. Cas. 765 (10), relied on, Kamal Kumari v. Kiran Chandra Roy (8) and Preonash Mitter v. Kiran Chandra Roy (9), distinguished. [p. 538, col. 2.]

In a case in which the plaintiff is seeking to recover possession of property on the basis of a revenue sale the initial onus must lie on the plaintiff to show that the land lies within his regularly assessed estate or mahal and not merely that it lies within the ambit of his zemindari. Even if he has succeeded in discharging this onus the entry in the Record of Rights in favour of the defendants has the effect of throwing the onus back on the plaintiff in order to prove that the land did not appertain to a niskar tenure. Once the plaintiff has discharged the initial onus which lies upon him in a matter of this sort it would be for the defendant to prove that his case would fall within one of the exceptions to s. 37 of Ben. Revenue Sales Act. 71 Ind. Cas. 984 (1), Sashi Bhushan v. Abdulla (2) and 126 Ind. Cas. 128 (3), relied on. [p. 536, col. 2.]

A. from the appellate decree of District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated October 13, 1936

Messrs. Hiralal Chakravarty and Surendranath Basu (Sr.), for the Appellant.

Dr. Basak and Mr. Pannalal Chatterjee for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff, Smt. Ashamoyee Basu, sued the defendants for the establishment of her title on recovery of possession of a certain property which had been purchased by her predecessor-in-interest at a revenue sale which was held on January 13, 1922. The plaintiff's case was to the effect that Kazi Rasid Jaman purchased Touzi No. 166 of the 24 Parganas Collectorate on January 13, 1922 and his heirs had conveyed this estate to her on January 26, 1929. Thereafter she issued a notice annulling the various tenures under Touzi No. 166 including two tenures which are recorded in Khatians Nos. 426 and 322 of the settlement records and comprise certain lands mentioned in Schs. Ka, and Kha attached to the plaint. From the terms of the plaint, it appears to have been admitted by the plaintiff that these particular tenures which were the subject-matter of the suit were held by the defendants not only under Touzi N. 166 but also under several other touzies, namely Touzies Nos. 63, 163, 168 and 222 of the 24 Parganas Collectorate. In the Record of Rights, the land included in Sch. Ka had been recorded as niskar by reason of possession and as regards the land in Sch. Kha the entry in the Record of Rights was to the effect that it was liable to assessment of rent. The plaintiff claimed that by reason of the annulment of these tenures she was entitled to eject the defendants from the land appertaining thereto.

The main case for the defendants in respect of these two tenures was to the effect that the plaintiff, as the successor-in-interest of the auction-purchaser, was not entitled to possession as the land in suit appertained to certain niskar tenures which had been created before the time of the Permanent Settlement. In paras. 8 and 9 of their written statement a further point was taken by the defendants to the effect that the two tenures mentioned in the plaint could not be legally annulled and that the plaintiff was also not entitled to the relief claimed by her in view of the fact that she had obtained only an undivided fractional interest in the land in suit and was in the position of a co-sharer landlord in respect of this land. Admittedly, the case proceeded to trial on the question as to whether or not the defendants were entitled to protection having regard to the existence of their alleged niskar right in the tenures which were the subject-matter of the suit and in the trial Court no further question seems to have been raised as to the right of the plaintiff to annul the tenures either by reason of her fractional interest in the touzies under which the tenures were held or on account of the fact that these tenures were held not only under Touzi No. 166 but also under several other touzies.

The first Court decided that, as regards the land included in Sch. Ka, the defendants had established their case. As regards the Kha Schedule land the plaintiff's suit was decreed and she was allowed possession in the terms of the relief sought by her in the plaint. The plaintiff then appealed with reference to the Ka Schedule land and the defendants at the same time preferred a cross-objection with regard to the decision against them with reference to the Kha Schedule land. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal but allowed the cross-objection which had been filed by the defendants. As a result therefore of the decision of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in its entirety.

The plaintiff has therefore preferred this second appeal to this Court.

The first point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant in this case is that the decision of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the Ka Schedule land cannot be supported. As already pointed out, the entry in the Record of Rights with regard to this property is in favour of the contention which has been raised by the defendants. In a case of this sort in which the plaintiff is seeking to recover possession of property on the basis of a revenue sale the initial onus must lie on the plaintiff to show that the land lies within his regularly assessed estate or mahal and not merely that it lies within the ambit of his zamin-pari, Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1), Sashi Bhusan v. Abdulla (2), Mokhan Lal v. Rup Chand (3). Having regard to the fact that the Ka Schedule land is recorded as being niskar in the Record of Rights and in view of the presumptive correctness of this entry it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the plaintiff has discharged the initial onus which lies upon her in this matter. Even if it be assumed however that she has succeeded in discharging this onus the position is that the entry in the Record of Rights is in favour of the defendants. This fact would, in my opinion, have the effect of throwing the onus back on the plaintiff in order to prove that the Ka Schedule land did not appertain to a niskar tenure. This onus the plaintiff has failed to discharge. In this view of the case I am of opinion, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the Ka Schedule land is correct.

As regards the land described in Sch. Kha the entry in the Record of Rights is to the effect that this land is liable to assessment of rent. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree with regard to the land of this schedule and pointed out that the defendants had adduced no evidence to discharge the onus which lay on them by reason of the entry in the Record of Rights beyond adducing certain evidence to the effect that they had not paid rent for a certain number of years. When the plaintiff appealed with regard to the dismissal of her suit in respect of the Ka Schedule land, as already pointed out, the defendants preferred a cross-objection with regard to the land covered by Sch. Kha. This cross-objection was allowed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the land in question had been in the possession of the defendants for a long time without payment of rent. It may however be mentioned that para. 7 of the grounds attached to the memorandum of cross-objection was to the effect that the learned Munsif was wrong in holding that the defendants' tenure could be annulled and that he should have held that the tenure was not liable to be annulled under the law and was not and could not, in fact, be annulled by the plaintiff as regards the land comprised in Sch. Kha. In view of the line of reasoning adopted by the learned Additional District Judge no occasion arose in the lower Appellate Court to consider the defendant's case in the light of the contention raised in para. 7 of the memorandum of cross-objection.

As already pointed out, the initial onus must lie upon the plaintiff to show that the land in suit lies within her regularly assessed estate or mahal. Having regard to the entry contained in the Record of Rights this initial onus appears to have been discharged. The question then arises as to whether or not it can be said that the defendants have succeeded in discharging the onus which lies on them to prove that the Kha Schedule land appertains to a niskar tenure. In holding that the defendants have succeeded in discharging this onus the learned Additional District Judge adverts to the fact that the defendants had been in long possession of this land without payment of rent and he holds that this is a circumstance which should be taken into consideration as evidence in support of the defendants' contention. The lower Appellate Court places considerable reliance upon the decision of R. O. Mitter, J., in Kanta Mohan Mallik v. Makhan Santra (4). In that case the learned Judge was dealing with an appeal which arose with reference to a suit brought by the plaintiffs for the assessment of rent and he pointed out that long possession without any demand or payment of rent would be evidence of a grant of a rent-free title. It is true that in a case for the assessment of rent evidence of long possession without payment of rent might in certain circumstances lead to an inference that a former proprietor of the estate had created a rent free title in respect of the land in suit. But even in such a case it would be essential that such evidence should be of a definite character and cover a sufficiently long period to allow such an inference to be drawn. In this connexion it was pointed out by Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., in Brojendra Kishore v. Mohim Chandra (5) that:

"The time during which the defendants have been in possession, in my judgment, has been left indefinite and I am not prepared to hold that when the period during which the defendants have been in possession is left in an indefinite and nebulous state that is sufficient even when taken with the fact that no rent has been paid to show that the entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect."

If such is the law with regard to a suit for the assessment of rent, in my opinion, in a case in which it is sought to annul a tenure under s. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law a fortiori the proof of long possession without payment of rent must be of a very definite and convincing nature such as would be sufficient to enable the Court to draw the inference that the niskar grant in respect of the tenure had been made prior to the Permanent Settlement. It certainly cannot be said that any such definite proof has been given on behalf of the defendants in the suit out of which this appeal arises. On the other hand the entry in the Record of Rights clearly indicates that no such niskar grant could ever have been made and in my opinion, this entry stands un rebutted.

With regard to this point it was argued by the learned Advocate for the respondents that in a case in which the plaintiff is seeking to annul an under tenure, the onus would lie upon him to prove that the tenure in question had been created after the Permanent Settlement and could therefore be annulled. This proposition, in my opinion, it is not one which can be reconciled with the principles which have been laid down in Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1), and the other two cases cited above in which that decision has been explained. I consider that there can be no doubt that in a case in which the plaintiff has discharged the initial onus which lies upon him in a matter of this sort it would be for the defendant to prove that his case would fall within one of the exceptions to s. 37 of Act II of 1857. This onus the defendants have not been able to discharge. It would therefore follow that, in my opinion, the decision of the lower Appellate Court with regard to Kha Schedule land is wrong and had the matter rested there, it would have been necessary for me to reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point.

In this connection it is urged by the learned Advocate for the respondents that in any event the plaintiff cannot be entitled to a decree having regard to the fact that admittedly the tenures which she is seeking to annul are held by the defendants not only under Touzi No. 166 but also under other touzis of the 24 Parganas Collectorate. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the respondents should not be allowed to raise this point at this stage in view of the fact that no argument was raised on this contention at any stage of the case in the Courts below. Having regard to the position taken by the defendants in paras. 8 and 9 of their written statement it is perhaps surprising that they did not forcibly urge in the trial Court that their tenures could not be partially annulled. As already pointed out, their case in the first Court was merely to the effect that they were protected by reason of their niskar title. It would appear to be probable however that the defendants did not raise this particular point in the first Court in view of the fact that the same learned Munsif had decided a similar point against them in a connected case, namely Title Suit No. 14 of 1931 which was decided in the Court of Babu Sailendranath Chatterjee on January 23, 1935. In that particular suit the main contention of the defendants was to the effect that the plaintiff could not legally annul the tenures which were the subject-matter of that suit inasmuch as these tenures were held by the defendants under the five touzis of the 24 Parganas Collectorate to which reference has already been made. When this point was decided against them in the first Court they took the matter on appeal to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and thence to the High Court where they obtained a decision in their favour in Second Appeal No. 797 of 1936 Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory which was decided by M. O. Ghose and Bartley, JJ., on March 31, 1938. The decision in that case is based on two previous decisions of this Court in Soocharam Barma v. Doorga Charan Das (6), and in Mahamed Ghuran v. Basarat Ali, 55 Ind. Cas. 645 (7). Reference was made in the judgment to two other decisions of this Court in Kamal Kumari v. Kiran Chandra Roy (8), and that in Preonath

Mitter v. Kiran Chandra Roy (9). As regards the two latter cases I agree with Ghose and Bartley, JJ., in thinking that they have no application in connection with this particular matter as the points decided in those cases did not relate to any question in which it was sought to annul any part of a tenure held by the tenure-holders under several different touzis. I entirely agree with the view which has been taken by M. O. Ghose and Bartley, JJ., to the effect that, if the words of s. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law be given

"their natural meaning it is clear that the auction-purchaser is entitled to eject all under-tenants who hold their land entirely within his estate but he is not entitled by this section to eject an under-tenant who holds an under-tenure partly within his estate and partly within other estates."

Although the defendants did not rely on this point in the first Court, the circumstances in which they failed to do so were certainly peculiar. They did however recite the point indirectly (Ground No. 7 of their memorandum of cross-objections) although no occasion arose for the learned Additional District Judge to consider this ground. In the circumstances of the case I think that for the ends of justice the defendants should be allowed to take this ground at this stage. It follows therefore that although the plaintiff has, in my opinion, succeeded in discharging the onus which lies on her with reference to the Kba Schedule land, she nevertheless cannot succeed in obtaining the relief which she seeks as she cannot obtain possession of any portion of the land in suit without annulling the tenure to which that land appertains: Turner Morrison & Co., Ltd. v. Monmohan Chowdhary (10). As the two tenures with which we are concerned are held by the defendants not only under the touzi purchased at a revenue sale by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff but also under other touzis, these tenures cannot be annulled in part and, therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief by any way of ejectment. The appeal must therefore be dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs. Leave to appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

PATNA HIGH COURT

of 1939

February 28, 1940

FAZL ALI AND MEREDITH, JJ.

Mst. DEORATI KUER—APPELLANT

versus

DASARATH DUBEY AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1934), Sch. III, Art. 3—Applicability—Simple money decree against original tenant—Landlord getting dakhil dehani—Suit by transferee for possession—Limitation applicable—Landlord, if should take possession as landlord as such.

Where the decree obtained is only a money decree and in execution of the decree against the original tenant the landlord obtains dakhil dehani from the Court, the landlord, is auction-purchaser only of the right, title and interest of the original tenant whatever that might be and not of the holding or of the tenancy right of the transferee from the original tenant. Therefore, in dispossessing the transferee the dispossession is not really in the capacity of auction-purchaser of his interest, but merely upon the excuse of being an auction-purchaser. This is clearly a case where the special limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III, Bihar Ten. Act is applicable to a suit by the transferee for possession.

Obiter.—The special two years' limitation as provided by Art. 3, Sch. III, Bihar Tenancy Act, applies even where the landlord takes possession as auction-purchaser. That Article does not provide, even by implication, that dispossession must be by the landlord.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah, dated December 2, 1938.

Messrs. Hareeshwar Prasad Sinha and Rajeswari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Indra Behari Saran, for the Respondents.

Meredith, J.—This case has been referred to a Division Bench by a learned Judge sitting singly. The appeal is by the landlord, defendant No. 1 in the suit, and the only point that arises is one of limitation, namely, whether the suit is governed by the special rule of limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bihar Ten. Act, which provides two years' limitation from the date of dispossession in the case of a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as a raiyyat or an under-raiyyat, or governed by the general rule of limitation whereby 12 years is provided under Art. 142 of the Lim. Act.

The respondent brought a suit for recovery of possession of a sarahmoayan holding bearing Khata No. 311 in village Chorain in the Shahabad District. This holding originally belonged to defendant No. 3 and the plaintiff purchased it on June 9, 1923. Later on the landlord (defendant No. 1) brought a rent suit against defendant No. 3 (the original tenant) obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree obtained dakhil dehani from the Court on September 12, 1929. The plaintiff sued on the allegations that he was not a party in that suit, knew nothing about it and was not dispossessed by the dakhil dehani. In 1933 however, a criminal case was brought against the plaintiff by defendant No. 2, a servant of defendant No. 1, in which the plaintiff was convicted and his conviction was maintained by the High Court in revision on December 18, 1933. Taking advantage of this decision the landlord dispossessed him on December 30, 1933.

The present suit was brought on December 18, 1936. If two years' limitation applies, it would be barred by limitation. If twelve years, it would not.

The Courts below came to concurrent findings that the decree obtained by the appellant against defendant No. 3 was only a money decree that the plaintiff remained in possession after the delivery of possession by the Court and that he was only dispossessed, as alleged by him, after his conviction in the criminal case. The learned Munsif held that the case was governed by two years' limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III and so the claim was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion, however, that the case was governed by Art. 142 and twelve years' limitation and so he decreed the suit.

The basis for the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Gajadhar Rai v. Ram Charan Gope (1) where it was laid down that where a landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent puts the holding to sale, purchases it himself and obtains delivery of possession through Court, such dispossession of the tenant is not a dispossession within the meaning of Art. 3, Sch. III of the Ben. Ten. Act, 1885. The learned Subordinate Judge in holding that this decision was applicable to the case seems to have forgotten his own finding that the ouster was not under the decree but took place forcibly years later as a result of the plaintiff's conviction in the criminal case. It is quite obvious that in the present case the dispossession was not through Court at all and the Full Bench ruling has no application.

It is argued for the respondent that though dispossession may not have been through Court, still it was by the landlord, not as such, but as auction-purchaser, and, that where the dispossession is by the landlord, qua not landlord, but as auction-purchaser, the special two years' limitation does not apply. It is sought to make the Gajadhar Rai v. Ram Charan Gope (1). Full Bench case authority for this proposition, but it is not such authority. It merely laid down that the special limitation did not apply where both features were present, namely, dispossession through Court, and as auction-purchaser. The judgment in this Full Bench case was delivered by Kulwant Sahay, J., and what Kulwant Sahay, J.'s opinion on the point in question really was is to be found clearly expressed in Mahadeo Rai v. Pargash Rai (2) in which case this learned Judge observed, no doubt by way of obiter.

"If in execution of the decree, only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor was sought to be delivered to the purchaser and after taking possession of the holding which represented the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, the purchaser subsequently dispossessed the plaintiff, then in that case Art. 3 of Sch. III to the Ben. Ten. Act would have applied."

The point which has been raised was considered at length by the Calcutta High Court in a Letters Patent Appeal Satish Chandra Banerji v. Hasemali Kazi (3) where it was held that the special two years' limitation applied even where the landlord took possession as auction-purchaser, and it was pointed out that Art. 3, Sch. III does not provide, even by implication, that dispossession must be by the landlord as such. The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Amir-ud-Din Sircar v. Nasaruddin Sarkar, 175 Ind. Cas. 697 (4) where the Court held that dispossession by the landlord as auction-purchaser comes under the provisions of the special law of limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III, Ben. Ten. Act.

If I may say so, these decisions appear to me to express the correct view. In any case, however, I think that the point does not really arise in the present case, since the finding is that the decree obtained against the original tenant was only a money decree and the tenancy continued. The landlord, therefore, was auction-purchaser only of the right, title and interest of the original tenant (defendant No. 3), whatever that might have been, and not of the holding or of the tenancy right of the plaintiff. Therefore in dispossessing the plaintiff, the dispossession was not really in the capacity of auction-purchaser of his interest, but merely upon the excuse of being an auction-purchaser, just as it was upon the excuse of having got the decision of a Criminal Court in the landlords' favour.

In my opinion, this is clearly a case where the special limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III, Bihar Ten. Act is applicable. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Malik NARAIN DAS—PLAINTIFF

versus

DISTRICT BOARD, JHANG—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Master and servant—Illegal removal from service of servant of District Board—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to entertain suit for damages.

The position of an employee in the service of a local authority like the District Board is the same as that of a Govt. servant in this respect and the tenure of his service is 'at the pleasure' of that authority. Therefore, Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for damages on the ground of illegal removal of a servant from service by a District Board. 166 Ind. Cas. 516 (6), relied on; 175 Ind. Cas. 875 (7) and 148 Ind. Cas. 637 (9), distinguished.

S. A. from a decree of the District Judge, Jhang at Sargodha, dated January 30, 1939.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Barkat Ali and Mahmud Ahmad Janjua, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Plaintiff Narain Das, who was an accountant in the service of the District Board, Jhang, sued in this case for recovery of Rs. 2,000 as damages on the ground that he had been removed from service by the District Board wantonly, illegally, and without any justification. The suit was resisted by the District Board inter alia on the plea that Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. The Courts below, however, passed a decree for Rs. 472-4-0 in favour of the plaintiff relying chiefly on a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in Girdhari Lal v. Secretary of State (1). That ruling follows inter alia Satish Chandra v. Secretary of State (2) and Bimalacharan v. Trustees for the Indian Museum (3) and J. R. Baroni v. Secretary of State (4); in preference to R. T. Rangachari v. Secretary of State (5). These rulings were, however, recently considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6), and the view taken by the Madras High Court in R. T. Rangachari v. Secretary of State (5), was approved. In the circumstances, the present case must be decided in the light of the principles laid down by their Lordships in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6). The facts of that case were similar to those of the present case except that the plaintiff in that case was a Govt. servant while the plaintiff in the present case is an employee of a District Board. It seems, however, well-established that the position of an employee in the service of a local authority like the District Board is the same as that of a Govt. servant in this respect and the tenure of his service is 'at the pleasure' of that authority: vide Aiyangar's Law of Municipal Corporations in British India, p. 124, and the rulings referred to therein. This view is accepted even in Prabhu Lal Upadhyaya v. District Board, Agra (7), on which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff relied. The only other point of distinction to which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff has invited my attention is that in the present case the conditions of service of the plaintiff were governed by rules framed by the Local Govt. under the Punjab District Boards Act. In the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, the conditions of service were governed by classification rules framed under the Govt. of India Act. But I am unable to see that this would make any material difference. Section 96-B, Govt. of India Act of 1919, which was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6), laid down that the tenure of a civil servant will be at the pleasure of the Crown but subject to the provisions of the Govt. of India Act and the rules thereunder.

Although the rules were framed under the Act their Lordships held that the terms of the section only amounted to a 'solemn assurance' that the service, though at the pleasure of the Crown, will not be subject to capricious or arbitrary action, and will be regulated by rule, and did not import any special kind of employment with an added contractual term that the rules must be observed. In the present instance, s. 27, District Boards Act, which relates to employment of officers and servants does not say that the servants of the District Board will hold their offices at the pleasure of the local authority but that is the usual condition of the tenure of service of a local authority as pointed out above. Unlike s. 6-B, Govt. of India Act, 1919, s. 27, Punjab District Boards Act, does not even say that the tenure of service will be subject to the rules framed under the District Boards Act. Section 55 of that Act s. 55 of that Act, empowers the Local Govt. to frame rules as regards the employment, payment, suspension and removal of officers and servants employed under s. 27 and the plaintiff's contention in the present case was that these rules had not been complied with. I am unable to see how the position of the plaintiff in this case can be said to be in any way better than that of the plaintiff in the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6).

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff referred to Prabhu Lal Upadhyaya v. District Board, Agra (7), but the facts of that case are distinguishable inasmuch as it was found in that case that the statutory provisions of s. 71, United Provinces District Boards Act, had not been complied with. The case thus came within the exceptional class of cases to which the rule laid down in Gould v. Stuart (8), applies according to the view taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6). In Gould v. Stuart (8), the conditions of service were enacted in the body of the New South Wales Civil Service Act. It was therefore held that these were inconsistent with importing into the contract of service the term that the Crown may put an end to it at its pleasure. Clifford B. Reilly v. Emperor (9), on which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff relied was also a case of a different type and was decided on its special facts. I must, therefore, hold that the present case is governed by the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in R. Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State (6), and that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal of the plaintiff and accepting the appeal of the defendant District Board dismiss the plaintiff's suit. In view of all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Suit No. 2025 of 1936

August 22, 1938

PANCRIDGE, J.

THIN YEN—PLAINTIFF

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 226 (1)—Confiscation of goods by Customs Authorities under s. 167 (36), Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878)—Suit by owner for declaration that order was illegal—Jurisdiction of High Court to entertain it on original side—Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), ss. 182, 191—Decision of Chief Customs Authority modified by Governor-General in Council under s. 191—If can be questioned in Civil Court.

Where the goods of the plaintiff have been confiscated by the Customs Authorities under s. 167 (36), Sea Customs Act on the ground that the plaintiff removed them with the intention of defrauding the revenue, after they had been landed and before they had been passed through the Customs House, and the plaintiff brings a suit for a declaration that the order of confiscation was illegal with a prayer for return of the goods, or for a decree for their value, the Original Side of the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. The Court cannot examine the circumstances to see if the action of the Authorities was lawful, because, no irregularity of procedure and no error in the conclusions arrived at can per se exclude the application of the Govt. of India Act, 105 Ind. Cas. 576 (2) and 48 Ind. Cas. 790 (3), relied on. 172 Ind. Cas. 771 (5) and 137 Ind. Cas. 535 (6), explained.

It is a well-known principle that where a statute creates a duty or imposes a liability, and prescribes a specific remedy in case of neglect to perform the duty or discharge the liability, no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. The Legislature intended that the sole remedy open to those who were aggrieved by a decision or order passed by an Officer of Customs under the Sea Customs Act, should be the appeal to the Chief Customs Authority provided by s. 188. The order passed by the Governor-General in Council under s. 191 of the Act can in no case, be questioned in the Civil Courts, except possibly orders which while purporting to be made under it are clearly outside it. An order by the Governor-General in Council enhancing penalty would possibly be such an order. Generally speaking, however, what the section contemplates are revisional orders of an executive character.

Messrs. P. B. Mukherjee and R. Guha, for the Plaintiff.

The Advocate-General and Mr. S. R. Das, for the Secretary of State.

Judgment.—This suit has been set down for the trial of the issue whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain it. The following are the facts: In December 1934 two consignments of goods arrived in Calcutta by sea per s. s. Hosang for the plaintiff. A person named Achan was the plaintiff's authorized clearing agent. One consignment consisted of 66 packages, and I will call it the "A" consignment, the other consignment consisted of 35 packages and I will call it the "B" consignment. There was a bill of entry in respect of the "A" consignment which showed that the packages bore no marks; it also showed that there were no silk goods among the contents. On December 14, 1934 seven packages were seized by the Customs House Authorities of which one was subsequently released. As regards the remaining six the Customs House Authorities assert that they were seized in the public street outside the Customs House, whither the plaintiff's agent had caused them to be removed. The plaintiff's case is that they were still within the precincts of the Customs House, awaiting examination. When the packages were examined they were found to contain dutiable silk goods of considerable value. The packages were admittedly part of the "B" consignment, and the Customs House Authorities suggest that what the plaintiff's agent was doing was attempting to remove them without paying duty, under cover of the bill of entry relating to the "B" consignment, the contents of which were either not dutiable at all, or only dutiable to a trifling extent.

Subsequently the plaintiff received a notice to show cause why the goods in the packages which had been seized should not be confiscated and a penalty imposed on him under s. 167 (37) (c) and (38), Sea Customs Act, 1818. An enquiry followed, and on July 11, 1935 the second defendant in his capacity as Collector of Customs passed an order for confiscation of the goods under s. 167 (37) of the Act subject to a redemption penalty of Rs. 3,500, and imposed a penalty of Rs. 4,000 under s. 167 (38). Section 167 creates certain offences against the Act, and provides maximum punishments for committing them. Under item No. (37) (c) of the Schedule, if it be found, when any goods are entered at, or brought to be passed through, a Customs House, either for importation or exportation, that the contents of such packages have been misstated in regard to sort, quality, quantity, or value, such packages together with the whole of the goods contained therein shall be liable to confiscation. Under item No. 38, if when any goods are passed by tale or by package, any omission or misdescription thereof tending to injure the revenue be discovered, the person guilty of such omission or misdescription shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten times the amount of the duty which might have been lost. It is not disputed that the order was one which under s. 182 of the Act the Collector of Customs had power to make. That section is a part of Chap. XVII of the Act, which is headed "Procedure relating to offences, appeals etc." Section 188, which is part of the same Chapter, gives a right of appeal to the Chief Customs Authority to any person deeming himself aggrieved by any decision or order passed by an Officer of Customs under the Act. The plaintiff appealed under this section to the Central Board of Revenue, but on October 2, 1935 the Board dismissed the appeal.

With regard to these orders the plaintiff states that they were altogether void, invalid, illegal and inoperative, and not binding on him. No offence under s. 167 (37) or (38), Sea Customs Act, had been committed. Alternatively no offence under such sections or either of them had been committed by the plaintiff. Prior to the passing of the Collector's order the plaintiff had not been charged with any offence under either of such sections, nor had he been called upon to meet or answer any such charges. Further there was no, or alternatively no proper, adjudication arrived at in manner provided by the Sea Customs Act; and the proceedings were not conducted in accordance with the principles of natural justice. Under s. 191 of the Act the Governor-General in Council may, on the application of any person aggrieved by any decision or order passed under the Act by an Officer of Customs or Chief Customs Authority, and from which no appeal lies, revise or modify such decision or order. The plaintiff petitioned the Governor-General in Council under this section, and on March 2, 1936 the Governor-General in Council modified the Collector's decision by setting aside the penalty, although he upheld the order for confiscation. The Governor-General's order stated that he was satisfied that the goods were removed from the Customs House with the intention of defrauding the revenue. He was of opinion however that the facts did not fall under item No. 37 or 38 of s. 167, and that the imposition of a penalty under Item No. 38 was therefore not justified. In upholding the order for confiscation he stated that it should have been passed under s. 167 (36), which provided that if after any goods have been landed, and before they have been passed through the Customs House, the owner removes them or attempts to remove them, with the intention of defrauding the revenue, such goods shall be liable to confiscation.

The plaintiff challenges the legality of this order, and he states that no offence under s. 167 (36) had been committed, that he had never been charged under s. 167 (36), nor had he been called upon to meet or answer any such charge. Further there was no, or alternatively no proper, adjudication arrived at in the manner provided by the Sea Customs Act, and the proceedings were contrary to the principles of natural justice. A declaration that the orders for confiscation were illegal is asked for, and there are also prayers for return of the goods, or for a decree for their value. The issues which I have now to try are raised by paras. 4 and 10 of the written statement of the Secretary of State:

"Paragraph 4.—The decision of the Chief Customs Authority as modified by the Governor-General in Council is final and binding upon the plaintiff and is not liable to be challenged or impugned by any suit or proceedings.

"Paragraph 10.—This Court has not and cannot exercise any original jurisdiction in respect of the subject-matter of the suit inasmuch as the same concerns the revenue or the collection thereof."

I will first deal with the issue raised by para. 10. The history of the law on this point begins with the practical difficulties occasioned by the fact that the Supreme Court claimed to exercise jurisdiction in respect of acts done by the servants of the East India Company in collecting the revenues of Bengal, to which the Company was entitled by virtue of the grant of the "Diwani." As its Preamble indicates 21 Geo. III Cap. 70 was passed by Parliament for the purpose of preventing the interference of the Supreme Court in revenue matters, s. 8 of that Statute provides that the Court shall not have or exercise any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act or acts ordered or done in the collection thereof, according to the usage and practice of the country, or the Regulations of the Governor-General-in-Council. Parliament has since seen fit to impose similar limitations upon the jurisdiction of the Original Side of the High Courts.

It is true that there was no such provision in the High Courts Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104, nor in the Letters Patent issued under it. Indeed, it appears from para. 17 of the Secretary of State's despatch of May 14, 1862, that he considered that the restrictions on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court enacted by 21 Geo. III, Cap. 70, did not apply to the High Courts established by Letters Patent under the Act of 1861. Moreover, in 1876 in Collector of Sea Customs v. Chithambaram (1) a majority of the Court held that a similar restriction contained in the Charter of 1800 establishing the Supreme Court of Madras did not operate to exclude suits against Revenue Officers for acts done ultra vires, from the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court. This question is, however, academic in view of s. 106 (2), Govt. of India Act, 1915, and s. 226 (1), Govt. of India Act, 1935. These sub-sections run as follows:

"106 (2). The High Courts have not and may not exercise any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force.

226 (1). Until otherwise provided by Act of the appropriate Legislature, no High Court shall have any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force."

It is admitted that for the purposes of the present case the sub-sections may be regarded as identical. As the Advocate-General points out, there is direct authority on the matter in Madras: see Govindarajulu Naidu v. Secretary of State (2). In that case certain goods belonging to the plaintiff were seized by the Customs Authorities, and the Collector of Customs ordered confiscation and sale of the goods on the ground that they had been smuggled into British India and had not paid duty. After an unsuccessful appeal to the Governor in Council the plaintiff sued the Secretary of State on the ground that what was done amounted to a wrongful conversion of the goods. Though the orders complained of were not made under the Sea Customs Act the principles were the same as those applicable in the present case. Courts-Trotter, C. J., and Beasley, J., both held that s. 106 (2), Govt. of India Act, 1915, was a bar to the suit on the Original Side of the Madras High Court. Courts-Trotter C. J., said:

"Finally the point is taken on behalf of the Secretary of State that this is a matter affecting the revenue and that s. 106 (2), Govt. of India Act, covers the matter. On that subject, I have nothing to add to what I said in my own considered judgment which is reported in Best and Co. Ltd. v. Collector of Madras (3) where I had to consider all the decisions affecting this matter and came to the conclusion that, however antiquated the section is and however useless to present conditions, so long as it was allowed to stand in the statute book it must be given effect to and the effect is this, that in matters affecting the revenue the Original Side of this Court and that side alone is debarred from interfering in revenue matters. The section came to birth, nearly hundred years ago, when there was a conflict of jurisdiction between the Sudder Courts and the High Courts. That conflict has utterly vanished and there is no justification whatever for preserving this antiquated fossil on the statute book; but there it is, and so long as it is there we have to abide by it. I am quite clear that this is a matter affecting the collection of revenue though it be in the nature of a penalty and that therefore this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on that ground."

Beasley, J.'s view was as follows:

"It is contended by the defendant that this is a matter concerning the revenue or concerning an act done in the collection thereof and it is not out of place in this connection to mention what is done with goods seized and confiscated. They are sold and the proceeds go to the Customs. Part of the revenue of the country is derived from the Customs and the collection of the Customs is a collection of part of the revenue of the country and I am prepared to hold that the sale of seized and confiscated goods and the taking by the Customs Authorities of those proceeds is the collection of Customs and therefore of revenue. It is admitted by Mr. Narasimha Ayyar that penalties in the shape of double or treble imposed on smuggled goods would be revenue. Yet he contends that the money derived from the sale of seized or confiscated goods is not. I cannot myself see any distinction whatever. I may conjecture that one of the objects of the sale is to recoup the customs for the unpaid duty which, had it been paid, would have been revenue. But there is another obvious reason for this penalty and it is this: persons who bring dutiable goods into the country are required to declare their possession of them and to pay the proper duty which is then collected from them and becomes part of the revenue of the country. That is clearly the collection of revenue. If, however, persons smuggle dutiable goods into the country they prevent the collection of the duties and so the revenue. The object of the seizure and confiscation is two-fold, to punish the offender and to deter others from preventing or hindering the collection of revenue; and it seems to me impossible to hold that the seizure and confiscation of smuggled goods is not an act ordered or done in the collection of revenue, as it is obviously designed to facilitate the collection of Customs and therefore the revenue.

The decision in Aicock, Ashdown and Company, Ltd. v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay (4), has in my opinion no application to this case. That case dealt with a mandamus to the Income-tax Officer to make an assessment and was a matter which was merely a preliminary towards the assessment of the assessee. The acts complained of in this case were not in any sense preliminary but in my view directly related to the collection of Custom. I may add that the question as to whether or not s. 106 (2), Govt. of India Act, does prohibit the exercise by this Court of its original jurisdiction in revenue matters has been decided by the learned Chief Justice in Best & Co. Ltd. v. Collector of Madras (3) and he there decided that the section was an express prohibition against the exercise of such powers. I need not say more than that I entirely agree with his judgment and with the reasons he gave therein."

Mr. Mukherjee, who has argued the plaintiff's case with great ability, has drawn my attention to two decisions of the Privy Council, Ford Motor Co. of India Ltd. v. Secretary of State (5) and Vacuum Oil Co. v. Secretary of State (6). Both suits were instituted on the Original Side of the High Court of Bombay, and in both of them the plaintiffs sued to recover duty said to be overpaid. In Vacuum Oil Co. v. Secretary of State (6) the trial Judge made a decree in the plaintiff's favour which was reversed on appeal. The Judicial Committee however set aside the decree of the Appellate Court dismissing the suit, and restored the decree passed by the trial Judge. In Ford Motor Co. of India Ltd. v. Secretary of State (5) the Judicial Committee upheld the decree of the Appellate Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit. Both cases turned on the construction of s. 30, Sea Customs Act. Mr. Mukherjee argues very pertinently that it was never suggested that either suit was incompetent, and that from the fact that in one of them the decree obtained by the plaintiff was restored, it follows that the Judicial Committee must have considered that the Original Side of the Bombay High Court had jurisdiction to try it. The Advocate-General had not attempted to argue that these two suits were not "matters concerning the revenue," but he says that as the point was not raised, Govt. must be taken in each case to have deliberately waived it with a view to obtaining an authoritative and final decision on the question of construction. In the report of the Ford Motor Company's case in Ford Motor Co. of India Ltd. v. Secretary of State (5) it is stated at p. 258 that it was agreed that the defendant would waive "certain technicalities" with a view to a speedy decision of the case. Whether one of them was the question of jurisdiction I have no means of saying. It must be borne in mind however that cases are only authorities for what is actually decided, and not for propositions which appear to follow logically therefrom. I feel I cannot from the fact that the Privy Council restored a decree made on the Original Side of High Court of Bombay draw an inference that it thereby decided that the suit was competent, when the question of jurisdiction was not in issue.

Mr. Mukherjee next submits that this is not a matter concerning the revenue but rather concerning an act ordered or done in the collection thereof, a submission which I am disposed to accept. He then argues that the jurisdiction of the Court is only ousted if such an act be ordered or done according to the usage and practice of the country on the land for the time being in force. Therefore he says that the Court must examine the circumstances to see if the action of the authorities was lawful, because, if it was not lawful the section does not protect it. A similar argument was unsuccessfully urged in Best & Co. Ltd. v. Collector of Madras (3), a case in which the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that an agreement made between the parties with reference to the liability of the plaintiffs for income-tax was binding on the defendant. The defendant repudiated the agreement because he took the view that in consequence of subsequent legislation it was no longer effective. Coutts-Trotter, J., held that s. 106 (2), Govt. of India Act, 1915, was a bar to the suit. In dealing with the argument now advanced the Court observed at p. 26*:

"Mr. Grant took the further point that the fetter in my jurisdiction was only with regard to 'acts ordered or done in the collection of the revenue according to usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force,' and he says, 'If you go into the facts, on the merits you will find that my contention is well founded, that this was an illegal repudiation of the agreement.' That contention, I think, was disposed of as long ago as 1848 in a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Spooner v. Juddow (7). In that case the Court put a construction on a protective statute of this kind which, so far as I know, has never been departed from, and it is put in much clearer words than I can put it, by Lord Campbell in giving their Lordships' opinion at p. 379† of the report. What he says is this, 'The point therefore is whether the exception of jurisdiction only arises where the defendants have acted contrary, and the Regulations of the Governor and Council. But upon this supposition the proviso is wholly nugatory: for if the Supreme Court is to enquire whether the defendants in this matter concerning the public revenue were right in the demand made, and to decide in their favour only if they acted in entire conformity to the Regulations of the Governor and Council of Bombay, they would equally be entitled to succeed, if the statute and the charters contained no exception or proviso for their protection. Our books actually swarm with decisions putting a contrary construction upon such enactments, and there can be no rule more firmly established, than that if parties bona fide and not absurdly believe that they are acting in pursuance of statutes, and according to law, they are entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act.' It is not suggested in this case that the Collector of Madras or the Secretary of State acted mala fide or purported to seek the protection of the statute with the full knowledge that all that was being done was to commit a mere act of aggression. Whether they were right or wrong, they thought clearly and honestly that they were taking advantage of the provisions which the statute allowed them to take advantage of, in terminating this agreement. I am therefore compelled to hold that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit."

I think similar observations are applicable to the case before me. None of the very vague statements in the plaint amounts to an averment that the Collector of Customs directed the confiscation of the goods mala fide, or in the exercise of powers conferred on him by Sea Customs Act in the circumstances to which he knew the provisions of the Act were not applicable. In my opinion, no irregularity of procedure, and no error in the conclusions arrived at can per se exclude the application of the Govt. of India Act. I accordingly accept the reasoning in the Madras decisions to which I have referred, and I hold that this is a suit which the Original Side of this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain.

The issue raised by para. 4 of the written statement must also, in my opinion, be decided in the defendants' favour. It is a well-known principle that where a statute creates a duty or imposes a liability, and prescribes a specific remedy in case of neglect to perform the duty or discharge the liability, no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. Lord Esher observed in The Queen v. Essex County Court Judge (8) at p. 707, "where the Legislature has passed a new statute giving a new remedy that remedy is the only one which can be pursued." In my view the Legislature intended that the sole remedy open to those who were aggrieved by a decision or order passed by an Officer of Customs under the Sea Customs Act should be the appeal to the Chief Customs Authority provided by s. 188. The matter is, I think, placed beyond doubt by the concluding words of the section—"Every order passed in appeal under this section shall subject to the power of revision conferred by s. 191 be final." I have been referred to a decision of Gentile, J. of the Madras High Court reported in one of the unauthorized series of reports, in which he takes this view of the effect of s. 188, and I find myself in entire agreement with him. It would be contrary to all principle to permit the plaintiff after unsuccessfully agitating his grievances before the statutory appellate authority then to seek the assistance of the Court. I have had before me an admitted brief of the documents in the case. A perusal of it produces a conviction in my mind that at every stage the representations of the plaintiff received careful consideration, and that the conclusions of the Collector and of the Central Board of Revenue were arrived at in good faith. What is however more important is that learned Counsel for the plaintiff was constrained to admit that, although he was prepared to criticize the conduct of the proceedings before the Collector, he could not point to anything improper or unjudicial in the manner in which the Board exercised the jurisdiction conferred on it by s. 188.

The order passed by the Governor-General in Council under s. 191 of the Act can be briefly dealt with. I incline to the view that orders made under this section can, in no case, be questioned in the Civil Courts, except possibly orders which while purporting to be made under it are clearly outside it. An order by the Governor-General in Council enhancing penalty would in my opinion, possibly be such an order. Generally speaking however what the section contemplates are revisional orders of an executive character. It should be pointed out that the order of confiscation is the order of the Collector and not the order of the Governor-General in Council. It is true that in upholding it the revising authority expressed the opinion that it should have been made under s. 167 (36) and not under s. 167 (37). This observation has enabled the plaintiff to argue that his goods have been confiscated in respect of an offence with which he was never charged. Although it is true that the original notice to show cause only referred to s. 167 (37) and s. 167 (36), an examination of the record of the proceedings shows that his grievance in this respect is illusory. On October 11, 1935 a lengthy memorial was submitted to the Finance Department of the Govt. of India on the plaintiff's behalf in support of his application under s. 191. The first fifteen paragraphs of the memorial dealt with the facts.

Two paragraphs follow which contain submissions as to the law applicable if the revising authority is in agreement with the Board of Revenue on the facts. These submissions are to the effect that the offence shown, if the facts are held to be established, is one under s. 167 (36). To quote the memorial "Further if s. 167 (36) does not fit the case under enquiry like a glove, what case will fit it?" It is ridiculous for the plaintiff to complain that the Governor-General in Council accepted his submission of law and accordingly set aside the penalty imposed by the Collector. I hold that this suit must be dismissed with costs, because the Court lacks jurisdiction to entertain it for the reasons set out in paras. 4 and 10 of the written statement of the Secretary of State.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 9 (5) as amended by Act XI of 1939—Creditor wanting to recover proportion of debt due to him by joint debtor who had not applied under the Act—Procedure.

Under the amended U. P. Encum. Estates Act, the creditor wanting to recover the proportion of the debt due to him by the debtor who had not applied under the provisions of the Encum. Estates Act, must wait until the amount due by the joint debtor who had not made an application under the Encum. Estates Act has been determined by the Special Judge. Thereafter he may apply to the Civil Court for a decree for that amount against the debtor. He cannot institute a separate suit for that.

F. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Mirzapur, dated August 25, 1937.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Iqbal Ahmad and Bajpai, JJ.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 22,645 odd on the basis of a sarkhat dated June 17, 1934, executed by three brothers named Pandit Sri Sadaitan Pande, Srish Chandra Pande and Sri Kar Pande in favour of the plaintiff firm Thakuri Sao and Purshottam Das. The plaintiffs firm carried on business in Sarguja in the Central Provinces and the three brothers named above carried on the business of commission agents in the district of Mirzapur. It is common ground that there were dealings between the parties and it is alleged by the plaintiff that on the settlement of accounts on June 17, 1934, a sum of Rs. 67,936 was found due to the plaintiff firm from the three brothers and that with respect to this amount a sarkhat was executed in favour of the plaintiff firm. The suit giving rise to the present appeal was directed only against Sri Sadaitan Pande and was for the recovery of one-third of the amount alleged to be due on the basis of the sarkhat. The other two brothers, viz. Srish Chandra Pande and Sri Kar Pande, were impleaded as pro forma defendants in the suit. The Court below holding that the suit was barred by s. 7 (1) (b) of the Encum. Estates Act (IV of 1935) dismissed the suit.

There is no controversy about the facts which are briefly as follows: On or before July 23, 1936 separation was effected between the three brothers named above by means of an award. Thereafter on September 30, 1936, Sri Chandra Pande and Sri Kar Pande filed an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act, and the Collector, in pursuance of the provisions of s. 6 of the Act, transmitted the application to the Special Judge. In their application the applicants admitted their liability to the plaintiff firm to the extent of two-thirds of the amount due to the plaintiff firm. The plaintiff firm then filed a written statement on April 15, 1937 before the Special Judge in accordance with the provisions of s. 10 of the Act and prayed that Sri Sadaitan Pande be made a party in the case. It however appears that prior to the date on which the written statement was filed by the plaintiff Sri Sadaitan Pande had already been made a party to the case. During the pendency of the case under the Encum. Estates Act the suit giving rise to the present appeal was filed on May 17, 1937. Sri Sadaitan Pande contended that the suit was barred by s. 7 (b) of the Act, and this contention was accepted by the learned Civil Judge.

In appeal before us it is contended that the decision of the Court below is erroneous and that s. 7 (b) of the Act has no application to the case and in support of this contention reliance has been placed on the decision of a learned Judge of this Court in Swadeshi Bima Co. Ltd. v. Shiv Narain (1). This decision finds support from certain observations contained in the judgment of this Court in Civil Revision No. 470 of 1936 decided on November 24, 1937, by Harries and Rachhpal Singh JJ. On behalf of the respondent reliance has been placed on the decision of Thom and Rachhpal Singh JJ., in Inamullah v. Babu Ram (2) and the decision of Sulaiman, O. J. and Harries, J., in Babu Ram v. Manohar Lal (3) and on the decision of Bennet and Varma, JJ., in Souti Raghubar Doyal v. Amba Prasad (4). The cases relied upon by the parties are not easily reconcilable and the question that arises for decision in the present appeal is one of general importance. Accordingly we consider that it is desirable that there should be an authoritative pronouncement on the question. We, therefore, direct that the case be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice with the request for the constitution of a Full Bench.

Thom, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff claims a decree against the defendant for the sum of Rs. 22,645-9-6. The defendant along with his two brothers executed a sarkhat on June 17, 1934. The amount sued for represents one-third of what is due under the sarkhat. The three brothers who executed the sarkhat separated on July 23, 1936. Thereafter the defendant's two brothers filed an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act. An order was passed thereon by the Collector under s. 6 of the Act. The application was transmitted to the Special Judge for disposal. In the application which they filed under the Act the defendant's brothers admitted liability to the extent of two-thirds of the amount due under the sarkhat. In the proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act, the plaintiff in the present suit filed a written statement on April 15, 1937. He pleaded that the defendant in the present suit be made a party to these proceedings. It appears however that the defendant had already been made a party. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Civil Judge. The learned Judge held that the suit did not lie, an application having been made by two out of the three joint debtors under the provisions of the Encum. Estates Act.

It was contended in appeal that the provisions of the Act did not bar the suit. It was urged that the plaintiff was entitled to recover what was admittedly due from the joint debtor who had not applied under the Act. It was argued for the respondents on the other hand that sub-s. (b) of s. 7 of the Act clearly barred the suit. Sub-s. (b) enjoins that "no fresh suit or other proceedings other than an appeal or revision against a decree or order, or a process for ejectment for arrears of rent shall, except as hereinafter provided, be instituted in any Civil or Revenue Court in the United Provinces in respect of any debts incurred before the passing of the said order."

This provision is undoubtedly very wide in its terms and it would appear from s. 9, sub-s. (5) (b) that the remedy of the creditor against the non-applying debtor was by way of execution of a decree passed by the Special Judge. Section 9, sub-s. (5) (b) is as follows:

"If all the joint debtors have not applied under s. 4 the creditor shall have a right to recover from the debtors who have not applied only such amount on account of the joint debt as may be decreed by the Special Judge to be due by them."

The question as to whether under the Act before amendment the creditor was entitled by a separate suit to recover what was due by a joint debtor who had not preferred an application under the act is one which is not free from difficulty. We are however absolved from deciding the question in view of the amendment to the Act, and in view of the procedure which we think it is appropriate to follow in disposing of this appeal. The Encum. Estates Act of 1935 has been amended by Act XI of 1939. In particular s. 9, sub-s. (5) (b) has been amended and for the word "decreed" in that sub-section the word "determined" has been substituted. Section 11 of the 1939 Act enjoins

"(c) where no suit has been instituted or where no application for execution of a joint decree has been made in any other Court in respect of such joint debt or joint decree the creditor may on application to any Court having jurisdiction to entertain such suit, or execute such decree; obtain a decree or get the decree executed against non-applicant joint-debtors, for the amount so determined, subject to the payment of the court-fee payable on such execution application, or on a plaint in a suit for the amount determined by the Special Judge."

Under the amended Act, therefore, the creditor must wait until the amount due by the joint debtor who had not made an application under the Encum. Estates Act has been determined by the Special Judge. Thereafter he may apply to the Civil Court for a decree for that amount against the debtor.

When the suit out of which this appeal arises was filed, the law as to the procedure to be adopted by the creditor to recover the proportion of the debt due to him by the debtor who had not applied under the provisions of the Encum. Estates Act was somewhat in doubt. The procedure to be followed is now made plain by the amendment above referred to. In these circumstances we are of the opinion that the appropriate course would be for this Court to allow the appeal and direct the record to be sent to the Court below. That Court will then treat the suit as an application under s. 11 of Act XI of 1939 and dispose of it according to law after the amount due by the defendant has been determined by the Special Judge. In the result, the appeal is allowed and the order of the learned Civil Judge is set aside. The record will be returned to the Court of the learned Civil Judge with the direction that the plaint be treated as an application under s. 11 of Act XI of 1939. This application will be disposed of according to law after the amount due by the defendant has been determined by the Civil Judge in the proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act. In all the circumstances we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this appeal. Costs in the Court below will abide the result.

Order XXII, r. 12 of the Civil P. C., does not exempt pending appeals from the operation of r. 8 of that Order, even though the appeals arise out of execution proceedings. An appeal stands on quite a different footing, in this respect, from an application for execution. Rule 12 does not contemplate that if an appeal has been preferred from an order in execution then also rr. 3, 4 and 8 would never apply. 122 Ind. Cas. 148 (1), not followed. 144 Ind. C. Misc. App. and (Execution of Decree Appeal No. 39 of 1938).

Mr. Hargovind Dayal, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This application for substitution arises in an execution of decree appeal. It came up for hearing before a learned Judge of this Court who has, under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act, referred it to a Bench for decision, as in the opinion of the learned Judge there was a divergence of opinion in different High Courts and that there was no decision of this Court in respect of the point involved in the application.

It is now admitted by the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant that Mahadeo Prasad, respondent No. 1 died on January 14, 1939, and this application for substitution was presented on July 12, 1939, that is beyond ninety days, but on the first day on which this Court re-opened after the long vacation.

The application was made under O. XXII, r. 4 for substitution of the names of the two sons of Mahadeo Prasad deceased, and it was urged that he had died on May 28, 1939. The application was opposed by the respondents Nos. 2 to 4 on the ground that Mahadeo Prasad had died on January 14, 1939, and the application therefore was barred by time. The parties were given an opportunity to prove the date of the death of Mahadeo Prasad. The appellant then put in an application admitting the date of the death of Mahadeo Prasad to be January 14, 1939, and prayed that the former application of July 12, 1939, be treated as an application under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil P. O., for setting aside the abatement.

In this application the sufficient cause shown for setting aside the order of abatement is that the deceased lived 34 miles away in a village. The applicant is a lawyer practising at Gonda. The contention on behalf of the applicant is that an appeal or an order arising out of an order in the course of proceedings in execution of the decree does not abate on the death of the respondent in cases where an appellant fails to apply to make the legal representative of the deceased respondent a party to the appeal within the time prescribed by law because the appeals in proceedings relating to execution of a decree are mere continuation of execution proceedings and therefore r. 12 of O. XXII is applicable to such appeals. In support of this contention the learned Counsel has relied on a Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court reported in I. L. R. 9 Patna 372 (Hakim Syed Mohammad Taki v. Rai Fateh Bahadur Singh) (1). It is true that the above decision supports the contention of the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant, but this view was not followed by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Chhanga Mal v. Ram Dularay Lal, reported in I. L. R. 55 Allahabad, 509 (2), in which it was held that O. XXII, r. 12 of the Civil P. O., does not exempt pending appeals from the operation of r. 8 of that order even though the appeals arise out of execution proceedings. An appeal stands on quite a different footing, in this respect, from an application for execution. Rule 12 does not contemplate that if an appeal has been preferred from an order in execution then also rr. 3, 4 and 8 would never apply.

The case reported in I. L. R. 9 Patna 372, (Hakim Syed Mohammad Taki v. Rai Fateh Bahadur Singh) (1), was referred to before the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court but they preferred to follow the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Sundayee Ammal v. Krishnan Chetti I. L. R. 51 Madras 858 (3).

In the Lahore High Court in the case of Mir Khan v. Sharfu reported in 74 Ind. Cas. 577 (4), a learned Judge held the opinion that rr. 3 and 4 of O. XXII of the Civil P. O., had no application to appeals arising out of execution proceedings by virtue of the provisions of r. 12 of that Order.

There is a Bench decision of this Court which was not brought to the notice of the learned Judge of this Court who has made this reference. It is reported in 11 O. W. N. 917 (Hari Saran Das Mahant v. Har Kishan Das) (5), in which it was held that "if during the pendency of an appeal by the judgment-debtor arising out of execution of a decree for mesne profits and cash, the decree-holder respondent who happens to be a tenant for life dies, an application by the appellant-judgment-debtor, who happens to be the remainderman, stating that the rights of the deceased in the decree had come to vest in him and that another person who claimed to be a legal representative of the deceased was not such representative, is maintainable. The provisions of O. XXII, r. 5, Civil P. O., impose an obligation on the Court to determine whether the applicant or the opposite party is the legal representative of the deceased and the proceedings in appeal from any decree or order in proceedings in execution are not proceedings in execution so as to exclude application of r. 4 by r. 12 of O. XXII, Civil P. O., they being proceedings in appeal and r. 11 making the whole of O. XXII, applicable to appeals."

This view is in accordance with the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Chhanga Mal v. Ram Dularey Lal, I. L. R. 55 Allahabad 509 (2).

We are of opinion, that the law laid down in 11 O. W. N. 917 Hari Saran Das Mahant v. Har Kishan Das (5), is correct and therefore hold that O. XXII, r. 12 of the Civil P. O., does not exempt pending appeals from the operation of r. 8 of that Order, though the appeals arise out of execution proceedings. In our opinion, an appeal stands on a different footing, in this respect, from an application for execution. R. 12 does not contemplate that if an appeal has been preferred from an order in execution then also rr. 3, 4 and 8 would never apply.

The next point urged on behalf of the applicant is that as the applicant lived about 34 miles away from the village in which Mahadeo Prasad deceased lived, he could not come to know of his death and the delay was due to his ignorance of the death of Mahadeo Prasad. This in the opinion of the learned Counsel was the sufficient cause for not applying to bring the legal representatives of the deceased on record within the prescribed period of limitation.

On behalf of the opposite party it is urged that the applicant is a permanent resident of village Achalpur and the deceased was also a resident of the same village as the mortgage deed dated June 30, 1922, would show in which the residence is given as Achalpur. The residence of the deceased in the plaint is different. Whether the deceased was a resident of village Achalpur or not, we do not attach much importance, because, in our opinion, mere ignorance of the death of a respondent is not a sufficient cause within the meaning of O. XXII, r. 9.

In the case of Bhagwan Din v. Muru reported in 1940 O. W. N. 219 (6), it was held that "the procedure provided for the disposal of suits and appeals demands an active prosecution and great vigilance on the part of the parties to a litigation and the appellant in the prosecution of his appeal is under an obligation to keep himself informed as to the existence of his opponent. Mere plea of ignorance of the death of the opposite party is not a sufficient ground for setting aside an order that an appeal should abate."

The applicant has failed to satisfy us that there was sufficient cause for not filing the application within the period of limitation.

We therefore reject the application with costs, and refuse to set aside the abatement.

(6) 1940 O W N 219

It is conceded by the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant that the whole appeal has abated. We therefore dismiss the appeal. No order as to costs.

Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act (II of 1920), s. 6—Possession of insolvent's property taken by Official Receiver—Suit by insolvent's son for declaration that property belonged to him under will of his grandfather—S. 6, if applies—Official Receiver, whether can resist suit on ground that will was not valid.

A person who was disinherited by his father was adjudged insolvent and the Official Receiver took possession of the property in dispute as belonging to the insolvent. The plaintiffs preferred an objection in the Insolvency Court on the ground that the property in dispute had been bequeathed to them by insolvent's father who was their grandfather. This objection was dismissed by the Insolvency Court. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted a declaratory suit to the effect that the property in dispute was owned and possessed by them, that it did not belong to insolvent, and that it was not liable to attachment and sale in the insolvency proceedings against him. The creditors of the insolvent were also made defendants in the case. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the will relied upon by the plaintiffs was never executed by the insolvent's father, that the property in dispute was ancestral, and that deceased was not entitled to will it away in favour of the plaintiffs according to custom:

Held, that s. 6, Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act had no applicability to the facts of the case as the Official Receiver had not instituted any suit to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property made by the insolvent's father. The Official Receiver as the representative of the insolvent was fully entitled to resist the suit of the plaintiffs on the ground that the will made by the deceased in their favour was not valid.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge Hoshiarpur, dated May 12, 1938.

Mr. D. N. Aggarwal, for the appellants.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Respondents (Plaintiffs).

Abdul Rashid, J.—Badar Bakhsh had three sons, namely Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din, Ahmad Ali and Aziz Din. Aziz Din's son Safdar Ali and his wife Mst. Rahmi are the plaintiffs in the suit which has given rise to the present appeal. On June 29, 1934 Badar Bakhsh made an unregistered will whereby he bequeathed one-third of his property to Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din, one-third to Ahmad Ali and one-third to Safdar Ali and Mst. Rahmi. He disinherited his son Aziz Din. On March 7, 1935 Badar Bakhsh died. Aziz Din (defendant No. 1) was adjudged insolvent and the Official Receiver, Lala Rattan (defendant No. 18) took possession of the property in dispute as belonging to the insolvent. The plaintiffs preferred an objection in the Insolvency Court on the ground that the property in dispute had been bequeathed to them by Badar Bakhsh. This objection was dismissed by the Insolvency Court on August 12, 1936. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted the present declaratory suit to the effect that the property in dispute was owned and possessed by them, that it did not belong to Aziz Din, insolvent, and that it was not liable to attachment and sale in the insolvency proceedings against him. The creditors of Aziz Din were also made defendants in the case. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the will relied upon by the plaintiffs was never executed by Badar Bakhsh, that the property in dispute was ancestral, and that Badar Bakhsh deceased was not entitled to will it away in favour of the plaintiffs according to custom. The following issues were framed by the trial Court:

"(1) Whether Badar Bakhsh was competent to bequeath the property in dispute, in favour of the plaintiffs by means of the will in dispute according to custom? (2) Whether Badar Bakhsh validly made the will in dispute in favour of the plaintiffs? (3) Whether the Official Receiver or the creditors of defendant No. 1 has or have a locus standi to challenge the validity of the will in dispute on the ground of its being against the rules of custom? (4) Relief."

The trial Court held that Badar Bakhsh deceased had no authority to make the will in favour of the plaintiffs under the Customary Law, that the will in dispute had not been proved to have been executed by Badar Bakhsh, and that the Official Receiver had a locus standi to challenge the validity of the will. On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge. The learned Judge held that Badar Bakhsh being a Rajput of the Hoshiarpur District had no power to alienate his property by means of a will. It was also held that under s. 6, Punjab Act II of 1920, the power to contest alienation by a will of ancestral immovable property is limited to a person, who is a descendant of the great grandfather of the testator in the male line, and that the Official Receiver and the creditors were not entitled to contest the will. The judgment of the Court of first instance was reversed by the learned District Judge who granted a decree to the plaintiffs with costs throughout. The creditors of Aziz Din have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

In my opinion, s. 6, Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act II of 1920, has no applicability to the facts of the present case. That Act was enacted in order to impose restrictions on the power of descendants or collaterals to contest an alienation of immovable property or the appointment of an heir on the ground that such alienation or appointment is contrary to custom.

The Official Receiver has not instituted any suit to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property made by Badar Bakhsh. On the other hand, the grandson and the daughter-in-law of Badar Bakhsh have come into Court relying on a certain will in their favour. They have made the Official Receiver a defendant in the case, and the main defence of the Official Receiver is that he stands in the same position as Aziz Din, insolvent, and is entitled to raise all the defences that were open to Aziz Din. Under s. 28 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent vested in the Receiver and became divisible among the creditors. Under sub-s. (4), all property which is acquired by or devolves on the insolvent after the date of an order of adjudication and before his discharge vests in the Official Receiver. In these circumstances, so far as the present suit is concerned, the Official Receiver represents the estate of Aziz Din. Under s. 59, Prov. Insol. Act, the Official Receiver is entitled to institute, defend or continue, any suit or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the insolvent for the purposes of realizing the property of the debtor and distributing it among the creditors entitled thereto. The Official Receiver is resisting the suit of the plaintiffs in order to realize the entire property of Aziz Din for the purposes of distributing it among the creditors. In the eye of the law the Receiver and the insolvent are one and the same person so far as the estate of the insolvent is concerned. It cannot be said that the Official Receiver is the representative of Aziz Din in every respect, but the Official Receiver can raise the same pleas in defending a suit that Aziz Din could have raised himself. No authority, directly in point, was quoted at the bar. It was held in Thakur Singh v. Uttam Kaur (1), that "a reversioner entitled to succeed to the property on the death of a widow, cannot during her lifetime transfer his right to succeed, so as to invest the transferee with a right to sue. Where however succession has opened out on the death of the widow and the quondam reversioner has become the real owner of the property, though he is still out of possession, there is no bar to his assigning the whole or a part of it to third parties, and consequently the plaintiff-assignees in this case were entitled to sue."

In my view the Official Receiver is the representative of Aziz Din for all purposes and he is fully entitled to resist the suit of the plaintiffs on the ground that the will made by Badar Bakhsh in their favour is not valid. For the reasons given above, I would accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the learned District Judge and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs. Having regard to all the circumstances I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 192—Case under s. 427, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), transferred to Third Class Magistrate—Trial by latter is without jurisdiction—Illegality held not curable by s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898).

The Court's jurisdiction must be determined on the allegations made in the complaint and on the complainant's statement in support of the complaint.

If the Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under s. 192, Criminal P. O., lacks jurisdiction to try the case the order of transfer is bad in law. A First Class Magistrate taking cognizance of a case under s. 427, I. P. O., cannot transfer it to a Third Class Magistrate. It may be that after a trial, it is found that the case has been materially exaggerated; but unless it has been found at the very outset that the allegations are exaggerated with the intention of seeking a particular Court for redress the statement of the complainant in a criminal case and the statement of the plaintiff in a civil case has to be accepted for the purpose of jurisdiction. Hence, the trial of the case by the Third Class Magistrate is illegal. The case is not covered by s. 537, Criminal P. O., as a question of jurisdiction is involved and a defect of jurisdiction is not curable by s. 537.

[Case-law relied on.]

Cr. R. App. of the order of the Sessions Judge of Unao, dated September 26, 1939.

Mr. B. K. Dharon, for the Applicant.

Order.—This is an application in revision against an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Unao dated September 26, 1939, rejecting the applicants' application for revision of the appellate order of a Magistrate.

One Kamta Teli filed a complaint under ss. 427, 447 and 323, I. P. O. and s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act against the present applicants. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom the complaint was made transferred it for trial to a Tahsildar Magistrate who had third class powers. The Tahsildar summoned the accused to answer charges under ss. 426, 447 and 323, I. P. O. and s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act. The accused were convicted under s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act only and while two of them were fined Rs. 10 each the other two were fined Rs. 2 each. The accused appealed but their appeal was dismissed. Thereupon the accused applied to the learned Sessions Judge in revision mainly on the ground that as the allegation in the complaint was that crops worth about Rs. 60 were damaged by the accused by means of their cattle, the case could not be tried by a Magistrate of the third class. The learned Judge however held that as the witness under s. 202, Criminal P. O., as well as the complainant and other witnesses during the trial stated that the damages amounted to Rs. 30 or Rs. 40 there was no defect of jurisdiction in the trial Court. On this ground he rejected the revision application. The applicants now come to this Court and raise the same ground again.

It cannot be doubted that an offence under s. 427 is, according to column 8 of the Second Schedule of the Criminal P. O., triable by a Magistrate of the first or the second class and not by a Magistrate of the third class. Under s. 192 of the Code a Magistrate of the first class empowered by the District Magistrate has power to transfer a case of which he has taken cognizance for inquiry or trial to another Magistrate in the district who is "competent to try the case or to commit him for trial." From this it is clear that if the Magistrate to whom a case is thus transferred lacks jurisdiction to try the case the order of transfer is bad in law. This view is fully supported by the cases of Raghu Singh v. Abdul Wahab, (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 442) (1) and Budhan Mahto v. Issur Singh, (I. L. R. 34 Cal. 926) (2). In the case of Raghunandan Prasad v. King-Emperor, (A. I. R. 1925, All. 290) (3) it was held that the jurisdiction of the Court to hear a case depends on the allegations with which its help is sought. Further on it is said:

"It may be that after a trial, it is found that the case has been materially exaggerated; but unless it has been found at the very outset that the allegations are exaggerated with the intention of seeking a particular Court for redress the statement of the complainant in a criminal case and the statement of the plaintiff in a civil case has to be accepted for the purpose of jurisdiction."

In the present case not only was the amount of damage fixed at Rs. 60 in the complaint but the plaintiff in his statement also said that he suffered a loss of about Rs. 60.

It was only when a witness was examined under s. 202, Criminal P. O., that the amount of loss was reduced to Rs. 40. The order of transfer was passed before this witness was examined and so the Court's jurisdiction must be determined on the allegations made in the complaint and on the complainant's statement in support of the complaint. This being so the order of transfer to the Court of the Tahsildar passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was, under s. 192, Criminal P. O., illegal and therefore the trial of the case by the Tahsildar was without jurisdiction. The case is not, in my opinion, covered by s. 537, Criminal P. O., as a question of jurisdiction is involved and a defect of jurisdiction is not curable by s. 537 (vide Khuda Bakhsh v. Emperor, (A. I. R. 1933 Lahore, 100) (4)).

I therefore accept this application and set aside the conviction and sentences of the applicants. As regards re-trial I am of opinion, that in view of the facts that the accused were acquitted under all the charges other than that of s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act and that the matter is a trivial one, it is not necessary that the accused should be re-tried.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 4 (3) (viii), 24 12, 66—Held on materials before High Court that assessee was not entitled to claim set off of losses either on racing establishment or on betting accounts. —Maintenance of racing stable, when amounts to business—Betting, when vocation—"Business," meaning of—Value of English decisions in interpreting words "business," "profession," "vocation" or "occupation"—Receipts from maintenance of racing stable or betting whether casual and recurring—Exemption from taxation—Onus—Question referred by Commissioner—High Court, if can reframe it—Accuracy or otherwise of inference from proved facts, is question of law—Statement accompanying reference under s. 66—"Income" as used in s. 4 (3), scope of—"Casual," in s. 4 (3) (vii), meaning of.

An assessee who was a money-lender also dealt in precious stones and maintained and ran horses in races. He betted in races on his horses. He kept account books in regular course of business and also maintained an account styled as the "racing account." In this latter account, the stakes money received from the race clubs and the amount won on his bets were entered on the credit side and the losses and expenses in the maintenance of the horses on the debit side. The stakes money represented the prize paid to the assessee as the owner of the horses which won the races. In the accounting year, according to the entries in the account book, the assessee suffered a loss of Rs. 7,458 in betting and Rs. 425 in running the horses at the races but made profit in money-lending business and in the purchase and sale of precious stones:

*Held, (per Bajpai and Braund, JJ.)—*That upon the material before the Court the assessee was not entitled to claim a set-off of losses either on the racing establishment or on the betting account.

(Per Iqbal Ahmad, J., contra.)—There was no material on which it could be held that the maintenance of the racing stable and the series of betting transactions by the assessee did not constitute his business. The assessee was entitled to have the loss of Rs. 425 and Rs. 7,458 deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The words "business," "profession" and "vocation" have been interpreted in some English decisions and though those decisions cannot furnish an infallible guide, they are of assistance in interpreting those words. Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marine Steam Turbine Co., Ltd. (7), referred to.

The word "business" has been used in the Act to denote the continuous and systematic exercise of an occupation or profession with the object of making income or profit, and where the element of continuity is wanting in a particular activity, that activity cannot be characterized as "business" within the meaning of the Act. "Profession" or "occupation" can amount to business only if it is continuously and systematically exercised. It follows that the words "profession" and "occupation" are words of wider import than the word "business."

Whether the maintenance of a racing stable does or does not in a particular case amount to "business" must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. It is impossible to lay it down as a general proposition of universal application that, in all cases where an element of sport or amusement is involved, a particular activity, howsoever systematically and continuously exercised, cannot amount to business. The question in each case must be what was the dominant intention. If the dominant intention was to get income or make profits or gains the activity of the description referred to above must amount to "business."

It cannot be said that betting, under no circumstances, can constitute vocation or occupation of a particular individual and, that the winnings from the same cannot amount to profits or gains chargeable to income-tax. Where the assessee has offered bets on numerous occasions such betting, in the case of the assessee, does certainly constitute his vocation or occupation. Graham v. Green (1), dissented from.

The receipt of stakes money by owners of racing stables is a matter of frequent occurrence and such receipts cannot, therefore, be characterized as of a non-recurring nature but casual and recurring.

Taxation under the Act is, the rule and exemption the exception. All income from whatever source derived must, therefore, be chargeable to income-tax, and the burden of proving that a particular class of income is not so chargeable must necessarily lie on the person claiming exemption from the liability to pay income-tax. 137 Ind. Cas. 557 (6), relied on.

In view of the limited jurisdiction given to the High Court by cl. (5) of s. 66, it is not permissible for the High Court to re-frame the questions referred by the Commissioner. 142 Ind. Cas. 437 (5), relied on.

The question of the accuracy or otherwise of an inference from proved facts is always a question of law and if the Commissioner has stated the proved facts and has asked the High Court to decide as to whether on those facts the conclusion arrived at by the Assistant Commissioner was correct in law, the question raised would undoubtedly be a question of law.

Only questions of law can be referred to the High Court for decision under s. 66, and the reference under that section must be accompanied by "a statement of the case" by the Commissioner. The "statement" must contain a full and exhaustive narration of the facts giving rise to the questions of law, so that the High Court may straightway proceed to apply the law to the set of facts stated and be relieved from the necessity of enquiring as to what the real facts are.

Per Braund, J.—The word "income" as used in the sub-s. (3) of s. 4 embraces every form of receipt of the kind which but for the exemption would, or might, have been embraced by the words "income, profits or gains" in s. 4 (1).

The word 'casual' in s. 4 (3) (vi) must be read as meaning the antithesis of that which is governed by something more than mere chance, something out of which, according to the probabilities of business or to the known course of practical experience, a rational expectation of profit arises. And that does not, apply to a mere bet.

Misc. Case from a reference submitted by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces as per his letter, dated September 30, 1936.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Iqbal Ahmad and Bajpal, JJ.—The questions that arise for decision in the present case, which is a reference by the Income Tax Commissioner under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, are of such general importance and are beset with such difficulties that we consider it desirable that they be decided by a Full Bench. Lala Inder Sen Raizada, the assessee, is a money-lender and deals in precious stones. He also owns some horses, keeps a stable and runs the horses in races. He also bets in races on his horses and other horses. An account styled as the "racing account" is maintained by the assessee in his account books. That account shows that in the "previous year," which was the accounting year, the assessee suffered a total loss of Rs. 8,064. Out of this amount, the loss incurred in betting was Rs. 7,454 and the loss in running horses at the races was Rs. 610. It may here be mentioned that out of this sum of Rs. 610, Rs. 185 were spent in purchasing a stop-watch, and it is agreed on all hands that this amount cannot be treated as a loss. The assessee claimed deduction of the amount of the loss incurred by him in the computation of his income for the purposes of assessment to income-tax. The claim of the assessee was however overruled by the Income-tax Officer and his decision was affirmed on appeal by the Assistant Commissioner. The Commissioner of Income-tax also agreed with the decision of the Assistant Commissioner.

The Income-tax authorities relying on the decision of Rowlatt, J., in Graham v. Green (1), held that the loss incurred in betting could not be taken into account in determining taxable income of the assessee. So far as the loss incurred by the assessee in maintaining the horses owned by him and running them in races was concerned, the Income-tax Officer held that the assessee indulged "in this hobby by way of pastime and it is not done in the nature of profession." He therefore held that the loss incurred by the assessee "or the income made in pursuance of this pastime do not attract the provisions of the Income Tax Act." On appeal the Assistant Commissioner did not differentiate between the loss incurred in betting and in maintaining the horses and held as a matter of law that "the efforts of the appellant in maintaining horses and betting on them and others howsoever systematically organized they may be" do not "constitute a business." The Income-tax Commissioner expressed the same view as the Assistant Commissioner. In the present reference it is maintained by the learned Counsel for the assessee that the maintenance of horses with a view to run them in races constituted "business" within the meaning of the Act and, as such, the loss incurred by the assessee in that connection should be set off against his income under any other head as provided for by s. 24, Income Tax Act. He also argues that the loss incurred in betting should on similar ground have been set off against the assessee's income, in view of the provisions of s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Act which provides that the Act shall not apply to.

It is argued that the income from betting was not of "a casual and non-recurring nature" and as such, the loss incurred in betting came within the purview of s. 24 of the Act. In the course of his argument, the learned Counsel placed reliance on a case reported in In the matter of Chunni Lal Kalyan Das (2), and on a case reported in: In the matter of Chunni Lal Kalyan Das (3). It was held in the former case that cl. (vii) of s. 4 (3), Income Tax Act, exempts only receipts of a casual and non-recurring nature, which are not receipts from business or the exercise of a profession or occupation by an assessee. The latter case is an authority for the proposition that the profits or losses arising from wagering contracts are to be taken into account in assessing income-tax. It is contended on the authority of these decisions that the loss incurred by the assessee in betting should have been taken into account.

The learned Advocate General on the other hand maintains that the receipts arising from betting are not receipts arising "from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation" as held by Rowlatt, J., in the decision quoted above. He also contends that such receipts are of a casual and non-recurring nature and therefore cannot be taken into account in making the assessment, and in support of this contention he places reliance on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (4), and contends that receipts from betting are not taxable income in accordance with the provisions of the Act. It has been brought to our notice that on the question of the loss incurred in the maintenance of horses the department has taken contradictory views. For the reasons stated at the inception of this judgment, we direct that the case be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice with the request for the constitution of a Full Bench.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Applicant.
Messrs. G. S. Pathak and C. B. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

OPINION

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The following questions have been referred to this Court for decision by the Commissioner of Income-tax under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act (XI of 1922):

"(1) Was there any material on which it could be found that (a) the maintenance of the racing stable, and (b) the series of betting transactions did not constitute "business" of the assessee?"

(2) If so, was the assessee in the face of such a finding entitled to have the loss either (a) of Rs. 425 in the racing account, or (b) Rs. 7,458 in the betting account, or both losses, deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute?"

I confess I have had considerable difficulty in dealing with the present reference and the difficulty, though partly due to the obscurity in which the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act are involved, is in a large measure attributable to the slipshod manner in which the matter under consideration has been investigated and dealt with by the Income-tax authorities, and in particular to the extremely unsatisfactory form in which the questions referred have been formulated by the Commissioner. It is obvious that only questions of law can be referred to this Court for decision under s. 66, and the reference under that section must be accompanied by "a statement of the case" by the Commissioner. The "statement" must contain a full and exhaustive narration of the facts giving rise to the questions of law, so that this Court may straightway proceed to apply the law to the set of facts stated and be relieved from the necessity of enquiring as to what the real facts are. In the present case, what the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner actually did was to decide the question of law without deciding the requisite questions of fact, and the statement of the case by the Commissioner is also conspicuous by an absence of a narration of such facts as would have greatly facilitated the answer to the questions stated above. Indeed the statement of the case by the Commissioner is so unsatisfactory that, at the inception of the hearing of the reference, I was tempted to refer the case back to the Commissioner under cl. (4) of s. 66 with the direction to re-state the case. But after hearing the arguments of both sides, I have come to the conclusion that, in all the circumstances, it is desirable to decide the questions of law that arise in the case, even though the available materials are scanty and it would have been more satisfactory if the facts were ascertained in greater detail. The dispute in the present case is with respect to the assessment year 1933-34 and it is about time that that dispute is set at rest. Further it was stated at the bar that the very questions of law that arise in the present case did arise in connection with the assessment of the income of the assessee in the subsequent years and the assessments for those years have not been finally made in view of the pendency of the present reference. I therefore proceed to answer the questions of law raised in the present reference.

The facts stated by the Commissioner are as follows: Raizada Inder Sen, the assessee, is a money-lender and deals in precious stones. He also owns three horses, maintains racing stable and runs the horses in races. He bets in races on his horses and other horses. The assessee keeps account books in the regular course of business and in those books an account styled as the "racing account" is maintained. In the racing account the stakes money received from the Race Clubs and the amounts won on his bets by the assessee are entered on the credit side and the losses in betting and the expenses incurred in the maintenance of horses and the racing stable are entered on the debit side. The stakes money represents the prize paid to the assessee as the owner of the horses which won the races. In the "accounting year," according to the entries in the account book, the assessee suffered a loss of Rs. 7,458 in betting and Rs. 425 in running the horses at the races, but made profit in money-losing business and in the purchase and sale of precious stones. During the assessment year 1933-34 the assessee claimed set-off with respect to the losses incurred by him in the maintenance of racing stable and on bets against the profits made by him in accordance with the provisions of s. 24 (1) of the Act which provides that:

"Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year under any of the heads mentioned in s. 6, he shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set-off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year."

The Income-tax Officer, relying on the decision of Rowlatt, J., in Graham v. Green (1) declined to allow set-off as regards the losses in betting and, in the course of his order quoted the following observations made by Rowlatt, J., in his judgment:

"Now we come to the other side, the man who bets with the book-maker, and that is this case. These are mere bets. Each time he puts on his money at whatever may be the starting price, I do not think he could be said to organize his effort in the same way as a book-maker organizes his. I do not think the subject-matter from his point of view is susceptible of it. In effect all his doing is just what a man does who is a skilful player at cards, who plays everyday. He plays to-day and he plays tomorrow and he plays the next day, and he is skilful on each of the three days, more skilful on the whole than the people with whom he plays and he wins. But I do not think that you can find, in his case, any conception arising in which his individual operations can be said to be merged in the way that particular operations are merged in the conception of a trade. I think all you can say of that man in the fair use of the English language, is that he is addicted to betting. It is extremely difficult to express, but it seems to me that people would say he is addicted to betting, and could not say that his vocation is betting. The subject is involved in great difficulty of language which I think presents great difficulty of thought. There is no tax on habit. I do not think 'habitual' or even 'systematic' fully describes what is essential in the phrase 'trade, adventure, profession or vocation.' All I can say is that in my judgment the income which this gentleman succeeded in making is not profits or gains."

The Income-tax Officer also declined to allow set-off as regards the loss incurred by the assessee in the maintenance of horses and running them in races on the ground that the loss did not arise in the course of a vocation or profession." In this connexion he remarked that:

"The assessee indulges in this hobby by way of pastime and it is not done in the nature of profession. The loss sustained by him or the income made in pursuance of this pastime do not attract the provisions of the Income Tax Act."

On appeal by the assessee the Assistant Commissioner upheld the order of the Income-tax Officer. The Assistant Commissioner did not differentiate between the loss incurred in betting and the loss in the maintenance of the racing stable and held as a matter of law that "the efforts of the appellant in maintaining horses and betting on them and others, howsoever systematically organized they may be" do not "constitute a business." He held that the keeping of a stable "in an organized manner does not constitute a business." He went on to observe that "betting is only a hobby which does not amount to business." He also quoted in extenso the observations of Rowlatt, J., noted above.

Neither the Income-tax Officer nor the Assistant Commissioner took trouble to ascertain or to find as to in how many races the assessee's horses ran in the course of the accounting year, nor did they record any finding on the question as to on how many occasions did the assessee offer bets in races during that period. They treated the question of set-off raised by the assessee as an abstract question of law, and the fundamental idea underlying their decision is that the maintenance of racing stable and betting on the race course can, under no circumstances, fall under any of the heads of income enumerated in s. 6 of the Act.

Being aggrieved by the decision of the Assistant Commissioner, the assessee filed a joint application under s. 33 for review and under s. 66 (2) for reference of questions of law to this Court, and the prayer contained in the application was that, in the event of the Commissioner refusing to exercise the power of review vested in him by s. 33, he may refer the following question for decision to this Court:

"Whether the profit or loss of racing and betting is taxable;

(a) when a heavy investment has been made with an intention to earn regular profits from this line;

(b) when the line is a well-established one and profit and losses are running side by side throughout the year."

The application of the assessee was first considered by Mr. Kher, the then Commissioner, and he called upon the Income-tax Officer to submit a report showing (a) what amount was invested by the assessee in keeping a racing stable; and (b) whether the loss suffered by the assessee was on betting on his own horses or on horses belonging to others also. The Income-tax Officer then reported that in the year in question the assessee invested a sum of Rs. 4,200 in the purchase of three horses and two of those horses ran at the various races. He further reported that "the racing account contains a consolidated record for bettings and stakes," and that the assessee incurred loss in betting on his own horses and on horses belonging to others.

Mr. Kher was succeeded by Mr. Verma who has made the present reference. The opinion expressed by Mr. Verma in the course of the reference is that "except in the case of the professional trainer and the bookmaker" the presumption is that racing and betting "are undertaken merely as a hobby" and the profit made or losses incurred in racing and betting cannot be taken into account in making the assessment under the Act. The questions that the Commissioner has referred for decision to this Court have been set out at the inception of this judgment, and the obvious comment that question No. 1 provokes is that the assumption underlying that question is that maintenance of racing stable and betting transactions do or at any rate may constitute "business" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, even though that was the most debatable question in the case. Further it is manifest from the facts stated by the Commissioner that the questions of law that arose in the case were, whether the income accruing from (a) maintenance of racing stable, or (b) betting at the race course, comes within the purview of any of the clauses of s. 6. If it does, it is obvious that the loss resulting from such a venture is to be set-off in accordance with the provisions of s. 24. The Commissioner however framed these questions in most involved language and question No. 1 was in particular so framed as to make it doubtful whether it was a question of law. That question in effect amounted to an invitation to this Court to decide, whether there was any evidence to support the finding of the Assistant Commissioner that the maintenance of the racing stable and the series of betting transactions do not constitute business or, was that finding based on no evidence. It is needless to observe that this was a matter for the Commissioner to decide while exercising the power of review under s. 33 and was hardly a matter for the decision of this Court. While making these observations I am alive to the well-established proposition of law that the question of the accuracy or otherwise of an inference from proved facts is always a question of law and if the Commissioner had stated the proved facts and had asked this Court to decide as to whether on those facts the conclusion arrived at by the Assistant Commissioner was correct in law, the question raised would undoubtedly have been a question of law. But this the Commissioner did not do.

I am constrained to make these observations as to the form of the questions in view of the limited jurisdiction given to this Court by cl. (5) of s. 66 which provides that "the High Court upon the hearing of any such case shall decide the questions of law raised thereby." In view of this provision it is not permissible for this Court to re-frame the questions referred by the Commissioner. To this effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax B. & O. v. Maharajahdiraja of Darbhanga (5). Their Lordships in that case made the following observations:

"The Commissioner unfortunately omitted to formulate any question of law arising out of this transaction. The duty of the High Court under s. 66, sub-s. 5, is to 'decide the questions of law raised' by the case referred to them by the Commissioner and it is for the Commissioner to state formally the questions which arise. Here the High Court itself formulated the question to be decided as being.... Their Lordships deprecate this departure from regular procedure, but in the circumstances have not thought it proper to decline to express their view on the question thus informally presented."

The unsatisfactory nature of the questions also inclined me to the view, at one stage of the arguments, to call upon the Commissioner to re-frame the questions. But, having regard to the wide scope of question No. 2, and primarily with the object of expediting the settlement of a dispute that dates back to the year 1934, I decided to answer the question of law that arises in the case. After all, the real question in the case is whether the losses suffered by the assessee can be set-off under s. 24 and this question comes within the purview of question No. 2 framed by the Commissioner. I am therefore in a position to decide the question of law raised without reframing the questions formulated by the Commissioner and this I proceed to do. In order to entitle an assessee to have the amount of the loss suffered by him in any particular year set-off against his income, profits or gains in that year it is necessary, in accordance with the provisions of s. 24, that the loss must be "under any of the heads mentioned in s. 6." The decision of the reference, therefore, depends on the answer to the following question:

Does the income accruing from (a) maintenance of racing stable; or (b) betting at the race course, fall under any of the heads mentioned in s. 6? In order to satisfactorily decide this question it is necessary to keep in view the scope and the scheme of the Income Tax Act. By s. 4 (1) the Act is subject to the provisions contained in the Act, made applicable to.

"all income, profits or gains, as described or comprised in s. 6, from whatever source derived, accruing or arising, or received in British India or deemed under the provisions of this Act to accrue, or arise, or to be received in British India."

The following provision is then made by s. 6:

"Save as otherwise provided by this Act, the following heads of income, profits and gains shall be chargeable to income-tax in the manner hereinafter appearing, namely: (1) Salaries. (2) Interest on securities. (3) Property. (4) Business. (5) Professional earnings. (6) Other sources."

A reference to these sections puts it beyond doubt that the Act is of very wide application and subject to the exemptions contained in the Act, all income (barring allowable deductions in the computation thereof) from whatever source derived is chargeable to income-tax. This is further made clear by s. 12 (1) which enacts that

"the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'other sources' in respect of income, profits and gains of every kind and from every source to which this Act applies (if not included under any of the preceding heads)."

This section is so framed as to make the sixth head in s. 6, namely, "other sources," a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains. These provisions are, however, subject to sub-s. (3) of s. 4 which makes the Act inapplicable to the classes of income specified therein. It follows that all income from whatever source derived is chargeable to income-tax unless it falls under any of the classes of income detailed in sub-s. (3) of s. 4. In other words, taxation under the Act is the rule and exemption the exception. All income from whatever source derived must, therefore, be chargeable to income-tax, and the burden of proving that a particular class of income is not so chargeable must necessarily lie on the person claiming exemption from the liability to pay income-tax. The view that I take is in consonance with the decision in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Pan- chapakesa Iyer (6). It was held in that case that s. 12 of the Act is sufficiently wide to bring into its net income, profits or gains from whatever source derived and it is for the person who receives the same to show that it is exempt from payment of income-tax and this can be done only by showing that the income is of a class specified in s. 4 (3) of the Act.

The maintenance of racing stable, or betting at the race course, does in some, if not in most cases result in income, profits and gains and the argument is, therefore, available to the assessee in the present case that the "income, profits and gains" from these sources fall within one of the heads mentioned in s. 6 or, at any rate, come under the omnibus head "other sources." He is, therefore, entitled to claim exemption for the loss sustained by him in the year in question in accordance with the provisions of s. 24, unless the department succeeds in showing that the income from these sources falls in any of the classes of income enumerated in sub-s. (3) of s. 4. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the department on cl. (vii) of sub-s. (3) of s. 4 which provides that the Act shall not apply to

This clause was considered by this Court in: In the matter of Chunni Lal Kalayan Das (2) and it was held that the clause exempts from liability to income-tax only receipts of a casual and non-recurring nature, which are not receipts from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation by an assessee. It is argued by the learned Advocate-General that the receipts from the maintenance of racing horses and racing stable or bets at the race course are of a casual and non-recurring nature, and are not "receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation," and, therefore, the Act has no application to such receipts. Mr. Pathak, the learned Counsel for the assessee, on the other hand maintains that the receipts from the maintenance of racing horses and racing stable, or receipts from bets at the race course (a) are not of a casual and non-recurring nature, and (b) even if such receipts are of a casual and non-recurring nature they arise from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation; and, as such, cl. (vii) of sub-s. (3) of s. 4 has no application to the case.

The arguments of the learned Counsel for the parties necessitate the consideration of the following points: (1) whether receipts arising from the maintenance of racing stable and running the horses in races, or betting at the race course are of a casual and non-recurring nature; and (2) are receipts from the sources mentioned in the preceding question, receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation? If either of these points is decided in favour of the assessee he would be entitled to the set-off claimed by him on account of the losses incurred in the year under consideration. I proceed first to deal with point No. 1 noted above. Neither the word "casual" nor the word "non-recurring" has been defined in the Act and these words must therefore be construed in their plain and ordinary sense. In Murray's Dictionary the word "casual" is said to mean:

(1) Subject to, depending on, or produced by chance; accidental, fortuitous.

(2) Occurring and coming out at uncertain times; not to be calculated on, uncertain, unsettled.

(3) Subject to chance or accident.

The word "recurring" connotes the idea of repetition and of occurring more than once. The winning of a particular horse in a particular race or the winning of bets at the race course is undoubtedly uncertain and a matter of chance, and the receipts from these sources are, in my opinion, therefore casual. But in order to attract the provisions of cl. (vii) the receipt must be both casual and non-recurring. If the receipt, though casual, is recurring, cl. (vii) can have no application and it is therefore necessary to decide whether or not receipts from the sources under consideration are of a non-recurring nature. Receipts from these sources, are in my judgment, not of a non-recurring nature. A person who maintains race horses and habitually runs them at the race course does so in the expectation of winning the races and getting stakes money and the receipt of stakes money, in most cases, may recur. It is to be remembered in this connexion that the words used in the Act are of "a casual and non-recurring nature." In view of these words, it is the nature of the receipt, irrespective of the facts of a particular case, that is to be the guiding factor. The receipt of stakes money by owners of racing stables is a matter of frequent occurrence and such receipts cannot therefore be characterized as of a non-recurring nature. In every race, the stakes money must be paid to the owner of at least one of the horses that took part in the race. In short, the receipt of stakes money is not a phenomenon of rare occurrence, but is bound to follow every race. Similarly, bets yield receipts to bettor on horse racing and if a particular bettor wins on repeated occasions it is impossible to say that the receipts arising from bets in his case were not of a recurring nature. It is true that the winning of bets is a matter of chance, but this fact by itself does not make receipts from betting of a non-recurring nature. To put the matter in another way, bets on horse racing do bring receipts, though at irregular intervals, and such receipts are therefore of a recurring nature. To my mind, the volition of a particular individual in making bets on numerous or few occasions is immaterial for the decision of the question under consideration. Either receipts from bets are of a recurring nature or they are not. If they are of a recurring nature they must be so even in the case of an individual who offered bets on very few occasions. Persons who enter into forward contracts or speculate at the Stock Exchange may not make profit or gain in most of the transactions entered into by them; nonetheless, income accruing from these activities is of a recurring nature for the simple reason that such transactions do at times result in profit. The loss incurred by some of such persons must result in corresponding gain to the rest and, therefore, recurring loss and recurring profit must be the outcome of such activities. A fortiori, receipts from bets, irrespective of the frequency of the bets offered, are receipts of a recurring nature.

(6) A I R 1932 Mad. 424; 137 Ind. Cas. 557; 62 M. L. J. 656; Ind. Rul. (1932) Mad. 398; (1932) M. W. N. 664; 35 L. W. 777.

In the view that I take, point No. 1 must be decided in favour of the assessee. Before parting with point No. 1 noted above, I must observe that, from the facts available to us, the conclusion is irresistible that the assessee maintained racing stable on a systematic and commercial basis and habitually indulged in betting in horse racing. The amounts spent by him in purchasing horses and maintaining them and in making bets were entered in the account books in the regular course of business and so were the receipts made by him. The case before us is not a case of an individual who once or twice in the course of the year took his horses to the race course or offered bets on rare and isolated occasions. The loss incurred by the assessee in betting was in the neighbourhood of a sum of Rs. 8,000 and this must have been due to habitual and systematic betting at horse racing in the city of Meerut. I now proceed to deal with point No. 2 noted above. The words "profession," "vocation" or "occupation" have not been defined in the Act. By s. 2(4)

"business" includes any trade, commerce or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture."

This is also not an exhaustive definition of the words "business." The Act is, therefore, of no assistance in the determination of the question whether a particular activity or course of conduct constitutes business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, and the question must be answered by giving these words their plain and ordinary meaning. But, having regard to the provisions of s. 2 (4), it may be assumed that the word "business" has been used in the Act in a commercial and limited sense. There is however, no warrant in the Act to give the words "profession," "vocation" or "occupation" a limited meaning. The words "business," "profession" and "vocation" have been interpreted in some English decisions and though those decisions cannot, in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (4), at p. 590*, furnish an infallible guide, they are of assistance in interpreting the words under consideration. The word "business" has also been interpreted in two decisions under the Indian Income Tax Act. In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marine Steam Turbine Co., Ltd. (7), it was observed by Rowlatt, J., that the words "business" in whatever sense it be understood, is undoubtedly an elastic word capable of wide extension; but it must be borne in mind that it is also a word which has two virtually distinct meanings. It may mean any particular matter or affair of serious importance. This meaning of the word may be illustrated by a few examples. When a private person goes to consult professionally his banker or his solicitor it may properly be said that he goes to see him on business. In the same way any serious matter affecting the resources of a trust, a school, a church or a charity may be spoken of as business relating to the particular institution, and a person dealing with any matter of that kind is dealing with a matter of business. To take a further example from the present case, if a director of the respondent company were to go to its premises for the purpose of doing some purely formal act, or, if a shareholder were to go to the premises for the purpose of looking into the accounts relating to these royalties, he would no doubt be attending there on a matter of business. The word 'business,' however, is also used in another and a very different sense, as meaning an active occupation or profession continuously carried on, and it is in this sense that the word is used in the Act with which we are here concerned."

In Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (4), at p. 591*, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that though the words used in s. 2 (4) are wide,

"but underlying each of them is the fundamental idea of the continuous exercise of an activity. Under s. 10 the tax is to be payable by an assessee under the head 'business' in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by him. Again, their Lordships think, the same central idea: the words italicized, are an essential constituent of that which is to produce the taxable income; it is to be the profit earned by a process of production."

In Rogers Pyatti Shellac & Co. v. Secretary of State (8), at p. 36, Mukerji, J, relying on certain English decisions held that "the word 'business' is one of large and indefinite import and connotes something which occupies attention and labour of a person for the purpose of profit. The word means almost anything which is an occupation or a duty requiring attention as distinguished from sports or pleasure and is used in the sense of an occupation continuously carried on for the purpose of profits."

It would appear from these judicial pronouncements that the word "business" has been used in the Act to denote the continuous and systematic exercise of an occupation or profession with the object of making income or profit, and where the element of continuity is wanting in a particular activity that activity cannot be characterized as "business" within the meaning of the Act. "Profession" or "occupation" can amount to business only if it is continuously and systematically exercised. It follows that the words "profession" and "occupation" are words of wider import than the word "business." The question what amounts to a "profession," was considered in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Maxse (9), at p. 657 and Scrutton, L. J., observed that "it seems to me.....that a 'profession' in the present use of language involves the idea of an occupation requiring either purely intellectual skill, or of manual skill controlled, as in painting and sculpture or surgery, by the intellectual skill of the operator, as distinguished from an occupation which is substantially the production or sale or arrangements for the production or sale of commodities. The line of demarcation may vary from time to time."

It would appear from this observation that the word "occupation" is a word of wider import than the word "profession." In Partridge v. Mallandaine (10) the word "vocation" was held to be "analogous to 'calling,' a word of wide signification, meaning the way in which a man passes his life." No reported case has been cited by the learned Counsel on either side in which the word "occupation" used in s. 4 (3) (vii) may have been interpreted. But, in Murray's Dictionary the meaning given to the word "occupation" is as follow:

"The being occupied, or employed with, or engaged in something; that in which one is engaged; employment or business. . . . A particular action or course of action in which one is engaged, especially habitually or steadily."

It is obvious that the words "business," "profession," "vocation" and "occupation" have been used in s. 4 (3) (vii) in contradistinction to each other and, having regard to the scheme of taxation underlying the Act, the conclusion is irresistible that the word "profession" is of wider import than the word "business" and the word "vocation" is of wider import than the word "profession" and lastly "occupation" is a word of wider signification than the word "vocation." In other words, what may not amount to business may amount to profession and what may not amount to profession may amount to vocation and what may not amount to vocation may amount to occupation within the meaning of the Act.

Whether the maintenance of a racing stable does or does not in a particular case amount to "business" must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. A company may be formed or a partnership may be entered into for maintaining race horses and for systematically running the same in races with the object of making money. In such a case the maintenance of race horses would, in my opinion, amount to business within the meaning of the Act. What difference does it then make if the same sort of activity with the same object is continuously carried on by an individual? The mere fact that the maintenance of race horses involves an element of sport cannot exempt it from the category of "business" if the activity is continuous and is carried on with the object of earning money. I find it impossible to lay it down as a general proposition of universal application that, in all cases where an element of sport or amusement is involved, a particular activity, howso-ever systematically and continuously exercised, cannot amount to business. The question in each case must be what was the dominant intention. If the dominant intention was to get income or make profits or gains the activity of the description referred to above must amount to "business."

It may be assumed that the assessee in the present case is a man in very affluent circumstances and he could afford to spend substantial amount for mere sport and pleasure, but this circumstance, in my opinion, cannot affect the answer to the question under consideration. The maintenance of race horses, though providing pleasure and sport and possibly securing to the assessee the satisfaction of possessing splendid specimen of such horses, was also calculated to bring income to the assessee and, having regard to the method adopted by the assessee in the maintenance of the racing stable and running the horses in races, it is fair to assume that the assessee pursued this activity with the object of making money. The activity, therefore, amounted to "business" within the meaning of the Act. It is to be noted in this connexion that it is not the case that only in the year under consideration the assessee maintained the horses. It has been pointed out above that it was stated at the bar that questions similar to the questions that arise in the present reference have arisen in connexion with the assessment for the subsequent years, and this shows that the horses have been maintained and run in races by the assessee year after year.

Even if the maintenance of race horses did not in the present case amount to business it did certainly amount to the exercise of "vocation" or "occupation" within the meaning of the Act. In arriving at this conclusion, I have not ignored the fact that the assessee carries on money-lending business and deals in precious stones. But a man may very well have more than one vocation or occupation. I have already pointed out that the words "vocation" and "occupation" are words of very wide import and they, in my judgment, embrace the systematic maintenance of racing stable such as we have in the present case. The question of betting by the assessee however stands on a slightly different footing. That betting is done by every individual with the object of making money is an axiomatic truth, and, as such, it must be assumed that the assessee offered bets with that intention. There is however not enough material upon the record to show that the bets were offered by the assessee with such continuity and frequency as to amount to business, nor am I prepared to hold, on the available materials, that betting constituted profession in the present case. But, having regard to the enormous loss sustained by the assessee under this head, I am of the opinion that the assessee must have offered bets on numerous occasions and that betting, in the case of the assessee, did certainly constitute his vocation or occupation.

The decision in Graham v. Green (1) on which reliance was placed by the Income-tax Authorities was strongly pressed upon us by the learned Advocate-General. With all respect to the eminent Judge who decided that case I am not prepared to hold that betting, under no circumstances, can constitute vocation or occupation of a particular individual and, that the winnings from the same cannot amount to profits or gains chargeable to income-tax. The decision in Graham's case (1) was cited in Cooper v. Stubbs (11), and Warrington, L. J., made the following observations as regards the proposition laid down in that case:

"I desire to reserve for consideration, when, if ever, it comes before this Court, the question whether betting transactions which produce a revenue to the person who engages in them may not result in profits which are assessable to tax. That question, when it arises, will have to be decided on the facts of the particular case."

Similar observations were also made by Atkin, L. J. These observations show that the authority in Graham v. Green (1) is not beyond dispute.

For the reasons given above point No. 2 must also be decided in favour of the assessee.

To sum up, my reasons for arriving at the conclusions stated above are as follows: (1) In order to entitle an assessee to have the loss suffered by him set-off against his income the loss must be under one of the heads mentioned in s. 6. (2). S. 6 is exhaustive and embraces income from all sources whatsoever barring those classes of income which are specified in s. 4 (3) of the Act. (3) The income from betting or horse racing must therefore fall under one of the heads of income specified in s. 6 unless it comes within the purview of s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Act. (4) The burden of proving that the income from horse racing or betting comes under the exception clause viz., s. 4 (3) (vii), is on the department. (5) There are no materials upon the record to justify the conclusion that the income from horse racing or betting in the case of the assessee could not constitute his business, vocation or occupation, or that the income from these sources was both of a casual and of a non-recurring nature. (6) It follows that the burden that lay on the department in the present case was not discharged.

For the reasons given above I would answer the questions referred as follows :

1 (a). There was no material on which it could be held that the maintenance of the racing stable did not constitute the business of the assessee.

(b) There was no material on which it could be held that the series of betting transactions by the assessee did not constitute his business.

2 (a). The assessee was entitled to have the loss of Rs. 425 deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute.

(b) The assessee was entitled to have the loss of Rs. 7,458 in the betting account deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute.

Bajpai, J.—On an application made by the assessee Raizada Lala Inder Sen, head and representative of a Hindu undivided family, resident at 291 Clement Street, Meerut, under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, has stated a case and referred two questions of law said to arise out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner for our decision. The questions of law formulated by him are as follows :

"(1) Was there any material on which it could be found that (a) the maintenance of the racing stable, and (b) the series of betting transactions did not constitute 'business' of the assessee? (2) If so, was the assessee in the face of such a finding entitled to have the loss either (a) of Rs. 425 in the racing account, or (b) Rs. 7,458 in the betting account, or both losses, deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute?"

The assessee is a money-lender and deals also in precious stones. For the assessment year 1933-34 he claimed a deduction of Rs. 8,064 on account of loss in what he described as the racing account. This deduction was claimed under s. 24 of the Act which provides that

"where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year under any of the heads mentioned in s. 6, he shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year."

Section 6 of the Act says :

"Save as otherwise provided by this Act, the following heads of income, profits and gains shall be chargeable to income-tax in the manner hereinafter appearing, namely :

- (i) Salaries.
- (ii) Interest on securities.
- (iii) Property.
- (iv) Business.
- (v) Professional earnings.
- (vi) Other sources."

The assessee made profits in money-lending and in precious stones, but in the racing account he lost Rs. 7,454 on betting and Rs. 610 in running horses. It is conceded that out of this latter sum, Rs. 185 was spent in purchasing a stop-watch and that, therefore, this sum could not possibly be claimed as a deduction and the loss is thus reduced to Rs. 7,879. I have had the advantage of reading the judgments of my learned brethren Iqbal Ahmad and Braund and I am definitely of the opinion that the questions of law have not been properly formulated by the learned Commissioner. The orders of the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner as printed on our paper book are scrupulously barren of facts and the assessee's contentions seem to have been decided more or less as questions of law. The learned Commissioner, to whom a combined application under s. 33 of the Act for review by him and under s. 66 (2) of the Act for reference to this Court was made, felt this difficulty and by his order dated May 17, 1936 called for a report from the Income-tax Officer, and the Income-tax Officer submitted his report on May 22, 1936 after examining the account books of the assessee for the year ending March 31, 1933 in the light of the observations made by the Commissioner in his order dated May 17, 1936, and some facts for the first time seem to have been ascertained by the Income-tax Officer and were stated in his report.

The Assistant Commissioner, when he passed his appellate order dated February 8, 1936, had as far as I can see, only the original order of the Income-tax Officer dated February 26, 1935 and he does not seem to have examined the account books of the assessee and anticipating the reasons, which I shall give later on, I feel inclined to say on the first question formulated by the Commissioner that there was no material, at least none has been mentioned in the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner, on which he could find that (a) the maintenance of the racing stable and (b) the series of betting transactions did not constitute business of the assessee. It is clear that under s. 66 (2), a question of law should arise out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner and out of the materials which the Assistant Commissioner had before him when he passed his order; and I have already said before that the facts came to be investigated for the first time in some details—scanty as they are even now for deciding this particular case—when the Commissioner for his own benefit called for a report from the Income-tax Officer after the assessment was complete so far as the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner were concerned.

I shall, however, out of deference to the wishes of my learned brethren constituting the Bench, not adopt the drastic measure of refusing to answer the questions of law or of sending back the case to the learned Commissioner because I feel that no fresh facts can probably come to light and we can only in a general manner decide the questions of law.

The facts that have been ascertained by the Income-tax Officer after an examination of the accounts in his second report may be briefly stated. In the books of the assessee there are two accounts for racing in the year in question; one is the horses account and the other is the racing account. The horses account is a very bald one. It relates to the purchase of three horses, one for Rs. 1,000, the second for Rs. 1,400 and the third for Rs. 1,800 and all of them were purchased between October 19, 1932 and February 20, 1933. The total price of the three horses comes to Rs. 4,200 which represents the assessee's investment for the year under consideration. Only the first two of the above horses ran at the various races in that year.

The racing account contains a consolidated record for bettings and stakes. The winnings on account of betting as well as stakes money received from the race clubs have been credited to it and the losses due to bettings and expenses incurred in connexion with the maintenance of horses, like bills for forage, money paid to the secretaries of the race clubs in the form of entry fee, jockey fee, servants pay, etc., have been debited to the account. The bets include bets on the assessee's own horses as well as on those belonging to others and it was not possible from the account to give separately the losses suffered due to betting on his own horses and on horses belonging to others, because no details were kept in the books. In the betting account the winnings are Rs. 3,910 and the losses are Rs. 11,364. Thus, the net loss is Rs. 7,454. In the racing account the profits as represented by the stakes money come to Rs. 4,747 and the losses are Rs. 5,357. Thus, the net loss is Rs. 610. Out of this should be deducted a sum of Rs. 185 debited to the price of a stop-watch which obviously is inadmissible being a capital expense, and the loss is thus reduced from Rs. 610 to Rs. 425 on this head. The question that emerges out of these facts is whether the assessee is entitled to claim a deduction under s. 24 of the Act on account of the above losses. I would like to divide the racing account into two heads, one consisting of the maintenance of the racing stable and the other consisting of the betting transactions, although the two may be said to be intimately connected, for experience shows that a horse owner who maintains a racing stable can rarely escape the temptation of betting. The Income tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner have quoted the observations of Rowlatt J., in Graham v. Green (1) in extenso and the Income-tax Officer has disallowed the set-off claimed on betting by an implicit reliance on the above English case, and as for the loss due to the maintenance of horses and running them in the various races he says that:

"It does not arise in the course of a vocation or profession. The assessee indulges in this hobby by way of pastime and it is not done in the nature of profession. The loss sustained by him or the income made in pursuance of this pastime do not attract the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The loss claimed by him on this account is therefore, disallowed."

The learned Assistant Commissioner appears to have mixed up the two accounts and observes as follows:

"I do not think the efforts of the appellant in maintaining horses and betting on them and others, however, systematically organized they may be constitute a business. A stable might be kept in an organized manner, but this by itself does not constitute a business. There is no system in betting, nor can it be called organized. A person who bets may think that he does so systematically but actually it is not the case, for there is no element of trade or business or even vocation in it. Betting is only a hobby which does not amount to business. The appellant is not a bookmaker whose efforts are organized and systematic and consequently the former cannot be said to be carrying on trade or business merely by keeping a stable and betting on horses."

After having said the above the Assistant Commissioner quotes the observations of Mr. Justice Rowlatt, in Graham v. Green (1). Now it is clear that the observations of Rowlatt, J., relate only to betting and have no bearing on the question of racing establishment. With great respect to that learned Judge, I am afraid, I am not prepared to go to the extent to which he has gone and to say that it is not possible under any circumstance to bring the income from betting under the six heads given in s. 6, Income Tax Act, for, apart from the more or less well-defined first five clauses there is the sweeping sixth clause, namely 'other sources.' Graham v. Green (1) was considered by the Court of Appeal in Cooper v. Stubbs (11) and at p. 769* Warrington L. J. says :

"I desire to reserve for consideration, when, if ever, it comes before this Court, the question whether betting transactions which produce a revenue to the person who engages in them may not result in profits which are assessable to tax. That question when it arises, will have to be decided on the facts of the particular case" and Atkin L. J. at p. 776* says :

"Like my brother Warrington I desire to reserve the question of what the position would be if these transactions had turned out, to be bets; but if the bets had been proved to be as continuous as these particular bets were, I express no opinion about it. I suppose the matter may some day arise in the Courts."

It is obvious that the English Court of Appeal in the above case was not quite happy about the decision of Rowlatt, J., in Graham v. Green (1), and I can conceive of a case where a person might be making his livelihood by bettings alone, or in addition to other sources of livelihood might be making an income out of bettings as well. Such a person might get into touch with the various racing establishments, might try to find out the capabilities of various horses maintained in those racing establishments and might evolve some system for betting and in any event might be known by the general public as a person who indulges constantly in bets, maintains a regular record of them and depends for his livelihood solely or mainly on betting. Like the two learned Judges Warrington, L. J. and Atkin, L. J., I would reserve the consideration of the question when a proper case arises and content myself by saying for the present that Graham v. Green (1) should not be considered by the Income-tax Authorities in this country as a case of universal application. The income from the maintenance of a racing establishment might in certain cases come within the head of 'business' and in certain other cases come within the head of 'other sources' and the exemption clauses s. 4 (3) (vii) might not apply.

The racing establishment consisting of the expenses incurred on moneys paid to the secretaries of the race clubs in the form of entry-fee, jockey-fee, pay of servants, travelling charges, etc., on the debit side and of the stakes money on the credit side stands on a different footing. This might be indulged as a hobby and a pastime or might be conducted on business lines which involves an element of commercial enterprise. In every case it will be a question of fact, the fact to be determined from surrounding circumstances, the surrounding circumstances being invoked in order to determine the underlying intention of the person concerned. I am aware of the danger of what I am saying. This might vest the Income-tax Authorities with undesirable powers but I am not prepared to assume that they will exercise these powers arbitrarily and it might further be possible in an extreme case to hold that the power was not judicially exercised and the question was a mixed question of fact and law. If however experience shows that there has been an abuse of such powers it will be time for the Legislature to step in to remedy the abuse, but I am convinced that we as Judges should not try to lay down any scientific test or tests. The Income Tax Act has not attempted to define 'income' and could not possibly define or describe 'other sources.' "Business" has only been described as including "any trade, commerce or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture."

What other things it includes the Income Tax Act does not say, nor have the words "profession, vocation or occupation" occurring in s. 4 (3) (vii) been defined anywhere in the Act; much less the words "casual and non-recurring nature" also occurring there. A common sense working definition or description will have to be adopted in each particular case. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co., (4), at p. 590* say :

"The object of the Indian Act is to tax 'income,' a term which it does not define. It is expanded, no doubt, into 'income, profits and gains' but the expansion is more a matter of words than of substance. Income, their Lordships think, in this Act connotes a periodical monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall."

Commissioner of Income Tax (12) to which I was a party, it was held that "the observations of the Judicial Committee with regard to the question as to what amounts to income under the Income Tax Act in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (4), referred to above, were not intended by their Lordships to be confined to the particular facts and the circumstances of the case which their Lordships were considering. Their Lordships intended to indicate that the element of periodical receipt or regularity or expected regularity of money return was an essential ingredient of 'income' under the Income Tax Act."

Applying, therefore, this definition of income to receipts from racing establishment or from betting, I am prepared to hold that it is possible to conceive of a case where receipts from either of these sources might come within the definition and the exemption contained in s. 4(3) (vi) might not apply, and in that case the assessee might be entitled to claim a set-off under s. 24 of the Act if a loss ensues there. Coming to the facts of the present case which are ever so meagre my view is that the assessee is not entitled to claim a set-off of losses either on the racing establishment account or on the betting account, and this is my general answer to the questions formulated by the learned Commissioner.

Braund, J.—This is a case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax of the Central and United Provinces and referred to us under s. 66, Income Tax Act, 1922. The facts, so far as they are available to us, are very simple. The assessee is one Raizada Lala Inder Sen. He is the head of a joint Hindu family which carries on business in Meerut as money-lenders and dealers in precious stones. In the course of the financial year 1932-33, the assessee was minded to buy three race horses at an aggregate capital cost of Rs. 4,200. These horses he trained, or had trained for him, for racing. During the year ending March 31, 1933, the assessee ran these horses in various races as a result of which he received in stake-money a sum of Rs. 4,747 from various racing clubs in Northern India. The expenses however of the training, upkeep and running of the horses, as adjusted by the Income-tax Officer, amounted to Rs. 5,272. In the result therefore there was a loss on this account (which is called "the racing account") of Rs. 425.

The assessee however made bets during the year of assessment both on his own horses and upon horses not his own. We are given no facts relating to the volume (12) (1938) A L J 736; 176 Ind. Cas. 771; A I R 1938 All. 464; I L R (1938) All. 691; 1938 A L R 686; 11 R A 142.

or frequency of this betting, its distribution between bets made by the assessee on his own and upon other horses nor the size of the bets made, except that the nett result of these betting operations during the year of assessment was that they showed a nett loss of Rs. 7,454. The assessee appears to have entered these transactions in his books of account under two headings, namely "Horses Account" to which he debited the purchase price of the horses and "Racing Account" to which he debited his outgoings in respect of training, upkeep etc., and in which he also entered his losses and gains in respect of the bets he made.

These are the whole of the facts. To put the point in issue in its simplest terms, the assessee has claimed in respect of the year of assessment (1933-34) to be allowed a deduction of Rs. 8,061 (the aggregate of Rs. 425 and Rs. 7,454) under s. 24, Income Tax Act, upon the footing that it represents a loss of profits or gains in the year of assessment under one of the heads mentioned in s. 6 of the Act. Both the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax decided against the assessee. The present case has been stated to us by the Commissioner who has expressed his own opinion to be that the assessee is entitled to the relief he seeks neither in respect of the loss of Rs. 425 incurred by him in maintaining his stable and running his horses nor in respect of the loss of Rs. 7,454 incurred by him on betting. He has taken the view that as regards both they were carried on "as a hobby and not by way of business." I think he was right. The actual question referred to us is in these terms:

"(1) Was there any material on which it could be found that (a) the maintenance of the racing stable, and (b) the series of betting transactions did not constitute 'business' of the assessee? (2) If so, was the assessee in the face of such a finding entitled to have the loss either (a) of Rs. 425 in the racing account or (b) Rs. 7,458 in the betting account, or both losses, deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute?"

It will, perhaps, be convenient before discussing the form of, and deciding, the questions which the Commissioner has framed to refer to the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act itself. It is obvious that to be assessable under the Act at all the "income" to be assessed must be such "income" as the Act applies to. What "income, profits and gains" are to be reached by the Act is to be found in s. 4 (1), as further 'described' in s. 6 of the Act. And what "income" is not to be reached by the Act is to be found in s. 4 (3) which sets out various classes of 'income' to which the Act does not apply at all. It has to be noticed that by sub-s. (3) of s. 4 certain classes of "income" are declared not to be affected by the Act at all and, for myself, I find it difficult to reconcile the view of the Madras High Court expressed in Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. Panchapakasa Iyer (6) to which my learned brother has referred, either with the well-known principles for the construction of fiscal statutes or with the fact that, upon its face, the Income Tax Act is not made applicable to all income but only to those classes of income which by its own terms are not exempted. The words "profits and gains" which appear in the general charging section (s. 4 (1)) are not to be found in sub-s. (3) of s. 4. But, in my view, the word "income" as used in the sub-s. (3) of s. 4 embraces every form of receipt of the kind which but for the exemption would, or might, have been embraced by the words "income, profits or gains" in s. 4 (1). As has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (4):

"The object of the Indian Act is to tax 'income,' a term which it does not define. It is expanded, no doubt into 'income, profits and gains,' but the expansion is more a matter of words than of substance."

It seems to me, therefore, that the words 'profits' and 'gains' in reality add nothing to the expression 'income' and that an incoming receipt of any of the classes exempted in s. 4, sub-s. (3) of the Act is one to which the Act does not, and never did apply.

The real question, therefore, which falls to be determined on this reference is whether any receipts (a) by way of stake money derived from the running of the assessee's horses in races and (b) from betting, or from either of those sources, subject of course to all proper adjustments in respect of outgoings or losses, would have been assessable to Indian income-tax under the Act if a profit had been shown on these accounts respectively. For, under s. 24 (1) it is only in such a case—that is to say, in the case of a loss of profits or gains under any 'assessable' head mentioned in the Act—that any question of a set-off of losses can arise.

The only head of sub-s. (3) of s. 4 of the Act which can possibly catch this case is head (vii), the effect of which is

"(3) This Act shall not apply to the following classes of income:

(vii) Any receipts, not being receipts from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, which, are of a casual and non-recurring nature, or are not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee."

The question whether by virtue of this clause the 'income' in dispute in this case is one to which the Act applies at all is, to my mind, the only material question involved in this reference, because, in itself, it embraces both the questions, first whether the assessee in doing what he did was exercising a "business," "profession," "vocation" or "occupation" and, secondly whether, if he was not exercising any of those things, the classes of receipts with which we are dealing, or either of them, were or was "of a casual and non-recurring nature."

Before giving what is, in my opinion, the proper answer to this question, I desire to say that I agree with what has been said as to the form of question propounded to us by the Commissioner. It is an unhappy form of question which I have met with before in cases of this kind. The question really is, as I have said, whether, on the facts as found by the Income-tax Officer, he was correct in law in holding (a) that the assessee was not carrying on a "business," "profession," "vocation" or "occupation" in the respects or either of them in reference to which he claims relief and (b), if he was not, whether any "receipts" in these respects were in law, on the facts found, "casual and non-recurring." I do not think that this criticism amounts to re-framing the questions asked by the Commissioner. It is intended to explain them as a preliminary to answering them.

Though it appears to have been assumed throughout these proceedings, both before the Income-tax Authorities and here, that the maintenance and training of the three horses ought to be treated as a separate transaction from the assessee's betting, I desire to say for myself that I am not altogether sure that, that on the facts is the right way of looking at it. I think they may just as easily, if not better, be regarded as one and the same activity. If in the result they should be held to constitute 'business,' I should myself think that they are one business and not two. And whether they are held to be an enterprise productive of receipts which are

"casual and non-recurring" or not, I should prefer to regard them in this case as one enterprise and not as two. But it makes no difference to the conclusion I have come to and I do not, therefore, propose to depart from what has been hitherto accepted as the right view.

In my judgment, neither the assessee's ownership, management and running of his three race horses nor his betting transaction can, in this case and on such facts as have been disclosed to us by him, be said to constitute his 'business,' his 'profession,' his 'vocation' or his 'occupation.' I should, for myself, be very unwilling to try to lay down any general definition of what a 'business,' 'profession,' 'vocation' or 'occupation' is, because it is a matter which, to my mind, must necessarily depend in every case upon the circumstances of the assessee, the particular things he does and the degree to which, and the object with which, he does them. A philatelist collects stamps for his own entertainment. A stamp dealer collects them for his profit. A country gentleman maintains a garden for his pleasure, while a market gardener or a florist does so for his profit. And yet in neither case would it be right to say that either the desire for, or an indifference to, profit, as the case might be, was an exhaustive test, for business and pleasure may well be combined. And still less is it possible to my mind to say that an actual profit would necessarily convert what was primarily a hobby or a pastime into a business. For I do not doubt that many stamp and curio collectors entertain a secret hope that they may one day by good chance and to their profit acquire a rare and valuable specimen. And I think they would be surprised to know, if that were to happen, that they had been carrying on a 'business.' The truth I think is in this, as in so many other cases, that no exhaustive test can be applied but that all the surrounding circumstances must be considered and common sense applied. If there is one test which is, as I think, more valuable than another, it is to try to see what is the man's own dominant object, whether it was to conduct an enterprise of a commercial character or whether it was primarily to entertain himself. If the latter was his real objective, I do not think that the circumstances that his hobby might possibly yield him a reward is conclusive of this question whether what he is doing constitutes a 'business,' 'profession,' 'vocation' or 'occupation' within the meaning of this Act.

In this case, the assessee was, as far as we can tell, a man well able to afford the pleasure both of keeping race horses and of betting. I think that in India, as in England men of means take a pride in possessing race horses and in exhibiting their horses, and themselves, on race courses. And the instinct to gamble is not the perquisite alone of a man of business. Prima facie, I think that, where the only facts known are that a well-to-do man owns and runs three horses and bets on them and other horses, he does so for his pleasure, even though that pleasure costs him Rs. 7,000 odd in a year. And nonetheless is this so by reason of the fact that he makes a note in his books of account what his pleasure costs him. Many men of method do that. And, indeed, one cannot dismiss from one's mind the possibility that such entries may be made for the very purpose of raising a claim such as the assessee is now making. Though I express this view, I do not desire it to be thought that, in my opinion, there are no circumstances in which a man can ever be said to be an owner of race horses, or a gambler, as a business proposition. I think that that would be going much too far. I think that it may well be that there are cases in which by the scale on which he conducts his racing or his gambling (whether on horses or in other ways), by the commercial methods adopted, by his declared intention or by the absence of any other means of livelihood, he may make it clear that his object is to make a 'business' of it. With great respect to that learned Judge, I am doubtful whether the decision of Rowlatt, J., in Graham v. Green (1) really faces the fact that however irrational it may be, gambling in some form is, nevertheless, for some people a means of livelihood. In Cooper v. Stubbs (11) at pp. 769 and 776* the English Court of Appeal, notwithstanding that Graham v. Green (1), was cited to them, expressly guarded themselves from deciding the question whether betting transactions which produce a revenue to the person who engages in them may not result in profits which are assessable to tax. I do not myself think that Graham v. Green (1) is necessarily an authority which ought to be relied upon in India on a matter arising under the Income Tax Act.

For these reasons, in my opinion, neither the assessee's activities on the race course itself nor his betting can, on the facts of this case, so far as we know them, be held to constitute a 'business.' They certainly do not, in my opinion, constitute a 'profession' or a 'vocation,' and though in a sense they engage part of their owner's time, they equally do not constitute his 'occupation' in the sense in which, in my judgment, that expression is in its context, used in this Act.

A more difficult question however arises when we come to consider whether such profits (if made) would be of a "casual and non-recurring nature." It is to be observed that we are given no information as to the number of races run nor of the number of bets made. But I do not myself think that we ought to, or need, send this case back at this stage under s. 66 (4).

First, as to the betting, I have discarded the contention of the assessee that in this case he is proved to have been betting as a matter of 'business.' It follows, I think, that the true view is that he made a bet whenever he felt inclined to do so. He was not compelled to and, as far as we know, there was no method in his betting. I think therefore that the right way to look at this is that the assessee, whenever he felt inclined from time to time made a bet and not that he made a series of bets on a prescribed plan. He was free to stop whenever he liked. And if each bet is, as I think, an individual transaction, I can myself see nothing of a 'recurring nature' about it. It was not its nature to recur. If it did in fact recur with great frequency it might on that account become a 'business.' It may be true that, in fact, these bets did recur. But that was not the result of the 'nature' of the transaction but of the mere spasmodic volition of the assessee. They were not, to my mind, of a recurring 'nature' and the assessee has not shown us that in this case they did recur in such a way as to constitute them a 'business.' I think also, upon this line of reasoning, that they were 'casual'—'casual' in the sense that they were merely arbitrary acts dictated by the assessee's mood at the time of making them and following no set course of dealing. Nor can it be denied that whether or not any particular bet yielded a profit was a mere matter of chance. Whether the chance was a good chance or a poor chance (or, in other words whether the odds were short or long), a chance it remained and, in that sense, its proceeds were, I think, mere 'casual' receipts. I think that the word 'casual' in this section must be read as meaning the antithesis of that which is governed by something more than mere chance, something out of which, according to the probabilities of business or to the known course of practical experience, a rational expectation of profit arises. And that does not, in my opinion, apply to a mere bet.

As to the management and running by the assessee of race horses, I think that exactly the same considerations apply. It was, in my view, a pastime, which might or might not—and probably would not yield a profit. It was in this particular case, I think, a pastime which has not been proved to have been even designed to yield a profit. The assessee has certainly not, on the facts we have, proved, in my opinion, that it was for him more than a mere amusement, notwithstanding that his losses have been noted in his books. It was, I think, a mere 'hobby' as the Commissioner has described it and, inasmuch as each race in which the assessee engaged his horse, was in itself a separate venture, I see nothing in any receipt derived from it that was not "of a casual and non-recurring nature." It should of course, be observed that it is the "receipts" which are by the Act required to be casual and non-recurring and not the occupation. I think however myself, as I have already said, that the better view of the whole matter is to regard the racing and the betting as one and not as two. And in that case, the same result follows.

In the result, I think that the questions referred to us ought to be answered thus: On the facts as found by the Income-tax Officer the maintenance, management and running in races of race horses by the assessee during the year of assessment and the betting of the assessee during that year, did not in law constitute the 'business,' 'profession,' 'vocation' or 'occupation' of the assessee nor any part of such 'business,' 'profession' 'vocation' or 'occupation,' and the receipts by the assessee from the said sources, or any of them, would not, if a profit had been derived therefrom, have in law constituted income, profits or gains of the assessee from 'other sources' within the meaning of s. 6 (vi), Income Tax Act, 1922; and, accordingly, the assessee is not entitled under s. 24 of the said Act to set-off any loss of profits or gains in the year of assessment in respect of the said maintenance, management and running of his race horses or in respect of the said betting against his income, profits or gains in that year under any other head of assessment.

By the Court.—The answers to the questions referred to this Court are as follows:

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—(1) There was no material on the record on which it could be found that (a) the maintenance of the racing stable, and (b) the series of betting transactions did not constitute business of the assessee.

(2) The assessee was entitled to have the loss (a) of Rs. 425 in the racing account, and (b) of Rs. 7,458 in the betting account deducted from his assessable income for the year in dispute.

Bajpal and Braund, JJ.—We answer both the questions referred to us together in these words:

That upon the materials before us the assessee is not entitled to claim a set-off of losses either on the racing establishment account or on the betting account.

The fee of the learned Advocate-General is assessed at a sum of Rs. 200. A copy of our judgments and of the order of the Court under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar shall be sent to the Commissioner of Income-tax. In the circumstances of the present case we direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Answered accordingly.

ODUH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 54 of 1938

March 13, 1940

ZIA-UL HASAN, J.

SRI RAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

SITAL PRASAD AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS
—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Separation taking place—Presumption as to remaining members—Partition—Shares—Mother's share—Succession to—Mother living jointly—Effect on succession—Stridhan.

When one member of a joint family separates, there is no presumption either that the remaining members have also separated or they continue joint; it is a question of fact in each case to be proved like any other fact by evidence. 87 Ind. Cas. 333 (1), relied on.

According to the Mitakshara Law, the mother or the grandmother is entitled to a share with sons or grandsons dividing the family estate between themselves but she cannot be recognized as owner of such share until the division is actually made as she has no pre-existing right in the estate except a right of maintenance. Where she is allotted her share in the partition yet her share is not partitioned she cannot be said to have become the owner of the share allotted to her and it remains in the joint family. 159 Ind. Cas. 1080 (2) and 46 Ind. Cas. 750 (3), relied on.

The rule that in cases governed by the Mitakshara the share allotted to a mother on partition is not her stridhan and that on her death it passes not to her stridhan heirs but to the sons or grandsons out of whose portion it was taken out, is a general rule applicable to a case in which all the members of a joint Hindu family have separated. It cannot apply to a case in which though one of the members of a family has separated the mother has continued to live jointly with the other members, for in the latter case it is obvious that the members who continued joint will form a joint Hindu family and succession to the property held by them will be governed by the rules of Hindu Law applicable to a joint family. 14 Ind. Cas. 1000 (4) and 103 Ind. Cas. 322 (5), explained.

S. C. A. against the order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated November 17, 1937.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. S. Misra and P. N. Chaudhry, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against a decree of the learned District Judge of Gonda confirming a decree of the learned Civil Judge of that place.

Mahabir, father of the appellant and of respondent No. 1 and grandfather of respondent No. 2, had three wives. By his first wife he had a son named Baleshar whose son is Kandhaiya, plaintiff-respondent No. 2, by his second wife he had a son Sital Prasad plaintiff-respondent No. 1, the third wife was Dharma who gave birth to two sons, Sri Ram the present appellant and Ram Raj. The latter died issueless.

In 1909 Baleshar son of Mahabir brought a suit for partition of the family property and in that suit Dharma also claimed a one-sixth share under the Hindu Law. Baleshar's suit was decreed for partition of his one-sixth share and that one-sixth share was on his application partitioned by the Revenue Court. Ram Raj died seventeen or eighteen years ago. Dharma died on June 6, 1936 and about three months later, Mahabir also died. On his death the suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by Sital Prasad son of Mahabir, and Kandhaiya, son of Baleshar, for a two-thirds share of the shares left by Mahabir and Dharma.

The defence was two-fold. In the first place it was said that even after the partition in favour of Baleshar, Mahabir, his wife Dharma and his son Sri Ram, defendant, continued as members of a joint family so that on Mahabir's death the property devolved on Sri Ram by right of survivorship. In the second place it was contended that Mahabir had made a will on February 10, 1934, in favour of Sri Ram in respect of the entire property.

The learned Civil Judge upheld the will in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as regards Mahabir's own one-sixth share but gave the plaintiff a decree for two-fifths of Dharma's one-sixth share holding that on her death her share reverted to those from whose shares it was carved out. The defendant appealed but the learned District Judge upheld the decree of the trial Court.

The appeal has been argued before me on the first contention, namely, that in spite of the partition of Baleshar's share, Mahabir, his wife Dharma and Sri Ram his son continued joint so that the one-third share of Mahabir and Dharma came to the defendant-appellant by right of survivorship. It is now well-established that when one member of a joint family separates, there is no presumption either that the remaining members have also separated or they continue joint; it is a question of fact in each case to be proved like any other fact by evidence. In the case Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatacharla Moniagar (L. R. 52, I. A., 83) (1) it was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that when one member of a joint family has separated, an agreement by the remaining members to continue undivided may be inferred from the way in which their business is carried on after the separation. Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law, 8th Edition also says:—

"It is open to the non-separating members to remain joint and to enjoy as members of a joint family what remained of the joint family property after such partition. No express agreement is necessary for this purpose. The intention to remain joint may be inferred from the way in which their family business was carried on after their former co-parcener had separated from them, or it may be inferred from other conduct indicating such an intention." (Vide para. 328).

In the present case I think there is good evidence to show that after the partition of Baleshar's and Sital Prasad's shares, Mahabir continued joint with his son Sri Ram, defendant and his wife Dharma. In the first place the decree in the partition suit of Baleshar (Ex. 1) itself shows that Mahabir, Dharma and Ram Raj's shares were dealt with together as two-thirds share of the property. Then,

Ex. A-3 the partition proceedings of the Revenue Court also show that though Baleshar's two annas eight pies share was separated, the shares of all the other members of the family remained joint in the remaining thirteen annas four pies share. Further the Khewat for 1338 F. (Ex. A-6) shows that Sital Prasad and Kandhaiya's shares were separated but the ten annas eight pies share of Mahabir, Dharma and Sri Ram remained joint. The plaintiffs have nothing to show against this evidence. All that is contended is that in the partition suit of 1909 Dharma claimed a share and that a one-sixth share was allotted to her but the allotment of a share to Dharma was necessary for the purpose of determining Baleshar's share and is of no more significance. It is also natural that Mahabir should continue to live jointly with his last wife and her children.

In Pratapmull Agarwalla alias Pratapmull Bagaria v. Dhanabati Bibi alias Dhanoo Bibi, (1936 O. W. N. 1) (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that according to the Mitakshara Law, the mother or the grandmother is entitled to a share with sons or grandsons dividing the family estate between themselves but she cannot be recognized as owner of such share until the division is actually made as she has no pre-existing right in the estate except a right of maintenance. In Raoji Bhikaji Kondkar v. Anant Laxman Kondkar, (I. L. R., 42 Bom. 535) (3) in which a grandson of a Hindu had sued for partition against his grandmother and an uncle, the Bombay High Court also held that until the actual partition was effected no share in the estate passed to the ownership of the widow and therefore the share assigned to her remained an integral part of the estate available for division among the heirs of her husband. In the present case we have seen that though Dharma was allotted a one-sixth share in the partition yet her share was not partitioned so that she cannot be said to have become the owner of the one-sixth share allotted to her and it remained in the joint family constituted by Mahabir, Sri Ram, defendant, and herself.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs—respondents relies on para. 126 (2) of Mulla's Hindu Law in which reference has been made to the Privy Council case of Debi Mangal Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad, (L. R. 34 All., 234) (4) in which it was held that in cases governed by the Mitakshara the share allotted to a mother on partition is not her stridhan and that on her death it passes, not to her stridhan heirs but to the sons or grandsons out of whose portion it was taken out. He also relies on the case of Munni Lal v. Phula, (L. R. 50 All., 22) (5) in which the case of Debi Mangal Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (4) was followed. The rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council is obviously a general rule applicable to a case in which all the members of a joint Hindu family have separated. It cannot in my opinion, apply to a case in which though one of the members of a family has separated the mother has continued to live jointly with the other members, for in the latter case it is obvious that the members who continued joint will form a joint Hindu family and succession to the property held by them will be governed by the rules of Hindu Law applicable to a joint family.

I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any share in the one-sixth share allotted to Mst. Dharma in the partition of 1909.

The appeal is therefore decreed, the decrees of the lower Courts modified and the plaintiffs' suit against the defendant is totally dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 19 of 1939

MAUNG OHIT MAUNG AND ANOTHER

—RESPONDENT

Contempt of Courts Act (XII of 1926), s. 2—Sub-Divisional Magistrate holding enquiry under s. 176, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), is Court Subordinate to High Court within meaning of Act.

The words 'Subordinate Court' in the Contempt of Courts Act were used in a wide sense as including any Court over which the High Court has superintendence for the purposes of s. 85, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935, that it is to say, all Courts subject for the time being to its appellate jurisdiction. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate when holding an inquiry under s. 176, Criminal P. O., is acting as a Court Subordinate to the High Court for the purposes of the Contempt of Courts Act.

Mr. U Thein Maung, Advocate-General, for the King.

Mr. U E Maung, for the Respondents.

Mosely, J.—The preliminary point in this case is whether the proceedings in question which were criticized in the newspaper were the proceedings of a Court subordinate to the High Court. The Contempt of Courts Act, XII of 1926 as amended by the Govt. of Burma Adaptation of Laws Order of 1937 reads as follows:

"The High Court shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction, powers and authority, in accordance with the same procedure and practice, in respect of contempts of Courts subordinate to it as it has and exercises in respect of contempts of itself:

Provided that the High Court shall not take cognizance of a contempt alleged to have been committed in respect of a Court subordinate to it where such contempt is an offence punishable under the I. P. O."

Section 4 (m), Criminal P. O., defines "judicial proceeding" as including any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath. The proceedings in question were Criminal Miscellaneous Trial No. 4 of 1939 of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, where an inquiry or inquest was held into the cause of death of one Aung Gyaw under s. 176 (1), Criminal P. O. This inquest was held on a report made by a Police Officer under s. 174 of the Code, and was held in addition to the investigation held by the Police Officer. Section 176 enacts that the Magistrate holding the inquiry shall have all the powers in conducting it which he would have in holding an inquiry into an offence. He shall record the evidence taken by him in any of the manners hereinafter prescribed, that is to say, either summarily or fully, as in a warrant case. It appears, as a matter of fact, that the evidence was not recorded on oath nor read over to the witnesses, but that is immaterial, as all that is required by the definition of "judicial proceeding" is that it shall be one where evidence may be legally taken on oath.

A finding was arrived at by the Magistrate in this enquiry that Maung Aung Gyaw's death was due to a fracture of the skull caused by an injury received during a clash between the Police and the general crowd of people on the scene, and that death was due to misadventure. For the respondent, In the matter of Troylokhanath Biswas (1) was quoted, where it was held that a report made by a Magistrate in an inquest held by him could not be considered part of a "judicial proceeding" as that was defined in s. 4, Criminal P. O., of 1872. The definition there is "any proceeding in which any judgment, sentence, or final order is passed." The definition has since been changed, but as was said in a subsequent case, In re Laxminarayana Timmanna Karki (2) that former case being confined to the question whether the report was part of a judicial proceeding cannot be considered to be an authority for the proposition that the inquiry of which the report is not part under s. 176 is not a judicial proceeding. This last case was one of 1928 and governed by the wording of the present Criminal P. O. It was said there that the Magistrate is empowered to hold an inquiry into the cause of death, and if he does so, is invested with all the powers which he would have in holding an inquiry into an offence. That would bring the proceedings within the meaning of an 'inquiry' as defined by s. 4 (1) (k), Criminal P. O., and of a 'judicial proceeding' as defined by s. 4 (1) (m). It was pointed out that cl. (3), s. 435 of the Code of 1898 expressly excluded from the revisional powers of the High Court inquiries under s. 176. By so doing the Legislature, it was said, seemed to have recognized the fact that those proceedings being judicial would fall within the scope of s. 435, unless they were expressly excluded. Clause (3), s. 435, has since been repealed by Act XVIII of 1923, s. 116, and no longer forms part of s. 435 of the Code. The learned Judge said that in his opinion there was nothing to debar the High Court from exercising its jurisdiction under ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. O., in matters falling under s. 176. With these propositions of law we would respectfully concur. It might be added that ordinarily it would be rare for the High Court to interfere in revision with proceedings held under s. 176 of the Code, but the case dealt with in In re Laxminarayana Timmanna Karki (2) was an exceptional case where the Magistrate's proceedings had unwarrantably been adopted by the Collector and District Magistrate and that interference was itself put a stop to in revision by the High Court.

There can be no doubt, and it is not now seriously contended to the contrary, that the proceedings of the Magistrate holding this inquiry under s. 176 of the Code were judicial proceedings. In our opinion, a Magistrate holding judicial proceedings in which it is necessary for him to come to a finding as to the cause of death and as to the person or persons, if anybody, responsible for that death, must be considered to be acting as a 'Court.' 'Court' is not defined in the Criminal P. O. It is defined in the Evi. Act as including all Judges and Magistrates and all persons except arbitrators legally authorized to take evidence. 'Court of justice' has been defined in the I. P. O., s. 20, as denoting a Judge or body of Judges, and the word 'Judge' itself includes, vide s. 12, every person empowered to give in a criminal proceeding a definitive judgment. The illustration shows that a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in cases where he can pass sentence is a 'Judge' though not when he is merely committing to Sessions. It is clear that this definition, though sufficient for the purposes of the I. P. O., is not wide enough here. For the purposes of s. 195, Criminal P. O., (which lays down the cases where sanction of a Court is necessary for cognizance of an offence, such as perjury), it has frequently been held that the word 'Court' has a wider meaning than that defined in the I. P. O., see for example Nando Lal Ganguli v. Khetra Mohan (3) at p. 588; and must include a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorized to receive evidence bearing on that matter in order to enable it to arrive at a determination.

It is evident that a Magistrate, holding an enquiry into the cause of death, who must come to a finding as to what caused that death comes within this definition. We have no doubt that the word 'Court' is used in the Contempt of Courts Act in this latter wide sense. It is not contended that if the Court of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate was a Court for the purposes of this section, it was not a Court subordinate to the High Court. It is clearly a Court inferior to the High Court for the purposes of s. 435, Criminal P. O., and we have no doubt that the words 'Subordinate Court' in the Contempt of Courts Act were used in a wide sense as including any Court over which the High Court has superintendence for the purposes of s. 85, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935, that it is to say, all Courts subject for the time being to its appellate jurisdiction. We would, therefore, hold that the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate when holding an inquiry under s. 176, Criminal P. C., was acting as a Court subordinate to this Court for the purposes of the Contempt of Courts Act.

Contract—Proposal and acceptance—Rent—Landlord and tenant—Landlord sending notice of enhancement of rent—Tenant protesting—Tenant continuing in possession—Liability for enhanced rent.

It is not open to a landlord to claim enhancement of rent simply by serving a notice giving expression to his wish that he wants enhanced rent for the premises. There may be contract either express or implied by conduct. Where a landlord serves a notice demanding enhancement at a certain rate upon the tenant and the tenant agrees to pay that enhancement either in express terms or by his conduct in not protesting against it and continuing to occupy the premises, he becomes liable for the enhancement, but where he lodges a protest against the enhancement, whether that protest is based upon tenable or untenable grounds, it cannot be said that there has been any implied acceptance of the proposal on behalf of the landlord and no contract has come into existence and the tenant is not liable for the enhanced rate of rent. What is material is whether there is an acceptance of the proposal by conduct express or implied or not. 145 Ind. Cas. 647 (1), relied on.

O. R. App. of the order of the Judge Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated February 12, 1937.

Mr. M. L. Tilhari, for the Applicants.

Messrs. D. K. Seth and H. H. Zaidi, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The plaintiffs-opposite party filed a suit for recovery of Rs. 87 as arrears of rent for a shop situated in Goldarwaza Street, Lucknow. This suit was filed on January 19, 1937. Before filing the suit two notices had been issued by the plaintiffs against the defendants, one dated October 30, 1936 and the other dated November 22, 1936. The purport of these notices was to the effect that the defendants should accept to pay Rs. 20 as rent instead of Rs. 13 per month or they should vacate the shop on November 22, 1936 and in case the shop was not vacated the rent would be Rs. 50 per mensem. Exhibit A-6 dated December 22, 1936, shows that the defendants-applicants sent a sum of Rs. 50 to the opposite party on the allegation that four months' rent amounting to Rs. 52 was due out of which Rs. 2 had been paid before and the balance of Rs. 50 was being remitted. This money order seems to have reached the plaintiffs on December, 23, 1936, and refused on their behalf by their general agent on the ground that as the defendants had not complied with the notice dated October 30, 1936, the money order was being returned as unaccepted. It is further necessary to note that the defendants sent a written protest against enhancement of rent as well as ejectment by means of a registered letter dated December 23, 1936, (Ex. 8).

The Court below held that the defendants were defaulters as in reply to the notices for enhancement they set up tenancy for two years which was not established. It held that enhancement of rent up to Rs. 50 was unreasonable, and decreed the claim at Rs. 20 per mensem. Ultimately a decree for Rs. 57 was passed.

The defendants have come up in revision, and the learned Counsel for the applicants urges that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any enhancement and that the refusal by the plaintiffs of their money order, which reached them before they filed the suit, was wholly unjustified, and that the defendants should not be saddled with costs of the suit.

After hearing the Counsel for the parties, I am of opinion, that both the contentions of the learned Counsel for the applicants must be upheld. An agreement for payment of certain amount of rent is a matter of contract between the parties. It is not open to a landlord to claim enhancement of rent simply by serving a notice giving expression to his wish that he wants enhanced rent for the premises. There may be contract either express or implied by conduct. Where a landlord serves a notice demanding enhancement at a certain rate upon the tenant and the tenant agrees to pay that enhancement either in express terms or by his conduct in not protesting against it and continuing to occupy the premises, he becomes liable for the enhancement, but where he lodges a protest against the enhancement, whether that protest is based upon tenable or untenable grounds, it cannot be said that there has been any implied acceptance of the proposal on behalf of the landlord and no contract has come into existence. The law on the point has been very clearly discussed in Mohammad Noor v. Mirza Ashiq Beg reported in I. L. R. 9 Lucknow, p. 112, (1), which fully covers the present case. The facts of the present case clearly show that when enhancement was proposed by the landlord, the defendant-tenants protested against the enhancement of rent and their ejection from the premises by means of a written letter. The Court below seems to have been of opinion that there was no value in this protest as they had not succeeded in making out the ground of protest by evidence in the present case, but, as I have expressed above, the question whether the protest is based on good ground or bad ground is immaterial. What is material is whether there is an acceptance of the proposal by conduct express or implied or not.

In disagreement with the Court below, I therefore hold that the plaintiffs opposite-party were not entitled to enhancement. A decree for Rs. 50 only will, therefore, be passed instead of Rs. 57 as passed by the lower Court. This application is allowed to that extent.

As regards costs, the conduct of the opposite-party in refusing the sum of Rs. 50, which was sent to them by money order and which was the full amount of arrears, according to the terms existing between the parties at that time, was most unjustified. If the plaintiffs had accepted that money order even under the protest, their suit would have been dismissed in its entirety. My order in respect of costs, therefore, is that the plaintiffs opposite party will bear the costs of the defendants-applicants in this Court as well as the Court of trial.

D. Application allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 164—Admission of incriminating facts by accused to Magistrate under s. 164 or to Court during trial—Admissibility under ss. 18 to 21, Evidence Act (I of 1872).

Considerations which attach to the question of the admissibility of a confession made under s. 162, Criminal P. C., are different from the considerations which attach to a confession made before a Magistrate. The protective provisions of s. 162, which apply to statements by accused persons to the Police, or at least to accused persons who are at first witnesses, have their origin in the infirmities which it is believed, may affect the evidence of the Police in India as to statements made by accused persons. Such considerations are obviously not applicable to statements made to Magistrates either under s. 164 or s. 342. An admission of incriminating facts made by an accused person to a Magistrate under s. 164, or a statement made to the Court during the course of the trial is admissible in evidence for what it is worth against the person who makes it under ss. 18 to 21, Evi. Act, 1872. Ind. Cas. 6 (2), relied on.

Davis, J. C.—The appellant in this case is one Allahwarayo, son of Daryakhan, and he has been convicted by the Third Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad of the murder of one Bhaikhan and sentenced to transportation for life. The case of the prosecution is that Hayat, the son of the murdered man Bhaikhan, was on terms of intimacy with Ohangi, the sister of the appellant, and he at her request took her away and concealed her in the jungle. On the intervention of good men however Ohangi was restored to her relations but feeling between the two parties was bad. A few days before the offence Daryakhan, the appellant, his son, and Bachal, a cousin, waited for Hayat and his companion Sain Bakhsh as they returned from grazing goats, and Hayat only saved himself by taking refuge in a mosque. Bhaikhan, the murdered man, therefore forbade Hayat to take his goats in the jungle and took them himself. One Iso was grazing his goats near by and he was following his Rules of the Federal Court are framed to be kept and not to be broken; but they are framed for the purpose of assisting justice and not for the purpose of enabling it to be defeated. If, therefore, a strict adherence to the rules is likely to deprive a litigant of advantages which the Provincial Legislature clearly intended to give him, by the new Bihar Act of 1939 then the Court may properly exercise the dispensing power conferred by O. XXXVII, Federal Court Rules in order that substantial justice may be done. [p. 671, col. 2.]

If the justice of the case requires it, Federal Court is entitled to excuse the applicants from compliance with so much of O. X of the Federal Court Rules as requires them (1) to have the record prepared and printed in the High Court, and (2) to lodge their petition of appeal in the Federal Court within sixty days of the admission of the appeal by the High Court. [p. 672, col. 2.]

But if the litigants ask for the indulgence of the Federal Court, it is necessary for them to show the utmost good faith and to make a complete disclosure of all relevant facts. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Per Sulaiman, J.—There are several considerations which show that the provisions in the Privy Council Rules were never intended to be applicable to appeals to the Federal Court. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Rule 9 of the Privy Council Rules of February 9, 1920, has not been made applicable to Federal Court appeals and the High Court has no power to extend the time fixed by O. XLV, r. 7 of the Civil P. C.

Mr. Raghbir Singh, Advocate, Federal Court, instructed by Mr. T. K. Prasad, Agent, for the Applicants.

Mr. Janak Kishore, Advocate, Federal Court, instructed by Mr. G. Sahay, Agent, for the Respondents.

Gwyer, C. J.—This is an application under O. XXXVII of the Federal Court Rules for leave to be excused from compliance with the requirements of certain of the rules. The applicants were the defendants in the proceedings below and desire to appeal to the Federal Court from a decree obtained against them for a substantial amount in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, and upheld on appeal (with certain modifications) by the High Court at Patna on December 19, 1938. As in other cases which have recently been before this Court, the defendants had relied upon provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, but the High Court, following an earlier decision of their own, held that those provisions were void as being repugnant to an existing Indian Law. A certificate under s. 205 (1) of the Constitution Act was granted; and, the formal decree having been drawn up on March 13, 1939, the applicants petitioned the High Court to have their appeal to this Court "admitted" under the provisions of O. XLV of the Civil P. C., which has been extended, with appropriate modifications and adaptations, to appeals to the Federal Court by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. O. XLV, r. 7, as adapted, requires an appellant (inter alia), before his appeal can be "admitted," to deposit within a specified period the amount required to defray the expense of printing the record of the suit. In the present case the sum required (Rs. 253-3-0) has not been deposited before May 27, 1939, the date on which the period expired. On September 1, the applicants filed an application for an extension of the time for making the deposit, alleging absence of means as a reason for the delay. A Full Bench of the High Court heard this application with two others of the same kind, and by a majority held that they had power to extend the time. In the other two cases an extension was granted, but in the case of the present applicants it was refused on the ground that no application had been made until long after the time for making the deposit had expired and no explanation given for the delay except a vague statement that there was difficulty in obtaining the money.

In these circumstances the applicants applied ex parte to this Court asking to be "excused from compliance with the Rules of the Federal Court" and for an enlargement of time so that they might take steps to get the records transmitted to the Federal Court. It appeared to us that an important question was raised by the application and we therefore directed that the application should be renewed after notice had been given to the respondents. We pointed out however that we had no power to entertain any appeal from alienation took place where such co-parcener's cause of action has been barred. And by parity of reasoning, just as where the right of action possessed by the co-parceners existing at the time of the alienation if barred, is lost, not only by them but also by any member of the family later-born if they allowed the period of limitation to expire, so it is also lost if those persons who were in existence at the time of the alienation lost that cause of action by death before there came into existence the after-born child, for the after-born child has got no right of action in himself, no individual and separate cause of action that springs up immediately he is born, but his right to contest, if any, is derived from the right that those in existence at the time of the alienation who were not consenting had, and that right is lost to him when it is lost to them, and it is lost to them when they die, or, when they permit the period of limitation to expire."

There are similar observations in Sita Ram Singh v. Cheddi Singh (16), which my learned brother has cited. Moreover there is an authority of the Privy Council on the same point in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (14), to which my learned brother has also referred. I may quote what Stone, J., in Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao (12), just mentioned, has to say in connection with this Privy Council decision (p. 684*) :

"And, finally and, so far as we are concerned, conclusively, it was decided by the Privy Council in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Persad (14), that where there was a Hindu father with three sons at the time of the alienation which was in 1893, and there was born to him a fourth son in 1900, and a suit was brought to recover possession of the alienated property in 1920, and the right of action of the three sons living at the time of the alienation was barred because they had waited until beyond the three years after they attained majority, the right of action of the fourth son who had brought the action within the three years was barred also, the reasons being that he had no separate cause of action the cause of action was that of his elder brothers (as being the co-parceners in existence at the time of the alienation) and that cause of action was barred. So obviously, had he had a separate cause of action it would not have been barred."

Mr. Thakore has attempted to distinguish Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (14), and Sita Ram Singh v. Cheddi Singh (16), merely by saying that they were cases under Art. 126, not Art. 144. But there seems to be no principle on which it can be suggested that though an after-born son has not an after-born grandson has, a separate cause of action. It may be noted that in the passages in Mayne on which Mr. Thakore relies it is nowhere asserted that the grandson or other after-born co-parcener has a separate cause of action, and the learned commentator at the end of his discussion seems to commit himself to the proposition that a suit by the grandson, to be in time, must be brought within the period of limitation as determined in accordance with the decision in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (14). That seems to mean that the question of limitation for a suit is to be decided on the footing that the right to set aside an alienation, or to recover possession of property in spite of alienation is not an individual right but a corporate right.

If the plaintiffs cannot be said to have a separate and independent cause of action, their suits cannot be in time, for time commenced to run in 1909 and 1910 when the alienees got possession. The possession of the alienees was adverse to the whole of the co-parceners : Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (18). Mr. Thakore says that this case is distinguishable because it was a case where certain members of a joint Hindu family, alienated by sale and mortgage specified plots of lands, out of their share, giving boundaries of the plots and covenanting for title, and what was really decided was that the purchaser entered as owner and not as a co-sharer : see Biswanath Chakravarti v. Rabija Khatun (19). But according to the view taken in Bombay, at any rate, a person who purchases from a co-parcener property in excess of that co-parcener's share without justifying necessity is a trespasser in respect of the excess, see Balwantrao v. Ram Krishna (17), and that being so his possession must be regarded as adverse to all the co-parceners. It would be a contradiction in terms to say that he is a trespasser and at the same time a co-sharer with the other co-parceners. It follows from this that time was already running when the plaintiffs were born. Section 9 comes in their way, and moreover they cannot rely on s. 6 for the reasons given by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (14), at p. 72* :

"To the contention that by the cited ss. (i. e., 6 and 7) the period of limitation is extended for three years from the cessation of plaintiff No. 4's minority the answer is that by their express terms this extended period can only be claimed by a person entitled to institute the suit at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned. The fourth plaintiff does not come within this description, for at that time he was not in existence."

Since s. 6 cannot be availed of, the plaintiffs' suits are clearly time-barred under s. 3 of the Act. I agree therefore with my learned brother that the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

were not challenged by their father Keshav who died in 1921. Nagesh himself died in 1920. The suits from which these appeals arise were brought by the plaintiffs in 1934 to recover a two-thirds share in the property on the footing that the sales were only valid in respect of the undivided one-third share of Nagesh himself. The suits were brought within three years of the plaintiffs attaining majority and they relied on s. 6, Lim. Act. One of the defences to the suits was that the sales were for legal necessity and therefore binding on the whole family. But the suits have been dismissed on a preliminary issue of limitation, for the purpose of which it must be assumed that there was no legal necessity. The trial Court has held that the suits were barred by Art. 126, if not by Art. 144. It is quite clear that if Art. 126 applied the suits would be barred, for in that Article it is expressly provided that time runs from when the alienee takes possession. On this point Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Persad (14) is a clear authority, and the position is conceded. But the learned Counsel for the appellant says, rightly I think, that Art. 126 does not apply as it refers to cases of alienation by a father, not by a grandfather.

As Art. 126 does not apply, the residuary Art. 144 must apply according to which the starting point of limitation is when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. That, according to the argument for the appellants, could only take place so far as the present plaintiffs are concerned when they were born, and by reason of s. 6 the period of limitation is extended to three years from their attaining majority. Section 9, Lim. Act, does not apply, it is said, because the time did not begin to run as against the plaintiffs until they were born. In Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, para. 270, cl. (1), p. 317, the effect of the authorities is stated to be that an alienation by a co-parcener in excess of his powers can only be set aside by a co-parcener who was in existence or already conceived at the time of the alienation. In Mayne's Hindu Law, paras. 397 to 399, this view is not accepted, though it has to be admitted that there are observations in Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad (13) which seem to support it. However I think Mr. Thakore is right when he says that as we are dealing with an issue of limitation simpliciter, and not an issue as to the competence of the suits, we must assume that a suit by an after-born co-parcener to set aside an alienation may be maintained, if not barred by limitation.

The question is what is the cause of action for such a suit. Does an alienation by a co-parcener in excess of his powers give rise to a single cause of action common to all the co-parceners, or do all the co-parceners, including those born after the alienation, have a separate cause of action. Mr. Thakore's argument requires us to hold that each has a separate cause of action. But I think the balance of authority is definitely against that view. In Lachmi Narain v. Kishen Kishore (20), which is one of the cases relied upon by Mayne, it was held that if the co-parceners in existence at the time of the alienation do not sue within the period of limitation, the right of the alienee is perfected and a co-parcener born after that date is barred. That proposition is not, I think, disputed by the learned Counsel for the appellants. Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao (12), goes further. It was held there that if the co-parceners who are entitled to sue died without having brought a suit, a co-parcener who enters into the family thereafter is barred.

It is true that both these cases may be distinguished on the facts. The father and uncle of the present plaintiffs both died within 12 years of the alienation, so that the title of the alienee had not been perfected against them, and the plaintiffs were born and became co-parceners before they died and not after. All the same these rulings are quite inconsistent with the view that the co-parcener born after the alienation has a separate and independent cause of action, for, in that case, the decision must have been different. Stone, J., in Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao (12), is quite explicit as to the principle (p. 687*) :

"Whether or not an after-born son can effectively join with existing sons to attack or resist an alienation, the cause of action or the right to defend is a cause or right that was in those members of the family that were alive at the time of the alienation and were not consenting. The right to attack begins to exist at the moment of the alienation and at the highest (we do not decide whether it extends so high) exists in all members of the family that exist while such right of action is intact. If that right of action is lost by those members of the family who had it when it arose, e. g., those co-parceners who were in existence and not consenting at the time of the alienation, if that right of action is lost by them by the operation of the statute of limitation, it is lost to the family and does not live on in some child who becomes a co-parcener even during the lifetime of the co-parceners that existed when the

was an interest in an estate which to the extent of the alienor's share therein had already been alienated. Upon Counsel's own showing, it was an interest in a co-parcenary estate. Consequently, in my opinion, they were not entitled to any special or separate interest in that co-parcenary property, nor to an exclusive possession of any part of that property. That is the essence of a right which a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara acquires by birth in co-parcenary property. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with the rights of co-parceners there is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family: see Katama Natchier v. The Raja of Shivagunga (15). It is clear to my mind therefore that if the possession of the defendants could be regarded as adverse to the co-parcenary title or interest it would equally be adverse not only to the existing co-parceners but all those who acquired subsequently by birth an interest in that title. If that were so, the cause of action would be identical and the time would commence to run from the date on which the possession of the defendants become adverse to the co-parcenary estate: see also Sita Ram Singh v. Cheddi Singh (16).

As to the character of the possession of the alienee there is good authority for holding that his possession is prima facie adverse against the interests of those members of the family whose interests are not legally affected by the transfer: see Balwantrao v. Ramkrishna (17), Wasantrao v. Anandrao (1), and Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (18). Although the facts in the latter case were not quite similar, for it was a case where certain members of a joint Hindu family alienated by sale and mortgage specified plots of lands out of "their share," the ratio decidendi was that the alienee entered as owner and not as a co-sharer and was therefore in a position to defeat the title of the co-parceners under Art. 144, see observations in Biswanath Chakravarti v. Rabiya Khatun (19), where that case has been distinguished. There are observations in the judgment of the Chief Justice who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench in Bhavrao v.

Rakhmin (18), which are relevant to the question of the purchaser's position vis-a-vis the coparceners of his vendor. The learned Chief Justice said (page 141*):

"... as he enters as owner and in right of his conveyance, his possession is adverse to them also. In the eye of the law, all the co-parceners, though for the sake of convenience they may be in separate possession of portions of the joint estate are the owners of the whole estate including the alienated portion."

If the unity of title and possession of the co-parceners is assumed the alienee's possession is against that title, and all those interested in it would be barred having regard to the character of the interest they can claim. It has been urged that the nature of the acquisition of an interest by a Hindu co-parcener upon his birth ought to enable the latter to say that the defendant must assert and prove adverse possession against him individually within the statutory period. With respect I think that argument involves a fallacy as to the very nature of the interest acquired by birth, and therefore I am of the opinion, apart from the question of expediency and the argumentum ab inconvenienti which has been applied by the Allahabad High Court in rejecting the claim like that of the plaintiffs, that the suits are barred under Art. 144. The inconvenience or rather the danger of upsetting titles if the claim of the plaintiffs were upheld needs no demonstration. It has been animadverted upon in the judgment of Sulaiman, J., in Sita Ram Singh v. Cheddi Singh (16). He said (p. 883†):

"Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year. If the contention of the appellants were to be accepted, the result would be that in many cases such suits would never become barred by time inasmuch as new members may be born before the minority of an elder member is over."

With respect I agree with that reasoning. It would afford an additional ground for disallowing the contention of the appellants. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the suits instituted by the plaintiffs fail being barred by time, and that the three appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Broomfield, J.—Nagesh was the manager of a joint family consisting of himself and his sons Yeshwant and Keshav. He sold several of the family lands to the predecessors of the respondents in 1909 and 1910 and handed over possession. Plaintiffs are the sons of Keshav and were born in 1913 and 1914 respectively. The sales before his birth. The principle laid down in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachhpal (11) seems to be that the after-born son cannot impeach the alienation individually. But if a co-parcener, who was alive at the date of the alienation, files a suit on behalf of the family to set aside the alienation partially, the after-born co-parcener can participate in the benefit of the decree as a member of the joint family. The case would be entirely different if the alienation was good when it was made by a sole surviving co-parcener and another co-parcener was born thereafter. The ratio of the decisions seems to be that there must be some co-parcener other than the alienor alive at the time of the alienation capable of impeaching the transaction before another co-parcener is born: see Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao (12). There are however some observations in Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad (13), which suggest that the right to question an alienation of the joint family property is confined to the co-parceners who were alive at the date of the alienation. That was a case where two Hindus sued to set aside a sale by their grandfather of part of the property of the joint family. The purchase price, which was adequate, was applied to discharge certain mortgages executed by the plaintiff's grandfather before the plaintiffs were born. It was held that the mortgages, which were executed before the plaintiffs were born, were incumbrances upon the plaintiffs' interest acquired upon their birth. Lord Blanesburgh in delivering the judgment of the Board observed as follows (p. 445*):

"The respondents, plaintiffs in the suit, are sons of Awadh Behari. In 1895 (when the mortgages were executed) they were still unborn. This, as will later appear, is one of the most important facts in the case. It follows from it that these two mortgage-deeds have always been binding on the respondents. The only joint family estate to an interest in which they succeeded was an estate which to the extent of these two mortgages had already been alienated."

There are other observations to the similar effect (p. 450*):

"If the respondent Adita Prasad was not born at the date of the sale deed, that deed is binding upon him, and the suit impeaching it, so far as he is concerned, cannot be maintained."

Those observations might seem to conflict with what was stated in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachhpal (11). But it seems to me that having regard to the question we have to decide, it is unnecessary to pursue that point any further. I shall assume, as we are asked to assume that the plaintiffs acquired an interest in the property transferred and that the suit to impeach the transaction was maintainable. The ground of our decision therefore is narrowed down to this; whether the plaintiffs upon the facts stated were within time under Art. 144 in impeaching the alienation. In my opinion, the solution to that question must largely depend upon what would be regarded as the cause of action for a grandson to set aside the unauthorized alienation. That must again depend upon the character of the interest which he acquires in the joint family property which has been alienated before he was born. If the after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action, his right would be clearly barred under Art. 144. In Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (14), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in dealing with the question of the applicability of Art. 126 to a suit instituted to set aside an alienation by a father held that as one of the youngest plaintiffs was not in existence at the date of the alienation, no new cause of action arose upon his birth, and that consequently ss. 6 and 7, Lim. Act, would not prevent a suit from being barred under Art. 126, Sch. I to the Act. There the alienation was made by the plaintiffs' father in 1893. The alienor had four sons, three of whom were born at the date of the alienation. Plaintiff No. 4 was not born until 1900, and the suit was brought within three years of his reaching majority. Sir Lawrence Jenkins in delivering the judgment of the Board observed as follows (p. 72*):

"The cause of action arose on June 3, 1893, and it is from that date that the period of limitation is to be reckoned. Plaintiff No. 4's subsequent birth on November 30, 1900, did not create a fresh cause of action or a new starting point from which limitation should be reckoned."

It seems to me that the principle deducible from that case, which dealt with a suit by a son, would be equally applicable to a suit by a grandson governed by Art. 144. The interest to which the plaintiffs succeeded lature has omitted all reference to a grandson in Art. 196. That omission may appear curious, for there is no assignable reason for differentiating between the rights of a son to question his father's alienation and those of a remoter descendant in regard to his ancestor's transaction. Whatever that may be, Art. 126 must be subject to the rule of strict construction, and I think therefore that Article can have no application to this case.

The question is what is the appropriate Article which is applicable to this case. It is plain that Art. 127 would not be applicable to a suit between one member of a joint Hindu family and a stranger alienee who is in possession of the property by virtue of a transfer made by another member of the joint family including a father or manager. See Radhanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co. (3), and Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (4), at p. 682. The only other Article which may be considered is the residuary Art. 144. That Article applies to a suit for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not specially provided for, and the time from which the period begins to run is when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. Our attention has been drawn to the definition of the term "plaintiff" in s. 2, sub-s. (8), Lim. Act, which includes any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue. The description is obviously not intended to be exhaustive. Counsel's argument is that as the plaintiffs do not claim through their parents and as they have acquired a right in the co-parcenary property in their own independent right upon their birth, the cause of action is independent and separate, that therefore the defendants' possession could not become adverse to their interest, and that their exclusion could not be known to them until they were born. Before dealing with that argument it might be necessary to state that an alienation made by a father, who has sons then living, not being one for legal necessity or for payment of an antecedent debt, if made without their consent may be set aside according to the Bombay Law by any one of the sons partially so far as it affects his interest in the property: see Pandu Vithoji v. Goma Ramji (5), and Pandurang Narayan v. Bhagwandas Atma- ramshet (6). The question involved in the argument is this: Assuming that before the sons existing at the time of the alienation are all dead, a grandson is born, and assuming further that the alienation can be set aside by the grandson in his own right if it was not ratified before his birth, does the grandson acquire a cause of action independent of the non-alienating co-parceners alive at the date of the alienation? The point is not free from difficulty and the authorities on the subject are not quite reconcilable. For the purpose of the argument it may be conceded that the alienations in question were not valid. They were either void and not binding on the plaintiff's as contended for by the appellants or voidable as contended for by the respondents. With reference to the former view some authorities were cited such as Lachhman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (7), which was a case from Allahabad, and In the matter of Amirthalinga (8). For the latter we were referred to the character of the alienations by a manager of the family: see Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari (9), and Principles of Hindu Law by Sir Dinshaw Mulla, Edition 8, ss. 242-44, at pp. 271-74.

It is in my opinion, immaterial for the present purpose to define the exact nature of an alienation which is beyond the authority of the alienor. According to the trend of the authorities in this country such an alienation would not diminish the corpus of the joint family property to the extent to which it was unauthorized. If that were so, then an after-born co-parcener like the plaintiff could acquire a proportionate share in the interest which is not validity transfused. That is the view accepted in Hanmantappa v. Dundappa (10), and it is not inconsistent with the decision in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachhpal (11). Even so the question is can he impeach the alienation made alienees raised a common defence to these actions, and they contended that the alienor was the manager of the family, that the debts were for family necessity, including the payment of an antecedent debt, and that the suits were time-barred. A preliminary issue on the question of limitation was framed and decided by the trial Judge, who upholding the defence contentions, has dismissed the three suits which raise these appeals. It may be mentioned that the decrees in two of these suits in which the property was valued at less than Rs. 5,000 were taken in appeal to the District Court of Belgaum. The learned District Judge confirmed the decrees of the trial Court agreeing with that Court that the suits were barred either under Art. 126 or Art. 144, Lim. Act. From those decrees two second appeals have been filed in this Court. From the decree in the third suit, where the valuation of the property involved for the purpose of jurisdiction exceeded Rs. 5,000, an appeal has been directly filed here. All these appeals have been heard together.

On the question of limitation Counsel's argument is of a twofold character. He says that the lower Courts were wrong in applying Art. 126, Lim. Act, for that Article does not apply in terms to a suit to set aside an alienation made by the plaintiffs' grandfather, as it postulates a suit by a Hindu son governed by the Law of the Mitakshara to set aside his father's alienation of ancestral property. It is argued that in the absence of definition of a "son" in the Lim. Act which would include a "grandson," it would be improper to apply Art. 126. The second part of the argument is that the plaintiffs as co-parceners had acquired under the Mitakshara Law an interest in all the joint family property existing at the date of their birth, and that inasmuch as the plaintiffs' father's interest was not legally alienated, it subsisted at the time when the plaintiffs were born and the latter had acquired an interest in it. The argument proceeds that upon their birth the plaintiffs had a fresh cause of action for taking possession of the property comprised of the co-parcenary estate, and that Art. 144 would apply. Counsel has relied upon certain observations in Wasantrao v. Anandrao (1) at p. 943 that under Mitakshara Law the son does not claim through his father, but that the son's title is from his birth wholly independent of, and equal to, that of his father. The underlying assumption is that inasmuch as the plaintiffs' right to possession of their interest arose upon their birth the defendants' prior possession could not be adverse to their interest, for adverse possession is possession which is in contravention of the right of another to such possession.

In the consideration of the question of limitation it seems to have been assumed in the Courts below that the sales were not binding on the co-parceners of the alienor, including his sons. That assumption is also involved in the question raised here on the basis of the issue framed and decided in the trial Court. Dealing with the question as to the applicability of Art. 126, I might at once say that it would be wrong in the construction of the Article to draw an analogy from the doctrine of representation in Hindu Law or the doctrine of pious obligation of a son or a grandson to discharge the father's or grandfather's debt. It may be true that in the consideration of that obligation a son would include a grandson. But the inclusion of the grandson in the terms "son" is the result of the interpretation of the texts, particularly of Brihaspati: see Colebrooke, Vol. I, Chap. 5, p. 185, cited by Sir Dinshah Mulla in the Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 8, p. 337. Consequently, no general doctrine could be laid down that for all purposes, particularly in the interpretation of the Articles in the Lim. Act relating to Hindus the term "son" could be regarded as implying a grandson.

We were referred by Mr. Gumaste for the respondent to Masit Ullah v. Damodar Prasad (2), as an authority for the view that the term "son" in Art. 126 as in the compound putra pautrad is indicative of a class and not of an individual alone. Their Lordships in that case were dealing with the texts on Hindu Law in reference to the question as to the liability of the great-grandson under that law for the payment of the great-grandfather's debts in proportion to their relative shares in the joint family property. It is erroneous in my opinion, to draw an analogy from the interpretation of those texts and to argue that the Legislature perhaps had in mind the doctrine of representation in Hindu Law when enacting Art. 126. Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 126, 127, 144 —Art. 126, applicability to suit to set aside alienation made by grandfather—Art. 127 whether applies to suits between member of joint Hindu family and stranger alienee from another—Suit by Hindu to set aside alienation by grandfather made before his birth, without justifying necessity, 12 years after alienation, if barred—Hindu Law—Alienation—Father—No legal necessity—No consent of sons—Any son, if can set it aside as far as it affects his interest—Nature of co-parcenary property.

It would be wrong in the construction of the Art. 126, Lim. Act to draw an analogy from the doctrine of representation in Hindu Law or the doctrine of pious obligation of a son or a grandson to discharge the father's or grandfather's debt. Consequently, no general doctrine could be laid down that for all purposes, particularly in the interpretation of the Articles in the Lim. Act relating to Hindus the term "son" could be regarded as implying a grandson. Article 126 must be subject to the rule of strict construction, and that Article can have no application in terms to a suit to set aside an alienation made by a person's grandfather, as it postulates a suit by a Hindu son governed by the Law of Mitakshara to set aside his father's alienation of ancestral property.

Article 127 would not be applicable to a suit between one member of a joint Hindu family and a stranger alienee who is in possession of the property by virtue of a transfer made by another member of the joint family including a father or manager. Radhanath Dass v. Gisborne & Co. (3) and Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (4), relied on. [p. 665, col. 1.]

An alienation by a co-parcener in excess of his powers gives rise to a single cause of action common to all the co-parceners, and the co-parceners, including those born after the alienation, have not a separate cause of action. The cause of action would be identical and the time would run from the date on which the possession of the alienee became adverse to the co-parcenary estate. Consequently a suit by a Hindu to set aside an alienation of the joint family property made before his birth by his grandfather without any justifying cause is barred by limitation if instituted more than 12 years after the date of the alienation. [p. 668, col. 2.]

An alienation made by a father, who has sons then living, not being one for legal necessity or for payment of an antecedent debt, if made without their consent may be set aside according to the Bombay law by any one of the sons partially so far as it affects his interests in the property. 50 Ind. Cas. 765 (5) and 55 Ind. Cas. 544 (6), relied on. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and K. G. Datar, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 2.

Wassoodew, J.—The only question, which, in these three appeals, one (No. 332 of 1936) from a decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, the second and the third (Nos. 402 and 403 of 1937) from the appellate decrees passed by the District Judge of Belgaum, was dealt with in the Courts below and which arises for consideration before us, is whether a suit by a Hindu to set aside an alienation of the joint family property made before his birth by his grandfather without any justifying cause is barred by limitation, if instituted more than 12 years after the date of the alienation. The facts which raise that question can be shortly stated. The appellants-plaintiffs were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. Their grandfather Nagesh, who was along with his sons Keshav and Yeshvant in possession of the joint family property, effected sales of distinct parcels of that property to different individuals including the respondents in these appeals between 1909 and 1910. The plaintiffs, who are the sons of Keshav, were not born at the date of the alienations. Plaintiff No. 1 was born in 1913, and plaintiff No. 2 in 1914. Their father Keshav died in 1916, and their uncle Yeshvant, who was childless, died in 1921. It may be noted that during the lifetime of Yeshvant and Keshav they did not impeach the alienations in so far as they affected their interests in the joint family property. The alienees were in peaceful possession of the property sold to them till the date of the suits from which these appeals arise and which were all filed on the same day, namely, June 5, 1934. It is common ground that these suits were well within three years of the plaintiffs attaining majority.

It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the sales were without legal necessity and there was no antecedent debt, except of a very small amount, which could have been easily paid off by the sale of a portion of the alienor's interest in the joint family property, and that therefore those sales were not binding on the interests of the alienor's sons or grandsons subsequently born. The cising ordinary caution would not be likely to assume that the chewing tobacco sold by the respondent was manufactured by the appellants.

Their Lordships see no reason to doubt the finding of the trial Judge that the appellants had acquired a proprietary right in respect of their elephant trade mark with reference to their cigarettes and Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco. Nor are they of opinion that the appellants' right is confined only to the sale of the same kind of cigarettes and of Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco; for, in the absence of strong evinence to the contrary, such a mark would ordinarily extend to protect goods so similar in kind to the goods actually put upon the market by the trader in connexion with the trade mark that it is an almost inevitable inference that such goods would be manufactured or marketed by the trader. In other words the probability of deception in the case of goods of a closely similar kind to those actually marketed by the plaintiff would be proved in the course of establishing the trade mark. No such inference could be made in the present case as regards the respondent's goods, since the chewing tobacco he sells differs widely in appearance and in use from the goods sold by the appellants.

Some of the learned Judges in India seem to have taken the view that it was for the Court to decide as to the area of trade protected by the appellants' trade mark; that is, to answer the question whether the use of the trade mark on goods not closely similar in character to the appellants' goods would be likely to deceive. A number of well known authorities were cited which it was thought would throw light on the correct answer to this question. Their Lordships must repeat that this question is one of fact on which evidence is essential. The question differs from the question whether a particular mark or name is an imitation or a colourable imitation of a mark or name used by the plaintiff. There the Judge has before his eyes the materials for a decision, and in some cases it cannot be doubted that the Judge can himself decide on the degree of resemblance or on the materiality of alleged differences of the marks or words (North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co. (6), Payton & Co., Ltd. v. Snelling, Lampard & Co., Ltd. (7), per Lord Macnaghten at p. 635). If the decision of the Court of Appeal in London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell (8) or some of the dicta in that case are contrary to these decisions, it cannot be relied upon. On the other hand there are many trade mark and passing-off cases which cannot be decided by a visual comparison of the rival marks or names and must depend on the evidence of witnesses. That indeed is nearly always the case when there are factors involved other than the mere resemblance of the marks or words. In the present case a Judge may be entitled to form his own view as to the resemblance of the elephants in shape and colour or on the differences between them; but their Lordships are of opinion that a Judge cannot properly decide except upon evidence as to the classes or kinds of goods which are protected by the appellants' mark, or, to be more precise, on the question whether purchasers of chewing tobacco from the respondent in the packets and tins above described are likely to be misled into thinking that that article is manufactured or put upon the market by the appellants. This question is one which does not depend on a matter of resemblance. As already pointed out, the appellants have no monopoly in the elephant as a trade mark. The English cases may be instructive as showing the way in which such a question should be approached, but the actual decisions depending as they do on what purchasers would be likely to think in England are not a guide in India.

Their Lordships are not disposed to attach much importance to the fact that the appellants were unable to call evidence of actual deception, and they are well aware of the fact that the procuring of evidence of probability of deception is often a difficult and trouble-some task. On the other hand the appellants had to establish their case, and in the complete absence of evidence on the point to which attention has been above directed, their Lordships must come to the conclusion that they failed to do so.

articles, and any other matters which will assist the Court to decide whether deception is probable. Evidence of actual deception may be available and if available may be very valuable. There is no such person as an expert in human nature, and it is now well-settled that a witness cannot be called to say that it is likely that purchasers of the goods will be deceived. This can only be a matter of opinion formed after the dispute has arisen and too often without any judicial consideration of the opposing contentions. On the other hand a person who is accustomed to buy the articles in question may be called to say that he would himself be deceived, and cross-examination will often show what weight should be attached to such a statement.

It seems desirable to state the views of their Lordships on some of the topics of criticism of the views of the learned Judges which were urged on behalf of the appellants. Their Lordships think that the test of comparison of the marks side by side is not a sound one, since a purchaser will seldom have the two marks actually before him when he makes his purchase; and marks with many differences may yet have an element of similarity which will cause deception, more especially if the goods are in practice asked for by a name which denotes the mark or the device on it. This has been settled in England since the case of Seizo v. Provezende (3), where there will be found some remarks by Lord Cranworth, L. C. very relevant to this matter. He also pointed out (at p. 197*) that the adoption by a rival trader of a mark which would cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of the first owner as the actual copy of his device. This same view was taken in the case of Johnston v. Orr Ewing (4), a case relating to the use of two elephants on tickets placed upon goods for sale in India. (See as to the effect of the differences between the tickets the remarks of Selborne, L. C. at pp. 224† et seq.) Further, it is not an answer to the claim of a trader who has established, as the appellants have done in the present case, the right to a trade mark (e. g. a device or a fancy word) to say that, apart from the device or the word, the labels or containers of the rival trade are very different from those of the trade mark owner. It may be observed that, if it were so, such a trade mark would be of little value, for its use by several traders would soon result in its becoming common to the trade. (See Wotherspoon v. Currie (5), and Johnstone v. Orr Ewing (4).) In the present case there may well have been persons who knew of the reputation of the appellants' "elephant mark" goods, but were illiterate or did not know or did not remember the particular get-up of their goods; and again the differences of labels and get-up might have been supposed to have been made by the appellants themselves in putting a different or cheaper article upon the market. Their Lordships, however, are not to be understood as saying that the differences in get-up are immaterial; for they must inevitably form an element in considering the question of probability of deception by the use of the mark.

It is a remarkable feature of the present case that there was neither evidence of actual deception, nor any evidence from members of the public that they themselves would be deceived. It is to be observed that the important issue was, not whether the use of the elephant on smoking tobacco or on cigarettes would be likely to cause deception; but whether its use on chewing tobacco in the circumstances in which that article is sold by the respondent would be likely to cause deception, that is, to cause ordinary purchasers to purchase the chewing tobacco of the respondent in the belief that it was manufactured by or put upon the market by the appellants. The difficulty of answering this question in the affirmative in the absence of evidence as to the probability of deception is apparent from the fact that, apart from the trial Judge, who was not satisfied that there was any point of resemblance between the trade mark used by the appellants and that used by the respondent, King, J., in the High Court alone thought that the probability of deception would exist whilst Iqbal Ahmad, J., took the other view and Niamat Ullah, J., (to whom the matter was referred under cl. 27 of the Letters Patent of the High Court having regard to the difference of opinion between the two Judges in the High Court) came to the conclusion in his careful judgment that whilst some ignorant and indiscriminating persons might be deceived, persons exer-peared on a red background. These goods were well known and asked for throughout India as "Elephant Mark," "Hathi Markha," "Lal Hathi" and the like.

The defendant has been manufacturing and selling chewing tobacco since 1926, that is, some three years before the action was brought. He sells in packets and in tins. The commodity in the packets is intended for use with chunan (lime), that in the tins for use as an addition to pan (betel). Certain ingredients are added to give fragrance to the article. The tobacco is grown in India. Both the packets and the tins have the picture of an elephant on them, not unlike the elephant used by the plaintiffs though there are differences, particularly in colour, which is black or red as used by the appellants and white as used by the respondent. In other respects the packets and the tins are quite unlike the containers in which the appellants' goods are put upon the market, and the respondent's labels bear the firm name "Rama & Company," while the appellants' goods bear their own name. The appellants, of course, did not contend that any persons would purchase the respondent's chewing tobacco in the belief that it was smoking tobacco manufactured by the appellants. Their contention was a very different one; they said that having regard to the reputation they had acquired in India in connection with smoking tobacco and cigarettes sold under the elephant trade mark and frequently asked for as "elephant" tobacco or "elephant" cigarettes the use of the elephant on the respondent's chewing tobacco was calculated to lead persons buying that article to believe that it was manufactured or put upon the market by the appellants.

There is no statutory law in British India relating to trade marks, and the law which is applied there on the subject is substantially the same as that applied in England before the Trade Marks Act, 1905. It is, however, plain that conditions peculiar to India must be borne in mind in applying any doctrine of English Law, and that English decisions which turn or partly turn on questions of fact—as do most cases of common law trade marks and passing-off—can only be applied with care and circumspection. The general principle, founded as it is on justice and equity, is the same in both countries. "No man," as James L. J. said in the case of Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (1), "is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man ; and no man is permitted to use any mark, sign or symbol, device or means, whereby without making a direct false representation himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate purchaser."

It is clear that the right of property that may be acquired in such a trade mark is based on the proved association in the market of the device, name, sign, symbol or other means in question with the goods of the plaintiff, so that the use by the defendant on such goods of the trade mark will amount—whether the defendant intends it or knows it or not—to the false representation that the goods are manufactured or put on the market by the plaintiff. There can obviously be no monopoly in the use of the trade mark. A manufacturer of cigarettes under an undoubted trade mark such as an animal, or any other device, cannot legally object to the use of the identical mark on, say, hats, or soap, for the simple reason that purchasers of any of the latter kinds of goods could not reasonably suppose, even if they were well-acquainted with the mark as used on cigarettes, that its use on hats or soap denoted that these goods were manufactured or marketed by the cigarette manufacturer: see Somerville v. Schembri (2). Those would be simple cases, but some much more difficult ones can be suggested. If a manufacturer of a special kind of smoking tobacco under a trade mark seeks to restrain the use of it on cigars, or on a very different kind of smoking tobacco, or on cigarettes, or on snuff, or on chewing tobacco, or on tobacco in some form sold for use as a weed killer—all these things being made of tobacco—questions, sometimes of great difficulty, may arise. It is, however, very important to observe that each of these questions will be a question of fact to be decided on the evidence adduced. The vital element in such a case is the probability of deception. This may depend on a number of matters as well as the question of similarity of the marks or of the get-up. Witnesses can be called to prove the circumstances and the places in which the articles are sold, the classes of persons who buy them, and whether they include persons who are illiterate or ignorant or the reverse, the manner in which the public are accustomed to ask for the Messrs. F. E. Bray, K. C. and J. Mould, for the Appellants.

Viscount Maugham.—This appeal is against a decree of a Division Bench of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad dated March 13, 1935. That Court affirmed the decree of the Additional District Judge of Cawnpore in an action brought by the appellants to restrain infringement of trade mark rights and passing-off. At the hearing before their Lordships the respondents were not represented; but the case of the appellants was placed before the Board with equal ability and fairness by their Counsel.

The appellants are manufacturers and sellers of cigarettes and of tobacco described as "Virginia Bird's Eye" smoked in pipes. These goods are marketed in a European style. Both the said cigarettes and the tobacco have from a date long before 1922 been sold in India (by the appellants and their predecessors) in packets and in tins bearing a mark the distinguishing feature of which is the representation of an elephant and the packets and tins of cigarettes have also borne the designation "Elephant Cigarettes." Upon the tobacco the representation of the elephant has appeared in red and upon the cigarettes the representation of the elephant has ap-

Parties knew that the hundis had not been retired and sat together discussing what was to be done because the hundis had not been retired. On the question of interest, Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan claims 10 per cent. but I can see no reason why anything more than the legal rate of 6 per cent. permissible under the Negotiable Instruments Act should be allowed.

Before concluding it remains to notice an objection taken by Mr. Sikri on behalf of Rai Bahadur Ishar Das that the signature of the endorser, that is the Company did not appear on the face of the eight hundis. Five of these hundis are signed by Gwash Kaul without saying who Gwash Kaul is and the others are signed as manager and not on behalf of the Company. He refers to s. 27, Negotiable Instruments Act, and says that a general authority to transact business does not confer upon the agent the power of accepting or endorsing bills and in this connection quotes a decision of the Privy Council reported in Sadasukh Jankidas v. Kishen Pershad (6). In the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, it was held that on a fair interpretation of the document the real name of the person liable under the bill was not disclosed. In the present case, it appears to me on a fair interpretation of the document that the name of the person liable is disclosed. The drawer and the drawee are the same and it is only the endorser about whose name there could be the slightest doubt. The person primarily responsible for re-payment was Muhammad Yusaf and about his identity no one could entertain the slightest doubt. So far as the endorsers are concerned, there can be no doubt in the minds of the persons now being charged with liability, namely, the proprietors of the Attock Timber Trading Company, that Gwash Kaul, who had acted in this and in numerous other similar transactions, was signing on behalf of the Company as the Manager thereof. No case has been cited at the Bar nor have I been able to discover any in the law reports where such an objection was successful on behalf of the endorsers; in other words, it is only when there was some doubt regarding the identity of the drawer that the matter was agitated before the Courts.

one Mohan Lal, when drawing a hundi, had described himself as the Acting Superintendent of the Private Treasury of His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad, and their Lordships held that this was a description of the person drawing the hundi, and not as one purporting to charge the Nizam with the liability as his agent. As I have said already, the Privy Council case is distinguishable on the ground that the identity of Muhammad Yusaf, the drawer, is not in doubt and further that a consistent course of conduct of parties shows that Gwash Kaul had endorsed these and many other similar hundis as Manager, and no dispute regarding the liability of the Company had been raised so far. I would hold therefore that there is no substance in the objection taken by Mr. Sikri, as on a fair interpretation of these particular hundis the liability of the principal, that is the drawer, is disclosed and it is quite clear on the evidence that Gwash Kaul endorsed these hundis under the implied directions and with the explicit knowledge of his principals.

In these circumstances I would reverse the judgments of the learned Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, in both the cases and accept both these appeals with costs throughout. I would make these costs payable to the plaintiff-appellants jointly and severally by Muhammad Yusaf respondent and by Rai Bahadur Ishar Das respondent in view of the attitude that he has taken in this litigation. Thus, I would leave the respondents other than Muhammad Yusaf and Rai Bahadur Ishar Das to bear their own costs.

ment in this case destroyed the endorser's remedy without the consent of the endorsers. It is only when these conditions are satisfied that s. 40, Negotiable Instruments Act, comes into operation. I would therefore hold that there has been no such delay which would avoid the responsibility of the endorsers on these hundis.

The next main line of argument based on the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge was that there had been no notice of dishonour in this case and because of this also the endorsers stood discharged. Section 98, Negotiable Instruments Act, enumerates the conditions when notice of dishonour is not necessary. Under cl. (a) of that section notice can be dispensed with by the party entitled thereto. Under cl. (c) notice is not necessary when the party charged could not suffer damages for want of notice, and under cl. (g) notice is again not necessary when the party entitled to notice with the knowledge of all the facts unconditionally promises to pay. In an earlier part of this judgment, I have indicated that both before and after maturity the Attock Trading Company knew of all the facts, first that the hundis were going to fall due very soon and that after maturity they had not been retired. On December 23, 1930, the Company was informed that the hundis were about to fall due apparently in anticipation. Such notice is not sufficient in law as the notice must be after dishonour but on April 8, 1931, Mr. Daulat Ram Bhalla, Manager of the Bank, wrote saying that the hundi of Karam Chand Kishan Chand and five of the hundis of Muhammad Yusaf had not been retired and asked for an early adjustment of the account. On February 12, 1931, the Peshawar Branch wrote to the Lahore Branch of the Bank that with reference to a letter of January 30, 1931, bills for Rs. 14,195 were lying still unpaid. In January 1931, reference was made to the fact that the drawee of the hundis did not turn up for payment. Copies of both letters were sent to the Attock Timber Trading Company. It was after this that the manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company wrote to the Bank at Lahore, asking the Bank to present the hundis to the drawers through the Notary Public. The accounts showing the debits for these hundis were acknowledged by the manager. On July 6, 1931 the Bank wrote to the Attock Timber Company (Ex. P-15) saying that the hundis including the hundis in suit were overdue and in spite of the repeated requests had not been retired. Again, on July 15, 1931, another request is made to retire these hundis and in fact, as stated already, when efforts to get the hundis retired failed, a suit was brought at the request of the Company.

These facts indicate that a notice of dishonour had in fact been given and the manager of the Bank on the one side and the manager of the Company together with some of the proprietors including Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, who alone pleads want of notice, came and had discussions together regarding the non-payment of these hundis. It is significant that on May 25, 1931, Rai Bahadur Ishar Das wrote to the manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company, saying that if Muhammad Yusaf did not pay, the hundis should be sent back duly endorsed to him to enable him to recover the money if need be by suit. In the face of this it appears to me that the position taken up by Rai Bahadur Ishar Das is little short of frivolous. In terms of s. 98, it appears to me that in the circumstances disclosed above not only was notice of dishonour actually given but were in any case dispensed with by the Company, that the Company and particularly Rai Bahadur Ishar Das did not suffer any damage for want of such notice and having regard to the acknowledgments of the account there has been an unconditional promise to pay on the part of the Company, amongst other things, as evidenced by the endorsement made by the Notary Public on the hundis. Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla, Managing Director of the Bank, stated that a number of times Rai Bahadur Ishar Das came to him in connection with these hundis but never said that he was not liable to pay off these hundis. On the other hand, he accepted the liability of all the share-holders of these hundis which both he and Raja Sir Daya Kishan Kaul said would either be paid by the drawees or themselves. This statement of Lala Mulk Raj stands unchallenged and I see no reason whatsoever for not believing it fully. I would hold therefore that not only the notice of dishonour but the subsequent acknowledgments, the unqualified promises to pay and the absence of any proof of damage for want of notice would dispense with such notice even if in fact it had not been given.

Mr. Sikri urged in this connection that a mere demand was not sufficient. In my opinion, there has been something much more than a mere demand in this case.

from this that the suit was brought at the request of the partners and that the defendant now objecting was taking a personal interest in the matter. It is not without force therefore as Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan has argued that this conduct amounts to a waiver of a right to take advantage of any alleged default in presentment of the bill for payment.

For the reasons stated above, it seems to me that under the provisions of s. 76, Negotiable Instruments Act, no presentation was necessary because: (1) the drawer and the drawee were the same person; (2) that the drawee had no place of business at Lahore and was not to be found at Lahore on the maturity of the bills (3) that the endorser had unconditionally acknowledged this debt and therefore engaged to pay it notwithstanding non-presentment (4) that not only had they promised to pay, but had waived their right, if any; and I would hold therefore that not only was presentment not legally necessary, but in so far as presentment could be made it was made through the Notary Public though made a considerable time after the maturity of the bills.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that under s. 40 the plaintiff Bank had impaired the endorser's remedy by delay. It was argued on behalf of the defendants that there had been delay in the institution of the suit. I have shown above that the Attock Timber Trading Company had guaranteed payment in case of default and in this aspect it was not necessary to sue Muhammad Yusaf at all before maintaining a suit against the endorser. Mr. Achhru Ram argued in this connexion that no plea had been taken by the plaintiff Bank that the suit was based on any guarantee and therefore the position that the Company was a guarantor had been, by implication given up. He urged that there was merely a proposal regarding a guarantee which was not accepted. I am not impressed with this argument. If a suit was eventually brought with the knowledge and at the request of the defendants it hardly lies in the mouth of these defendants to turn round afterwards, plead that the suit was brought too late and thus take the benefit of a technical objection. It appears to me that a suit was brought by the plaintiff Bank in order to oblige their clients and even if the plaintiff Bank thereby denied to themselves a short and simple remedy in order to oblige their clients, I cannot see that there had been any waiver of that legal position. But it must be remembered that this letter of guarantee is put forward only as one item in the chain of events showing that there was no necessity to present these hundis and even if it be held that it was necessary for the plaintiff specifically to plead this letter of guarantee as the basis of a suit based on such a guarantee the suit not being so based, the omission of the plaintiff to refer to this letter does not affect the suit as laid. I have already held that there was no necessity to present these hundis and in this aspect a further discussion of this point becomes unnecessary.

It is significant that there is little or no proof of deterioration of the financial condition of Muhammad Yusaf. The fact that Rai Bahadur Ishar Das is pressing for a suit to be brought is indicative rather of the fact that the money due on the hundis was recoverable from Muhammad Yusaf by suit. When he writes that Muhammad Yusaf would only pay if pressure was brought to bear upon him, again the indication is that the money was recoverable if pressure was employed. Rai Bahadur Ishar Das in his statement as a witness stated on February 17, 1935, that he knew both Karam Chand and Muhammad Yusaf personally and their financial position was quite sound in 1930 and in early 1931. He goes on to say that he has been informed that they "were not doing quite so well now," but he could not state since when their condition had deteriorated. Pandit Gwash Kaul stated on September 19, 1935, that he went to Peshawar and then said that the financial condition of Muhammad Yusaf "was becoming weak." But he says that Muhammad Yusaf told him that the hundis having been transferred by the Company in favour of the Bank the Company had no right to claim payment from him. This does not indicate that at that time Muhammad Yusaf was unable to pay, but merely took up the position that the hundis had been purchased by the Bank. Raja Sir Daya Kishan Kaul when asked about the financial condition of Muhammad Yusaf stated on September 20, 1935, that he had no personal knowledge about this matter. It seems to me therefore that it has not been proved that the delay by the Bank in suing has prejudiced the position of the Company. As I have said before, the suit was brought at the request of the proprietors of the Company and it cannot therefore be said that the holder of a negotiable instru-was not necessary and the suit was maintainable. Section 69 enacts that a bill of exchange payable at a specified place must, in order to charge the maker or drawer, be presented for payment at that place. The words "that place" here can only mean Lahore and for this reason also it seems to me that there was no necessity to present these hundis at Peshawar, as Muhammad Yusaf was not discoverable at Lahore and had no place of business or residence there.

Section 76 (b) of the Act enacts that no presentment is necessary as against any party sought to be charged therewith if he has engaged to pay notwithstanding non-presentment. It seems to me that in the present case there is sufficient material on the record to hold that Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, the only defendant who is taking this objection seriously, had undertaken unconditional liability to pay in case of default. The letter of guarantee, dated October 31, 1930, signed by Gwash Kaul as manager would bind all his principals if he had authority, as in my opinion he had authority to so bind. The hundis were protested through Rai Bahadur Naranjan Das, Notary Public. His endorsement is to the effect that he did cause due and customary presentment to be made at Peshawar by a registered letter to Muhammad Yusaf as drawer and the Attock Timber Trading Company as endorser of the said hundis. "Endorsers state, if the drawer does not pay we will pay at the request of the manager." This again imports a promise to pay within the meaning of s. 76 (b) of the Act. Further, the acknowledgments of the accounts of the Bank were debts outstanding and were made by Gwash Kaul as the manager. These again import unconditional acknowledgments to pay. In Punjab Co-operative Bank, Lahore v. Parma Nand (5), it was held that a letter by the defendant confirming the loan made to him on a promissory note amounted to a promise to pay within the meaning of this section. A promise need not be expressed so long as it is clearly deducible from the language employed by the parties or their conduct. Under s. 76 (c), Negotiable Instruments Act, if a party after maturity of a bill and with the knowledge that the instrument had not been presented promises to pay the amount due thereon, no presentment is necessary nor is it necessary where the party concerned waives his right to take advantage of any default in presentment for payment. It seems to me that both the letter of guarantee and the acknowledgment of balances by the manager are undertakings to pay notwithstanding non-presentment and are unconditional promises within the meaning of cls. (b) and (c) of this section. The matter however does not rest here.

Rai Bahadur Ishar Das and the manager of the Company with the knowledge of the fact that Muhammad Yusaf had not retired the hundis at maturity requested the plaintiff Bank to bring a suit against Muhammad Yusaf. For this purpose, several interviews took place and Gwash Kaul actually went to Peshawar in this connection. On December 23, 1930, the manager of the Bank wrote to the Attock Timber Trading Company mentioning one of these hundis as being overdue in Ex. P-11, and again in P-10 of the same date referred to four other hundis in suit which were about to fall due. On April 18, 1931 Gwash Kaul, manager of Attock Timber Trading Company wrote to the plaintiff Bank requesting them to ask their Peshawar branch to present the hundis to the drawer at Peshawar through the Notary Public on which the Bank asked the manager by letter dated April 20, (Ex. P-13) to come and discuss the matter. There is evidence that some discussion went on and on May 25, Rai Bahadur Ishar Das wrote to the manager, Attock Timber Trading Company asking him to go himself to Peshawar and bring the utmost pressure to bear upon Muhammad Yusaf to recover the amount due on the hundis, saying that unless this was done there was no hope of an early recovery, and finally on February 17, 1932 Pandit Gwash Kaul wrote to the plaintiff Bank (Ex. O. 13) saying that he was instructed by the partners of the Company to request the bank to kindly take legal action against the party concerned with reference to the hundis of Haji Muhammad Yusaf. It was after this that the hundis were protested through Rai Bahadur Naranjan Dass, Notary Public. Gwash Kaul made a specific request again on March 20, 1933 (Ex. O-14) that a suit may be filed against Haji Muhammad Yusaf and Messrs. Karam Ohand-Kidar Ohand and it was on this request that a suit was actually filed on April 5, 1933. It is significant that on May 31, 1933, Rai Bahadur Ishar Das wrote a letter to Gwash Kaul reminding him of the next date of hearing in the suit and hoping that he would take suitable action in the matter. It is clear conferred this authority, are sufficient to establish the factum of this authority particularly when neither this defendant nor any other has taken the trouble to disprove the resolution cited by the production of the Directors' Minute Book. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) From what has been stated above, it appears to me to have been conclusively established not only by the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff but also by the evidence of some of the defendants including Lala Harkishan Lal and Raja Sir Daya Kishan Kaul and also from a consistent course of conduct that Pandit Gwash Kaul had been acting as the manager of the partnership for a long time to the knowledge of all the partners, had been dealing with all the affairs of the partnership including the endorsing of bills of exchange worth several lacs of rupees and that he was doing so with full authority, his actions never having been repudiated by any of the partners to the date of suit. It appears to me therefore that the authority of Pandit Gwash Kaul has been established and there is no substance in the objection taken on this ground by Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, defendant No. 5.

Dealing now with the question of the presentment of the hundis in question, the matter can be looked at from two points of view. First, whether the presentation in the circumstances of the case was at all necessary, and, secondly, if, as a matter of fact, there had been presentation. Section 64, Negotiable Instruments Act, says that promissory notes, bills of exchange and cheques must be presented for payment to the maker, acceptor or drawee thereof respectively, by or on behalf of the holder as hereinafter provided. In default of such presentment, the other parties thereto are not liable thereon to such holder. It is contended by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan that in this case, as the hundis were drawn on self, no presentation was necessary. As I have stated already, the hundis were in shahjog form and were drawn on Muhammad Yusaf himself payable at Lahore to some respectable person there. It has been held in Chandra Datt v. Chander Sen Duli Chandar (1), that where the drawer and the drawee are the same person, no presentation on due date is necessary, because the drawer cannot suffer damage for want of presentation. Under s. 76 (d) of the Act, it is enacted that no presentment for payment is necessary as against the drawer if the drawer could not suffer damage from the want of such presentation. To the same effect is a decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in Pachkauri Lal v. Mulchand (2). It seems to me that on this ground presentment of the hundis in this case was not necessary.

There is another ground on which presentation was not necessary in this case. The presentation was to be made to Muhammad Yusaf and at the place at which the hundi was due, namely, at Lahore. The presentation to Muhammad Yusaf at Lahore could only take place if Muhammad Yusaf was on that date in Lahore and had a known address in Lahore then. Under s. 76 (a) no presentment is necessary if the instrument not being payable at any specified place, he cannot after due search be found and when the instrument is payable at some specified place, neither the drawee nor any other person authorized to pay attends at such place during the usual business hours. It is clear on the evidence that Muhammad Yusaf was not in Lahore on the date of the maturity of these hundis and therefore the question of presentation to him did not arise. In Mahomed Ismail-Maula Bakhsh v. Abdul Majid Khan (3), a pro-note was payable at Lyallpur which was assigned to the plaintiff who sent notice by post to the maker thereof. It was held that a city, town or village may be taken to be a specified place within the meaning of ss. 76 and 79, Negotiable Instruments Act, but that presentment of the promissory note there would only be necessary or reasonably possible if the maker has a residence or place of business there or is found to be personally present there. In Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Khair Din (4), a pro-note was payable at Sialkot. The promisee was a resident of Sialkot and continued to be in possession of the pro-note. On a suit by the promisee, it was contended that the same should be dismissed as the pro-note had not been duly presented to the defendant. It was held that as the promisee had the pro-note in his possession at Sialkot from the date of execution to the date of suit and was in a position to present it to the maker if he visited that place, presentment no authority to endorse the hundis. Regarding Issues Nos. 9 and 10 he held that there was no personal presentment of the hundis to Raja Sir Daya Kishan Kaul nor any notice of dishonour to him personally, and therefore defendant No. 4 was discharged. On the question of interest, that is, Issue No. 7, he held that only 6 per cent. per annum was chargeable if at all. On these findings, he dismissed the suit of the plaintiff Bank against all the defendants. By a mistake however he first ordered on January 26, 1937, that the debt could be recovered from the maker of the hundis Muhammad Yusaf, defendant No. 1, with costs. But later on he corrected this mistake on February 4, 1937, as obviously on his findings the suit was liable to dismissal against all the defendants. He accordingly dismissed the suit in toto by his amended order, dated February 4, 1937 but as the suit was being dismissed on technical grounds, he left the parties to bear their own costs.

Against this decision, the plaintiff Bank has appealed through Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan and Rattan Lal Chawala whom we have heard at considerable length. Defendant Raja Sir Daya Kishan Kaul has supported the judgment through Messrs. Achhru Ram and Devi Das. Rai Bahadur Ishar Das has been represented by Mr. Sikri in support of the judgment and Mr. Gwash Kaul as the manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company has appeared in person. The Punjab Co-operative Bank brought another suit for the recovery of Rs. 2,762-5-0 on the basis of three hundis in favour of the Attock Timber Trading Company drawn by Messrs. Karam Chand-Kishan Chand of Nowshera favouring the Attock Timber Trading Company. The defendants are the same in this case as in the first case, except that Messrs. Karam Chand-Kishan Chand as the drawers of the hundis in this case appear as defendant No. 1 instead of Haji Muhammad Yusaf. In this case too the suit of the plaintiff Bank based on similar allegations was dismissed against all the defendants and an appeal was made by the plaintiff Bank to the District Judge, Lahore, but this was ordered to be transferred to the High Court and to be heard as a connected appeal. This judgment will therefore dispose of both appeals, that is, Regular First Appeal No. 100 of 1937 and Regular First Appeal No. 155 of 1937.

I will first take up the question of the authority of Pandit Gwash Kaul. It is noticeable that the only defendant who has raised this objection is Rai Bahadur Ishar Das. Pandit Gwash Kaul was examined both in Court and on interrogatories. As D. W. No. 2 in Court stated that he was the manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company and the hundis in question were transferred by the Attock Timber Trading Company in favour of the plaintiff Bank and that consideration money was received by the Company by adjustment which he says he got effected in the accounts in his capacity as manager. In his examination in Court as a witness he stated on May 9, 1935, that he had been endorsing hundis on behalf of the Company as its manager. He further said that he had authority to operate on the accounts of the company and to endorse all hundis. When recalled as a witness on March 11, 1936, he said that he had been signing acknowledgments as the manager of the Company for very large sums. When he was examined on interrogatories, he stated on August 17, 1936, that he had been appointed as a manager of the Company by a resolution of the Board of Directors dated February 20, 1927 in a meeting of the Board which was attended amongst others by Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, defendant No. 5, and that he was authorized to carry on the business of the Company and to operate the accounts, negotiate business and in fact do all other necessary work for the benefit of the Company. The authority to endorse negotiable instruments has not been repudiated by any of the partners up to the date of the suit.

Pandit Gwash Kaul said further that besides himself some subordinate of his used to accept hundis under his authority as the manager of the Company and that the number of the hundis which he or his subordinate under his instructions endorsed were of the value of several lacs of rupees. It seems to me that when a person has been acting as the manager of a Company for a long period and has been transacting all the business of the Company as such manager, including the acceptance and endorsing of the bills of exchange of the value of several lacs of rupees, this fact alone is sufficient to establish that he had the proper authority of the partners to act as the manager of the Company and to bind it as such. The fact that he mentions in his statement a specific resolution which invested him with authority, the further fact that the only objecting defendant was present at the meeting of the Board which Trading Company, (2) defendant No. 4 Sir Daya Kishan Kaul and (3) defendant No. 5 Rai Bahadur Ishar Das. Defendant No. 2 admitted the factum of the endorsement on the hundis in question but pleaded that the Bank had not presented these for payment and had unnecessarily delayed the institution of a suit for the recovery of the money in the event of default and on this ground sought to evade liability.

Sir Daya Kishan Kaul, defendant No. 4 pleaded that he was not personally liable for the debt and denied knowledge of the execution of the hundis and their endorsement in favour of the plaintiff Bank. Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, defendant No. 5, pleaded that the Attock Timber Trading Company was an illegal association within the meaning of s. 4, Companies Act, and therefore could neither sue nor be sued, could not endorse the hundis in favour of the plaintiff Bank and therefore the plaintiff Bank was not entitled to sue on the basis of any such endorsement. He further pleaded want of authority in Pandit Gwash Kaul to accept or endorse bills of exchange so as to bind the proprietors of the Attock Timber Trading Company. He also pleaded that the hundis were never presented for payment, that the defendants had not been served with a proper notice of dishonour, denied that there was an agreement about the rate of interest as alleged, and lastly that extension for payment was given to the maker of the hundis which had impaired the rights of the other defendants and therefore they could not be made liable for any loss. On these pleadings, the following issues were framed by the learned Subordinate Judge who tried this case :

"1. Whether plaintiff made demand within reasonable time from the defendant Muhammad Yusaf for payment of the money due on the hundis (endorsed in plaintiff's favour) in dispute?

2. If not, what is its bearing on plaintiff's suit?

3. Whether the Attock Timber Trading Company (defendant No. 2) is an illegal association being composed of more than 20 members and being an unregistered company?

4. Was any notice of dishonour of hundis in dispute (by Muhammad Yusaf) given by the plaintiff Bank to the endorsers? (between plaintiff and defendant No. 5).

5. If not, what is its bearing on plaintiff's claim against defendant No. 5?

6. Whether the plaintiff Bank has got the locus to sue?

7. What rate of interest, if any are plaintiff Bank entitled to recover and from whom?

8. Whether Mr. G. Kaul had authority to endorse the hundis in dispute on behalf of defendant No. 2 in plaintiff's favour and is that endorsement valid?

9. Whether plaintiff presented the hundi in question to defendant No. 4 for payment of the debt due on it?

10. If the above issue is not proved in the positive, what is its bearing on plaintiff's claim?

11. To what relief is plaintiff entitled and against whom?"

So far as Issue No. 3 is concerned, the position of defendant No. 5 was that the Attock Timber Trading Company was a partnership in which several firms were partners and that thus the number of partners was more than twenty. As the Attock Timber Trading Company consisted of more than 20 persons and being unregistered under the Companies Act, it was an illegal association. On December 28, 1925, Messrs. Harkishan Lal, Daya Kishan Kaul, Ishar Das and Sawan Mal representing themselves as the proprietors of the Attock Timber Company, wrote to the plaintiff Bank, requesting that an account be opened in the name of the Attock Timber Trading Company. In this letter, there is no indication that the Company consists of more than 20 persons, nor is there anything to show that the plaintiff Bank was aware that the Attock Timber Trading Company had any other partners besides those mentioned in this letter. Bir Singh was stated in this letter to be the manager of this Company and authorised to operate the account proposed to be opened. The learned Subordinate Judge therefore decided this issue in favour of the plaintiff Bank and as the question was not raised before us in appeal, nothing further need be said about it.

On Issues Nos. 1 and 2, the learned Subordinate Judge held that there was no presentation to Mian Muhammad Yusaf and therefore the endorsers were discharged. He further held that the plaintiff Bank had waited too long in enforcing a remedy by suit against Muhammad Yusaf and had thereby impaired the endorsers' remedy against the makers of the hundis for which reason the endorsers were discharged from all liability in accordance with the provisions of s. 40, Negotiable Instruments Act. On Issues Nos. 4 and 5 he held that there was no proper notice of dishonour and for this reason also the endorsers stood discharged. On Issue No. 6 he held that if Pandit Gwash Kaul was competent to endorse the hundis in question, the plaintiff Bank were holders in due course and were competent to bring the suit but on Issue No. 8 he held that Pandit Gwash Kaul had

Ram Lall, J.—The Punjab Co-operative Bank, Ltd., Lahore, brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 17,095-8-0 on the basis of eight hundis against (1) Haji Muhammad Yusaf of Peshawar, (2) The Attock Timber Trading Company, Lahore, through its manager Pandit Gwash Kaul, and also against defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, viz. Lala Harkishan Lal, Sir Daya Kishan Kaul, Rai Bahadur Ishar Das, Lala Sawan Mal and Sardar Bir Singh, as the partners of the Attock Timber Trading Company, defendant No. 2. The allegation in the plaint is that Haji Muhammad Yusaf, who is a resident of Peshawar, drew five hundis, dated May 31, 1930, on himself for an aggregate sum of Rs. 6,120. These hundis were in favour of the Attock Timber Trading Company and were in shahjog form payable to a respectable person at Lahore. These hundis were sent on August 4, 1930, duly endorsed for collection to the Punjab Co-operative Bank, Ltd., Lahore, and were signed by Mr. Gwash Kaul. On the face of the hundis, it does not appear who Mr. Gwash Kaul is and in what capacity he is signing them. Mr. Gwash Kaul sent these hundis, amongst others, to the Bank duly endorsed with a covering letter, dated August 4, 1930, Ex. C-10, with a request to place the proceeds on realization to the credit of the pro-note account of the partners, signing himself as the manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company. On September 18, 1930, Muhammad Yusaf drew three more kundis on himself in the same form and again in favour of the Attock Timber Trading Company payable at Lahore for an aggregate sum of Rs. 7,950. These hundis were likewise sent duly endorsed to the Bank by Mr. Gwash Kaul who signed these three as manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company on October 31, 1930. The covering letter with which these hundis were sent to the Bank is Ex. C-11 and is signed by Mr. Gwash Kaul as the manager of the company, and in this letter he requests the Bank to discount the hundis and place the proceeds to the credit of the loan account standing in the names of defendants Nos. 3 to 7. This letter goes on to say :

"If anyhow you will not be able to realize the proceeds of the hundis from their drawers we shall have no objection to your debiting the amount plus your charges to the above-mentioned loan account of our company."

It is apparent from the terms of this correspondence that if Mr. Gwash Kaul had authority as manager of the Attock Timber Trading Company, the Attock Timber Trading Company became the guarantors to the Bank for any loss that might accrue to the Bank by reason of the purpose of these hundis. On this, the plaintiff Bank proceeded to credit the proceeds of these discounted hundis in the pro-note account of defendants Nos. 3 to 7. A copy of this account has been exhibited as P. 3 and shows that on October 31, 1930, the proceeds of these hundis, namely the value of each hundi, minus the discount, has been credited in this account. Another account was opened on the same day in the name of Mian Muhammad Yusaf and the Attock Timber Trading Company, Lahore, in which the value of these eight hundis aggregating the sum of Rs. 14,070 is debited to Muhammad Yusaf and the Attock Timber Trading Company.

It was alleged further in the plaint that there was a mutual agreement between the plaintiff Bank and the defendants that after the expiry of the term of the hundis if the money due on them was not paid, interest would be charged at the rate of 10 percent, per annum. On this account the Bank claimed a sum of Rs. 2,950-4-0 by way of interest from the date of the expiry of the term of the hundis to the date of the suit. The hundis in question were not retired and thereafter they were protested through the notary public on April 15, 1932. The cost of this protest was stated to be Rs. 75-4-0, and adding this sum to the amount of principal and interest a suit was lodged for Rs. 17,095-8-0 by the Bank as the holders of these hundis in due course. Messrs. Muhammad Yusaf, Sawan Mal, Bir Singh and Harkishan Lal, though served, did not take part in the proceedings and they were proceeded against ex parte, except that the receiver of the estate of Lala Harkishan Lal, who was subsequently declared insolvent, joined the proceedings but did not put in any pleadings. The contesting defendants thus are: (1) defendant No. 2 the Attock Timber Lordships' view, unlikely that a decision solemnly come to by the Governor-in-Council after full enquiry and when declared by the Act to be final, should thereafter be subject to review by the local Courts of the Province.

In coming to this conclusion their Lordships are in no way overlooking the importance of jealously scrutinizing the jurisdiction conferred on executive bodies or of giving no wider interpretation than is necessary to any limitation of the powers of the Court. But however carefully the liberty of the subject has to be guarded not only is there sound sense in making the decision of the Local Govt. final but it has also to be remembered that a right construction of the Act can only be attained if its whole scope and object together with an analysis of its wording and the circumstances in which it is enacted are taken into consideration.

From an examination of the Act alone their Lordships would have reached the conclusion that owing to the provisions of ss. 11 and 13 of the Act no resort to the Courts was left in this case under s. 8 and the other circumstances to which their Lordships have referred so far from weakening have strengthened that conclusion.

Having reached a decision opposed to both the contentions put forward on behalf of the appellant they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

First Civil Appeals Nos. 100 and 155 of 1937

ADDISON AND RAM LALL, JJ.

PUNJAB CO-OPERATIVE

BANK LTD. LAHORE—PLAINTIFF—

MUHAMMAD YUSAF AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS NOS. 3 to 7—RESPONDENTS

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 76 (b) (d), 40—Drawer and drawee same person—Necessity of presentment on due date — Drawee having no residence or place of business at place where hundi is due nor found at that place on due date— Necessity of presentment —Endorsement by notary public held amounted to promise to pay by endorser within meaning of s. 76 (b)—Promise to pay under s. 76 (b), nature of—S. 40, applicability — Negotiable instruments—Suit on—Payment guaranteed by endorser of hundi in case of default by drawer — Holder, if must sue drawer before suing endorser—Endorsement signed by agent on behalf of endorser—Objection that signature of endorser did not appear on instrument, if can be allowed — Principal and agent — Person acting as Manager of company for long time and accepting and endorsing bills of exchange — Whether establishes that he had authority of partners to act as such and bind company.

Where the drawer and the drawee are the same person, no presentation on the due date is necessary, because the drawer cannot suffer damage for want of presentation. Where therefore a hundi in shahjog form is drawn on self payable at certain place to a respectable person, no presentment is necessary. 148 Ind. Cas. 1167 (1) and 66 Ind. Cas. 503 (2), relied on.

Under s. 76 (b), no presentment is necessary as against any party sought to be charged therewith if he has engaged to pay notwithstanding non-presentment. No presentment is also necessary where the drawee of a hundi has no residence or place of business or a known address at a place where the hundi is due and on the due date the drawee is not found personally present at such place. 173 Ind. Cas. 175 (3) and 175 Ind. Cas. 692 (4), relied on. [p. 654, cols. 1 & 2.]

An endorsement on a negotiable instrument by the notary public "endorsers state, if the drawer does not pay we will pay at the request of the manager", imports a promise to pay within the meaning of s. 76 (b).

A promise to pay need not be expressed so long as it is clearly deducible from the language employed by the parties or their conduct. Under s. 76 (c), if a party after maturity of a bill and with the knowledge that the instrument had not been presented promises to pay the amount due thereon, no presentment is necessary nor is it necessary where the party concerned waives his right to take advantage of any default in presentment for payment. 157 Ind. Cas. 875 (5), relied on. [p. 655, col. 1.]

Section 40, Negotiable Instruments Act, comes into operation, only when the holder of a negotiable instrument destroys the endorser's remedy without the consent of the endorsers.

Where the endorser of a hundi guarantees payment in case of default by the drawer, it is not necessary for the holder in due course to sue the drawer first before maintaining a suit against the endorsers.

When on a fair interpretation of the negotiable instrument the name of the person liable is disclosed, and it is quite clear on the evidence that the agent endorsed it under the implied directions and with the explicit knowledge of his principal an objection taken by the endorser that the signature of the endorser, does not appear on the face of the instrument as it was signed by his agent without mentioning that he is acting on behalf of his principal, cannot be upheld. It is only when there was some doubt regarding the identity of the drawer that the matter can be agitated before the Court. 50 Ind. Cas. 216 (6), distinguished.

When a person has been acting as the Manager of a Company for a long period and has been transacting all the business of the Company as such manager, including the acceptance and endorsing of the bills of exchange of the value of several lacs of rupees, this fact alone is sufficient to establish that he had the proper authority of the partners to act as the Manager of the Company and to bind it as such. [p. 653, col. 2.]

Sections 10, 11, 12 and 13 deal with the limitations of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court and are as follows:—

"10 A proprietor may apply to the Collector to have his property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and the Court of Wards may on being satisfied that it is expedient to undertake the management of such property, make a declaration to this effect.

11. No declaration made by the Local Govt. under s. 8 or by the Court of Wards under s. 10 shall be questioned in any Civil Court.

12.—(1) The Court of Wards shall assume the superintendence of the property of any proprietor disqualified under cl. (b) or (d) of sub-s. (1) of s. 8 or in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under s. 10.

(2) The Court of Wards may in its discretion assume or refrain from assuming the superintendence of—

(a) the property or person and property of any proprietor disqualified under cl. (a) or (c) of sub-s. 1 of s. 8.

(b) the person of any proprietor disqualified under cl. (b) or (d) of sub-s. 1 of s. 8

(3) The Court of Wards may assume the superintendence of the person of any minor who has an immediate or reversionary interest in the property—

(a) of any proprietor disqualified under s. 8; or

(b) of any proprietor in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under s. 10.

13. If the right of the Court of Wards to assume or retain the superintendence of the person or property of any disqualified proprietor is disputed by such proprietor or, if he be a minor or of unsound mind, by some person on his behalf, the case shall be reported to the Local Govt., whose orders thereon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Civil Court."

It will be observed that s. 11 is only concerned with action taken under sub-ss. (1) (b) or (d) of s. 8, and under s. 10, i. e., those cases in which a declaration is made, leaving the other cases in which superintendence of the property is assumed (or possibly all cases after it has been assumed or in which it is retained) to be dealt with by s. 13.

In terms s. 11 appears to prohibit the bringing of an action disputing the validity of a declaration made by the Court of Wards under those sub-clauses of s. 8. Some limitation must no doubt be put upon the generality of the provision inasmuch as good faith at any rate is required. The appellant, however, goes further and says that the Court of Wards is without jurisdiction and can be declared to be without jurisdiction by the Civil Court in all cases in which the preliminary requirements of s. 8 have not been fulfilled. So far as sub-ss. (1) (b) and (d) are concerned the primary requirement contained in those sub-clauses themselves is merely that the Governor-in-Council should declare the proprietors incapable or unfitted to manage their own property.

Under (b) it seems impossible to put any limitation on that jurisdiction. Under (d) (i) (ii) (iii) and (iv) the matter again seems to be one for the discretionary judgment of the Local Govt. It is conceivable that under (d) (ii) the jurisdiction only exists provided the proprietor has been in fact convicted of a non-bailable offence and that if this fact were non-existent the Local Govt. would be acting ultra vires in making a declaration, but it is difficult to imagine that in sub-ss. (i) (iii) and (iv) and indeed in that part of sub-s. (ii) which concerns unfitness by reason of vicious habits or bad character, the Local Govt. should have an absolute discretion whereas in the final part of sub-s. (ii) its jurisdiction should be limited.

In argument before their Lordships however the allegation that the action of the Local Govt. was ultra vires was founded not upon the wording of the sub-clauses but upon the proviso to sub-cl. (iii) and (iv) and it was said that if the Governor-in-Council showed by his decision that he interpreted the phrase "gross annual profits" wrongly in law then he could be declared to have assumed an unjustified jurisdiction.

But in such an argument the same difficulty arises as is to be found on a consideration of the sub-clauses themselves. No logical distinction between fact and law was propounded to their Lordships and indeed it is difficult to see why a wrong calculation under proviso (a) should be unchallengeable, whereas a wrong view as to the meaning of "gross annual profits" should be open to question. Nor indeed is it easy to draw a distinction between fact or law on the one part and opinion on the other since proviso (b) by which the Local Govt. are equally governed is a matter of opinion alone.

Apart from a close analysis of s. 8 itself there are other reasons for thinking the decision of the Local Govt. to be unfettered. Under s. 8 (2) careful provision is made for a hearing of the proprietor's case before a decision is made, and in the case of sub-cl. (a) and (c) s. 13 expressly provides for the method which shall be followed if the right of the Court of Wards is challenged and the decision so attained is declared to be final.

Moreover the proviso itself expressly requires the satisfaction of the Local Govt., not that of a Court and it is, in their

the Land Revenue Act from time to time in force.

Moreover though minors, certain females and lunatics—to take three of the classes mentioned in s. 8 of the Act—may require protection whether their property be in land or personalty, it is to be observed that under that section only proprietors, i. e., those beneficially interested in a mahal are dealt with, and mahal primarily means a local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of land revenue.

No doubt when once a proprietor is made a ward, all his property is, under s. 16 (1) of the Act, put under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, but the original assumption of wardship is only possible in the case of proprietors or land owners paying land revenue.

In considering the way in which land revenue is regarded in India no comparison with tenures in England is of much (if any) assistance. Its, universality, its quantum, and the tendency of the Indian outlook to regard the Govt. as a sharer in all the produce of the land are matters of importance.

By s. 58 of the Land Revenue (United Prov.) Act of 1901 it is provided

"58.—(1) All land, to whatever purpose applied and wherever situated is liable to the payment of revenue to the Govt. except such land as has been wholly exempted by special grant of or contract with, the Govt. or by the provisions of any law for the time being in force.

(2) Revenue may be assessed on land, notwithstanding that revenue, by reason of its having been assigned, released, compounded for or redeemed, is not payable to the Govt."

(3) No length of occupancy of any land, nor any grant of land made by the proprietor, shall release such land from the liability to pay revenue."

But not only is the incidence of the revenue universal, it is also generally fixed at a sum varying from 40 to 45 per cent. of the total income. If in addition to this percentage the proprietor has encumbered his estate to the extent of one-third of the income, between 70 and 80 per cent. of the total receipts would be removed from his control and from 20 to 30 per cent. only remain—a small margin from which to ensure the payment of revenue and the protection of the mahal against foreclosure or sale under any mortgages created by the proprietor.

In their Lordships' view these considerations inevitably lead to the conclusion that Land Revenue must be deducted in calculating the gross annual profit of a property.

Even apart however from these considerations the wording of s. 8 of the Court of Wards Act itself would lead their Lordships to the same conclusion.

Under proviso (a) to sub-s. (iv) of s. 8 the contrast is between the aggregate annual interest payable by the proprietor and the gross annual profits—a phraseology which would naturally point to a contrast between what the proprietor received and the interest which he owed, and would so point nonetheless though it is the profits of the property and not of the proprietor which have to be considered. Indeed to substitute the former consideration would bring into account a matter which is obviously extraneous to the considerations with which the Legislature was concerned, viz., the profit derived by the proprietor from his personal estate. Moreover the words are "annual profits"—not "annual rent" or "income," and seem to refer to some profits half way between the total income of the estate and the net profits remaining after the management expenses have been paid.

If the total produce or income of the estate had been intended it would have been easy enough to say so—indeed in s. 141 of the Land Revenue Act of 1901 land revenue is said to be a first charge on the rents, profits or produce of every mahal, as opposed to the phrase "gross annual profits" in s. 8 of the Court of Wards Act.

Moreover if land revenue is not to be deducted before the gross annual profits are arrived at in calculating the ratio of charges to profit land revenue would appear on neither side of the account, neither as a charge nor as a deduction from profits.

Therefore even accepting the view presented by the appellant that "gross profits" has of itself no definite meaning, their Lordships, bearing in mind the circumstances above mentioned, are of opinion that in the Court of Wards Act land revenue must be deducted but no allowance for any expenses of estate management must be made in arriving at the gross annual profit of the property.

This conclusion alone would involve the dismissal of the appeal, but the preliminary question whether any action in the Courts was possible having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of the Act was fully argued and is a matter of importance on which their Lordships think their decision should also be given.

by the Local Govt. into the debts and liabilities of the appellant. After the enquiry the appellant received a letter from the Commissioner of Fyzabad, dated September 17, 1929, enclosing a statement of the loans contracted by the appellant, and a statement of the gross annual income, gross annual profits, and land revenue derived from his property. By the letter and statements the appellant was informed that his debts totalled Rs. 14,45,160-7-9 on which the annual interest at the contractual rates amounted to Rs. 1,22,110-9-0; that the gross annual income from his estates amounted to Rs. 5,71,626-10-9; that the amount payable in respect of land revenue, etc., was Rs. 2,65,117-14-4; that the gross annual profits from his estates (arrived at by deducting the amount payable as land revenue, etc., from the gross annual income) amounted to Rs. 3,06,508-12-5; and that therefore the annual interest payable at the contractual rates exceeded one-third of the gross annual profits. Further the letter charged the appellant with failure, without sufficient cause, to discharge his debts and liabilities and said that such failure was likely to lead to the dissipation of the property. Finally the appellant was informed that, under s. 8 (1) (d) (iii), (iv) provisoes (a), (b) of the 1912 Act, he was liable to be declared by the Local Govt. to be incapable of managing his property, but that, under s. 8 (2) of that Act, he could show cause against such a declaration being made.

As a result of this communication the appellant attempted to show cause why no declaration should be made but was unsuccessful and, as stated above, the declaration was made.

From the statement sent to him it is apparent that in calculating whether the annual interest at the contractual rates exceeded one-third of the annual profits of his property, the Local Govt. in order to ascertain the gross annual profits of the estate deducted the land revenue from the gross annual income. If this deduction was rightly made it was evident that the annual interest on the appellant's debts exceeded one-third of the gross annual profits—if on the other hand the land revenue should not have been deducted, the annual interest on the debts is less than one-third of the gross annual profits.

Though some question of the right of the Local Govt. to deduct certain cesses and annual charitable contributions was also raised, it is conceded that they were not of sufficient amount to have any bearing on the question at issue, and in argument consideration of them was put aside. The sole question considered was whether land revenue was or was not rightly deducted before ascertaining what sum was to be regarded as the gross annual profits.

Altogether apart however from the question whether the construction which he put upon those words was accurate or inaccurate the respondent maintained that the appellant was prohibited from challenging the action taken by reason of the provisions of s. 11 of the Court of Wards Act. That section is as follows :—

"No declaration made by the Local Govt. under s. 8 or by the Court of Wards under s. 10 shall be questioned in any Civil Court."

A number of other questions had been raised and argued before the Courts in India but before their Lordships the respondents rested their case solely upon the two points mentioned.

(1) It may be, as stated by Jessel, M. R. and repeated by Lord Bramwell in Last v. London Assurance Corporation (1), that of itself the phrase "gross annual profits" has no definite meaning. It must take its colour from its surroundings. In the present case therefore it is necessary to consider those surroundings by an examination of the scheme of the Court of Wards Act, the way in which land tax is regarded in India and any provisions of the Land Revenue Act which bear upon the matter, in addition to the exact wording of s. 8 itself.

The object of disqualification under s. 8 is no doubt threefold—it will protect persons incapable of managing their own affairs—it will prevent the splitting up or as the Act itself says "the dissipation of the property" and in either event it will enable land revenue to be more easily and more certainly collected.

That the collection of land revenue is an important consideration is apparent both from the objects aimed at and from the fact that by s. 4 of the Act the Board of Revenue is made the Court of Wards for the United Provinces. Indeed in earlier schemes in respect of the disqualification of proprietors, the necessary provisions were contained in the Land Revenue Acts themselves, and even in the present Act the definition of proprietor is only reached by reference to "Mahal" and its meaning in

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Allahabad High Court
March 4, 1940

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM, LORD PORTER AND SIR GEORGE RANKIN.

Raja BHAGWAN BAKSH SINGH—

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE—

RESPONDENT

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), s. 8 (d), Proviso (a)—“Gross annual profits”—Land revenue, if should be deducted—View of Local Government, if can be questioned.

In considering the way in which land revenue is regarded in India no comparison with tenures in England is of much (if any) assistance. Its universality, its quantum, and the tendency of the Indian outlook to regard the Govt. as a sharer in all the produce of the land are matters of importance.

In calculating the gross annual profits of the property under s. 8 (d), Proviso (a), U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1912, land revenue must be deducted but no allowance for any expenses of estate management must be made.

However carefully the liberty of the subject has to be guarded, not only is there sound sense in making the decision of the Local Govt. final but it has also to be remembered that a right construction of the Court of Wards Act can only be attained if its whole scope and object together with an analysis of its wording and the circumstances in which it is enacted are taken into consideration. From an examination of the Act the conclusion is inevitable that owing to the provisions of ss. 11 and 13 of the Act no resort to the Court is left under s. 8 to challenge the view of the Local Govt. as to the meaning of “gross annual profits.” [p. 650, col. 1.]

Messrs. J. D. Casswell, K. C., R. K. Handoo and J. L. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. Millard Tucker, K. C., and W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

Lord Porter—The appellant is the proprietor of the Amethi estate in the Sultanpur District of Oudh in the United Provinces of India. On March 7, 1930, he was declared by the Governor-in-Council of the United Provinces who claimed to be acting under the powers conferred upon him by the U. P. Act, No. IV of 1912 (commonly called the United Provinces Court of Wards Act, 1912) to be incapable of managing his own property.

The appellant maintains that the declaration was ultra vires and on March 19, 1932, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Allahabad claiming a declaration that the declaration above mentioned was wholly illegal and of no effect against the plaintiff. His suit was dismissed on May 14, 1934, and this dismissal was confirmed by the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad on March 31, 1937. From this decision the appellant has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The Governor's action was taken under ss. 8 and 9 of the Court of Wards Act which are as follows :

“(8)—(1) Proprietors shall be deemed to be disqualified to manage their own property when they are—

(a) minors;
(b) females declared by the Local Govt. to be incapable of managing their own property;

(c) persons adjudged by a competent Civil Court to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing their own property;

(d) persons declared by the Local Govt. to be incapable of managing or unfitted to manage their own property—

(i) owing to any physical or mental defect or infirmity unfitting them for the management of their own property;

(ii) owing to their having been convicted of a non-bailable offence and being unfitted by vicious habits or bad character for the management of their own property;

(iii) owing to their having entered upon a course of extravagance;

(iv) owing to their failure without sufficient reason to discharge the debts and liabilities due by them;

“Provided that no such declaration shall be made under sub-cl. (iii) or (iv) unless the Local Govt. is satisfied—

(a) that the aggregate annual interest payable at the contractual rate on the debts and liability due by the proprietor exceeds one-third of the gross annual profits of the property; and

(b) that such extravagance or such failure to discharge the said debts and liabilities is likely to lead to the dissipation of the property.

“(2) No declaration under cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) shall be made until the proprietor has been furnished with a detailed statement of the grounds on which it is proposed to disqualify him and has had an opportunity of showing cause why such declaration should not be made.

“9.—(1) The Local Govt. may direct the Collector or such other person as it may appoint, to make an inquiry into the circumstances of any proprietor and the extent of his indebtedness.....”

So far as they are relevant to this appeal the facts are as follows :—

On July 13, 1929, an enquiry under s. 9 (1) of the Act of 1912 was instituted to the processes of the Court and capable of giving evidence, to prove execution. The plaintiff did certainly take out summons on one of these attesting witnesses but the witness did not appear and nothing further is known about him. The question is, whether this is enough to let in further evidence under the provision of s. 71, Evi. Act, as has been held by the lower Appellate Court.

It is argued by Mr. Das, who appears on behalf of the appellant, that s. 71 has got no application to the present case, when there were two other attesting witnesses alive and capable of giving evidence, and the plaintiff did not make any attempt whatsoever to produce them in Court. This argument is supported by the opinion given by Field, J., in his Commentary on the Law of Evidence, and this was accepted by D. N. Mitter, J., in this Court in Ayanati Shikdar v. Mohammad Esmail (2). Jack, J., however took a different view in the same case and he was of opinion that if one of the attesting witnesses was actually produced and turned hostile, other evidence could be admitted under s. 71, Evi. Act, even though other attesting witnesses were available and the learned Judge relied on another decision of this Court in Hasan Ali v. Gurudas Kapali (1). I think that it is not necessary for me to discuss the propriety of this view, as in my opinion, the other circumstances proved in this case exclude the operation of s. 71, Evi. Act. Section 71, Evi. Act reads as follows:

"If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence."

This pre-supposes in my opinion that the witness is actually produced before the Court and then if he denies execution or his memory fails or if he refuses to prove or turn hostile, other evidence can be admitted to prove execution. In the case referred to above the witness was actually before the Court and afterwards turned hostile. In this case however, the witness was not before the Court at all and no question of denying or failing to recollect the execution of the document did at all arise. The plaintiff simply took out a summons as against this witness and nothing further was done later on. In a case like this where the attesting witnesses are not before the Court, s. 71, Evi. Act, has, in my opinion, got no application. In such cases it is the duty of the plaintiff to exhaust all the processes of the Court in order to compel the attendance of any one of the attesting witnesses and when the production of such witnesses is not possible either legally or physically, the plaintiff can avail himself of the provisions of s. 69, Evi. Act. I think therefore that the procedure followed by the Court of Appeal below is not right and the learned Judge should not have allowed Bir Narayan Panda to be examined as a witness in Court, although the plaintiff made no endeavour whatsoever to bring any of the attesting witnesses before the trial Judge.

Mr. Sen who appears for the respondents, sees the difficulty in his way and he attempts to get it round by saying that the case does come within the purview of the proviso to s. 68, Evi. Act. In other words, his contention is, that as the execution of the document has not been specifically denied by any one of the defendants, it is not necessary to call any attesting witness under the provision of s. 68, Evi. Act. I do not think that I can accept this contention as correct. It has been held by this Court in several cases, viz., the case in Ebrahim Mandal v. Akshay Konar (3) and the case in Hari Nath Ghose v. Nepal Chandra Rai (4), that the word 'execution' as used in the proviso to s. 68, Evi. Act, in the case of a mortgage-bond which under the law requires attestation, means and includes not only the signature of the executant but the whole series of acts or formalities which are necessary to give the document validity as a mortgage. This includes attestation, and as attestation was expressly denied here the plaintiff was not exonerated from the duty of complying with the provision of s. 68, Evi. Act, by calling an attesting witness. This appeal therefore must be allowed but I think that as the Court of Appeal below was labouring under some sort of misapprehension, an opportunity should be given to the plaintiff to produce one of the three attesting witnesses who are now alive and are said to be subject to the processes of the Court. I accordingly send the case back to the trial Court with a direction that the learned Munsif should give the plaintiff an opportunity of examining any of the three attesting witnesses that are capable of being produced before the Court. In case none of the attesting witnesses are produced or if the witness actually produced denies execu-

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 71, 68, Proviso—Attesting witness not before Court—Applicability of s. 71—Summons taken out against attesting witness—His failure to appear—No further steps taken—Further evidence cannot be let in under s. 71—Word “execution”—Proviso to s. 68, meaning of, in case of mortgage bond—Express denial of attestation—Provisions of s. 68 must be complied with.

In a case where the attesting witnesses are not before the Court, s. 71, Evi. Act, has got no application. In such cases it is the duty of the plaintiff to exhaust all the processes of the Court in order to compel the attendance of any one of the attesting witnesses and when the production of such witnesses is not possible either legally or physically, the plaintiff can avail himself of the provisions of s. 68. Where the plaintiff has simply taken out summons against the attesting witness and on his failure to appear has done nothing further later on, no further evidence under s. 71 can be let in. 122 Ind. Cas. 551 (2), distinguished.

The word ‘execution’ as used in the proviso to s. 68, Evi. Act, in the case of a mortgage-bond which under the law requires attestation, means and includes not only the signature of the executant but the whole series of acts or formalities which are necessary to give the document validity as a mortgage. This includes attestation, and where attestation is expressly denied the mortgagee is not exonerated from the duty of complying with the provision of s. 68, by calling an attesting witness. *Ebrahim Mandal v. Messrs. Gopendra Nath Das and Satindra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen and Lala Hemanta Kumar, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of defendant No. 1 and it arises out of a suit commenced by the plaintiff for enforcement of a mortgage bond. The bond is alleged to have been executed by defendant No. 1 and his brother, Naba Krishna, to secure an advance of Rs. 50 only. The brother subsequently died leaving defendant No. 1 as his sole heir. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the subsequent purchasers of the mortgage property and defendant No. 5 is said to be the plaintiff's benamidar, in whose name the mortgage bond was taken. A number of defences were taken by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and their contentions in substance were that there was no due attestation of the mortgage bond as required by law; that there was no consideration for the same and defendant No. 5 was not the benamidar of the plaintiff. It was further alleged that the endorsement on the back of the bond was not a genuine endorsement and the suit was barred by limitation. The trial Court overruled all the other defences of the defendants except the one raised on the question of attestation. It held that the mortgage bond could not be admitted in evidence as the plaintiff did not call even one of the attesting witnesses to prove its execution, as it was incumbent upon him to do, under the provisions of s. 68, Evi. Act. In this view of the case the Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The document it may be pointed out, purports to be attested by six attesting witnesses of whom three are admittedly dead; Of the three living witnesses, one named Gaja Sant was summoned by the plaintiff but he did not depose. Another witness, named Panchanan, was summoned by the defendants but was not examined and the remaining witness was not summoned by any of the parties.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal against this decree of dismissal to the lower Appellate Court and the learned District Judge relying upon the decision of this Court in Hasan Ali v. Gurudas Kapali (1), came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had complied with the requirements of s. 68, Evi. Act, inasmuch as one of the attesting witnesses was actually summoned, though he did not give evidence; and it was open therefore to the plaintiff to prove execution of the document by other evidence as is provided for in s. 71, Evi. Act. A witness named Bir Narayan Panda who was examined in the trial Court was called by the Appellate Court as an additional witness and he proved the signatures of all the attesting witnesses. Relying on this witness the lower Appellate Court has decreed the plaintiff's suit and it is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred. The point for our determination is as to whether the view taken by the Court of Appeal below is right. Now as the mortgage bond in suit is required by law to be attested, it is necessary, under the provision of s. 68, Evi. Act, that the plaintiff should call at least one of the attesting witnesses, if he is alive and subject Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), ss. 208 (2), (3), 210, 227 (a)—Members of Panchayat Board charged with offences under ss. 208 (2) and (3) and 210 for acts done while purporting to act as members of Board—Sanction of Local Government is necessary for prosecution.

Where a member of the Panchayat Board who was appointed Temporary President for the purpose of election is charged for offences punishable under s. 208 (2) and (3) of the Mad. Local Boards Act in respect of acts or omissions alleged to have been done with reference to something intimately related to his position as a member of the Panchayat Board or as some time Temporary President of the Board, the sanction of the Govt. is absolutely necessary as a pre-requisite of taking cognizance of the alleged offence.

So also when some of the members are charged with offences under ss. 208 (2) and (3) and 210 of the Local Boards Act for acts performed by them while purporting to act in the discharge of their duties as members of the Board, they are clearly protected by the provisions of s. 227 (a) of the Act and sanction of the Local Govt. for their prosecution is necessary.

Or. R. Ps under ss. 435 and 439 of the Criminal P. O., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Second Class Magistrate, Arkonam, dated October 11, 1938.

Messrs. V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar and K. Ramaswami Ayyangar, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—This is a case in which the petitioner who was a member of the Panchayat Board of Kaveripakkam and who was appointed temporary President for the purpose of election was charged before the Sub-Magistrate of Arkonam for offences punishable under s. 208 (2) and (3) of the Local Boards Act in that he continued to exercise the functions of temporary President even after the election of the President and for failure to hand over one pie being the Panchayat fund to the newly elected President. It is extraordinary to find that such a complaint was entertained by the Magistrate without any sanction for the prosecution being given by the Local Govt. as required by law, even an application by the accused to the Magistrate to drop the proceedings in view of the absence of sanction of the Govt. was dismissed. The Magistrate's view is, in my opinion, wrong as this is a case in which the sanction of the Govt. was absolutely necessary as a pre-requisite of taking cognizance of the alleged offence. The acts or omissions alleged against the petitioner in this case were with reference to something intimately related to his position as a member of the Panchayat Board or as some time temporary President of the Board. The Sub-Magistrate should not have taken cognizance of the alleged offence in the absence of Govt. sanction. The proceedings before him in Cr. O. No. 772 of 1938 are therefore quashed.

This is in a way connected with Criminal Rev. Case No. 813 of 1938. In the present case no less than seven persons were charged with offences punishable under ss. 208 (2) and (3) and 210 of the Local Boards Act. The petitioners Nos. 1 to 4 who are accused Nos. 1 to 4 in the Court below are members of the Panchayat Board of Kaveripakkam and the acts which are alleged to constitute the offences are acts which were performed by them while purporting to act in the discharge of their duties as members of the Board. As the nature of the acts themselves clearly show this so far as they are concerned, they are clearly protected by the provisions of s. 227 (a) of the Madras Local Boards Act. As there was no sanction of the Local Govt. As there was no sanction of the Local Govt. for their prosecution the Magistrate should not have taken cognizance of the offences so far as they are concerned. The proceedings so far as these persons, accused Nos. 1 to 4 before the Magistrate are concerned, are quashed.

As regards the remaining petitioners i. e., accused Nos. 5 to 7 in the Court below are concerned, it has not been shown that they are entitled to any protection or that the prosecution against them requires the previous sanction of any authority. It cannot therefore be said that the Magistrate was wrong in dismissing their application to drop the proceedings so far as they were concerned, and there can be no interference so far as accused Nos. 5 to 7 in the Court below are concerned. It will be open to them to contend before the Magistrate that the abatement alleged against them is no offence at all and indeed to put forward any other defence that may be available to them.

hold the trial. It would appear that the administrative directions of this Court contained in para. 20, sub-para. (3), are unnecessarily rigorous and ill-adapted to present conditions, and fetter the discretion of Magistrates. The question of amendment of these directions will be considered in due course. It is owing to the existence of those directions that the Judicial Secretary at present consults this Court when an application is made to him, and inquires whether this Court has any objection to a trial being held at headquarters outside the court-house. This procedure will, no doubt, be rendered unnecessary when the necessary amendments have been made to the Burma Courts Manual.

(h) — Judgment, writing of — Duty of Magistrate pointed out.*

If a Magistrate thinks that all that is necessary for him to say by way of judgment is that he sentences an accused to imprisonment or fine, then he is not doing his duty properly. Cases have to go to the higher Courts when persons are convicted and the Magistrates should understand that it is their duty to write their judgments carefully. They may be concise and they need not be elaborate, but they should show on the face of them that the cases of both parties have been carefully and properly considered. Section 263, cl. (h), Criminal P. O., enjoins that a brief statement of reasons for the order should be given by the Magistrate. It is absolutely necessary that this should be done, otherwise the general public is likely to lose faith in the administration of justice.

The Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Agra, recommending that an order passed by the trial Magistrate should be set aside and the case should be re-tried according to law. The facts can briefly be stated as follows: One Dal Chand had made a report to the Police, against certain persons. The prosecution case was that that report was false and Dal Chand was prosecuted under s. 182, I. P. O., for making a false report. The case was tried by Mr. Kehar Singh, a Magistrate of the First Class in the district of Agra. It appears from the order of the learned Sessions Judge that he recorded the evidence of several prosecution and defence witnesses but the judgment written by him was as follows: "Dal Chand is fined Rs. 25 or two months rigorous imprisonment in default."

The learned Sessions Judge is perfectly right in saying that this is no judgment at all. Under the law summary powers can be given to certain Magistrates and it is expected that such powers are given to those Magistrates only who have got sufficient experience of criminal work. There is a grave responsibility on the shoulders of the Magistrates who have to try cases summarily. They are relieved of the necessity of recording the evidence of witnesses in a certain class of cases, but they must remember that the accused as well as the complainant have a right to expect a fair and an intelligent decision from them. If a Magistrate thinks that all that is necessary for him to say by way of judgment is that he sentences an accused to imprisonment or fine, then I have no hesitation in saying that he is not doing his duty properly. It has to be remembered that cases have to go to the higher Courts when persons are convicted and the Magistrates should understand that it is their duty to write their judgments carefully. They may be concise and they need not be elaborate, but they should show on the face of them that the cases of both parties have been carefully and properly considered. Section 263, cl. (h), Criminal P. O., enjoins that a brief statement of reasons for the order should be given by the Magistrate. It is absolutely necessary that this should be done, otherwise the general public is likely to lose faith in the administration of justice. I have considered it necessary to make these observations because this is not the first case of this kind tried by this Magistrate, Mr. Kehar Singh, which has come before me. I have had more than one case already in which I found that the judgment was almost similar. I find from the record that this Magistrate has been transferred from the district of Agra. I would direct that a copy of this order should be sent to Mr. Kehar Singh, Magistrate, by the Registrar of this Court for his information and future guidance. The reference made by the learned Sessions Judge is accepted, the conviction and sentence of the accused are set aside and it is directed that there will be a fresh trial in the case as recommended by the learned Sessions Judge.

self. Where he decides to hold the trial in the jail premises he must pass a formal order directing that the trial should be held in the jail premises. Such a formal order must invariably be passed, as otherwise, if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter it would be difficult for them, in the absence of any formal order, to have recourse to higher authority for redress. It is ordinarily for the trying Magistrate to take the initiative in these matters if he considers that the trial should not be held in his court-house. If, however, the District Magistrate, who is responsible for law and order in his district, wishes to take the initiative in such matters himself, his proper course is not to move the Local Govt. himself straightway in the matter, but to instruct the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Magistrate asking that the trial shall be held elsewhere. It is then for the Magistrate to pass formal orders as to whether he considers it desirable to hold a trial in the Court or outside of it. If the Magistrate then wishes to try the case in a place other than his Court, he will do so after obtaining the permission of the necessary authorities who are in control of the premises in which the Magistrate desires to hold the trial.

Mr. U Myint Thein, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mya Bu, Ag. C. J.—These proceedings—one under s. 108, Criminal P. O., and the other under s. 107, Criminal P. O.—where the trial was held in the Monywa Jail, have been called for in revision in order to lay down the procedure which should be carried out in such cases. In the present case it would appear that the trying Magistrate, the First Additional Magistrate, Monywa, made oral representations to the District Magistrate (for there is nothing in writing on the subject on the record) and the District Magistrate communicated with the Judicial Secretary of the Govt., under whose control the jail department is, and requested that the trial of the two accused in these cases be held inside the Monywa Jail. The offences were political ones, and it was anticipated that the trial could not safely or peacefully be held in the Magistrate's Court. Directions as to the venue of criminal trials are laid down in s. 352, Criminal P. O., the marginal note to which is: "Courts to be open." The section reads as follows:

"The place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purpose of inquiring into or trying any offence shall be deemed an open Court, to which the public generally may have access, so far as the same can conveniently contain them: Provided that the presiding Judge or Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, order at any stage of any inquiry into, or trial of, any particular case, that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to, or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court."

Administrative instructions have been given by the Court as to the place of trial.

In para. 20 of the Burma Courts Manual it is laid down that ordinary criminal trials should be held at the headquarters of the trying Magistrate, though on occasions they may be held at or close to the scene of the crime, if that is convenient to the witnesses and the Magistrate happens to be on tour in the vicinity. Sub-para. (2) provides that sessions cases should only be tried at the Sessions Judge's headquarters. Sub-para. (3) is as follows:

"At headquarters cases are to be inquired into and tried at the court-house only, subject to any provision of the law for a local inquiry."

The procedure of the learned District Magistrate in the present case appears to have been correct. He did not apply to the Local Govt. that the Magistrate should hold the trial at a place other than his court-house. As has been said, that is a matter purely within the discretion of the Magistrate himself. All that was done here was that the District Magistrate, who is the proper authority, applied to the Local Govt. for permission to hold the trial inside the jail, and that, of course, can only be done with the permission of the authorities who control the jail department.

There is however, one irregularity which should be noted. The Magistrate did not pass a formal order directing that the trial should be held in the jail premises. Such a formal order must invariably be passed, as otherwise, if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter it would be difficult for them, in the absence of any formal order, to have recourse to higher authority for redress. It is as well to point out here that it is ordinarily for the trying Magistrate to take the initiative in these matters if he considers that the trial should not be held in his court-house. If however the District Magistrate, who is responsible for law and order in his district, wishes to take the initiative in such matters himself, his proper course is not to move the Local Govt. himself straightway in the matter, but to instruct the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Magistrate asking that the trial shall be held elsewhere. It is then for the Magistrate to pass formal orders as to whether he considers it desirable to hold a trial in the Court or outside of it. If the Magistrate then wishes to try the case in a place other than his Court, he will do so after obtaining the permission of the necessary authorities who are in control of the premises in which the Magistrate desires to consideration before such an interpretation is put upon it."

This follows another decision of the same High Court in Krishnan Raju v. Chintala-swami Naidu (7). With respect, we are unable to agree that the question of the intention of the section arises at all. It is succinctly stated by Lord Atkins, delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (8), where the interpretation of certain words in s. 162, Criminal P. C., was in question :

"But in truth when the meaning of the words is plain, it is not the duty of the Courts to busy themselves with supposed intentions."

We would add that the remedy for any supposed hardship lies in the hands of the Legislature. There are several reported decisions in support of the view we take and reference might be made to one of them, Meharban Singh v. Bhola Singh (3). We consider the judgment of Rachhpal Singh, J., in that case much in point. It appears to us, however, that the point covered by these decisions should not ever arise. A material delay in passing a preliminary order under sub-s. (1), s. 145, Criminal P. C., implies a lamentable failure to grasp the purpose of s. 145, Criminal P. C. It has been emphasized in a plethora of Indian High Court decisions that the section is intended to provide a speedy remedy for the prevention of breaches of peace arising out of disputes in respect of immovable property. Sub-section (1) does not contemplate any sustained inquiry before the making of the preliminary order. The condition prescribed is that the Magistrate shall be satisfied from a Police report or other information as to the necessity for taking action, the whole purpose being to prevent an immediately apprehended breach of the peace. It is in the highest degree absurd for a Magistrate to delay the passing of a preliminary order while he undertakes a prolonged inquiry extending over several hearings. The second proviso to sub-s. (4) contemplates the making of an emergent order for attaching property in dispute, but as a condition to this there must be in existence an order under sub-s. (1). Clearly, therefore, delay in the passing of a preliminary order is calculated to frustrate the whole object of s. 145 of the Criminal P. C., including the provision relating to emergent orders.

There may be cases in which a Magistrate is not satisfied with the information first provided by the complainant and it might be expedient to allow the complainant time in which to supplement his initial case. But the purpose of the section must not be lost sight of and no prolonged inquiry is justified. Sub-section (5) affords an adequate safeguard in those cases in which the preliminary order was not justified, and the mandatory nature and scope of that sub-section is frequently overlooked. A Magistrate must cancel his preliminary order and stay further proceedings if it is shown by any party interested that no dispute likely to cause breach of the peace exists or has existed. A Magistrate is required to direct his attention and intelligence to the purpose of the section and is not justified in delaying his preliminary order in the manner in which that order was delayed in this case.

As for the delay of about eight months in passing the final order, we can only say that this is nothing short of amazing, and displays a supreme disregard of consequence. We are constrained to say that we deprecate the strange manner in which the case has been dealt with and trust that the circumstance that the opponent No. 1 is an influential Pir has in no way conduced to this. With these observations we set aside the order of the learned Magistrate under s. 145 (6) and send the proceedings to the District Magistrate of Hyderabad with directions that the case be dealt with according to law by himself or by any Magistrate to whom he may choose to send it.

constitute an allegation of an attempt by the opponents to take forcible possession. It was alleged by the applicant that when opponent No. 1 came on the land opponents Nos. 2 to 6 who were Mohammad Rahim's haris declared that they were now opponent No. 1's haris. Such a declaration by the haris in such circumstances clearly cannot amount to forcible ousting of the zamindar. The point is clear, but reference might be made to the case in Muhammad Araf v. Satramdas Sakhimai (5), in which Davis, J. C., dealing with a case under s. 145, Criminal P. C., said:

"We do not think however we can accept this position, and it appears to us that dealing with land which is owned by a zamindar and cultivated by him with his haris he must before division of the produce or batai be deemed to be in possession of the land and of the produce of the land, and that the haris are merely his agents for the cultivation, and that until the crop is divided between the zamindar and the haris it is really the zamindar who has custody of the crop and divides them."

The learned Magistrate has interpreted the facts correctly for the purpose of his order of March 7, 1938, and we cannot see any justification whatever for his volte face. With regard to the legal aspect, no difficulty should arise in giving effect to the provisions of s. 145, Criminal P. C. Sub-sections (1), (4), (5) and (6) of s. 145, Criminal P. C., are complementary. Once an order has been passed under sub-s. (1), it is obligatory for a Magistrate to make the inquiry provided for in sub-s. (4) subject only to the obligation under sub-s. (5) to terminate the proceedings in the circumstances therein contemplated. The words of sub-s. (4), "the Magistrate shall then" are mandatory. The word 'then' refers to the stage when in compliance with the order under sub-s. (1) the parties have put in their written statements and attended the Court. Sub-section (5) is emphatic that the order under sub-s. (1) shall be final subject to the one exception that the Magistrate shall cancel the order and stay all further proceedings if it is shown that no dispute likely to cause breach of the peace exists or has existed. On the completion of the inquiry under sub-s. (4) a final order under sub-s. (6) must follow, it being obvious that the holding of the said inquiry is a condition precedent to the making of the order under sub-s. (6).

In this case the learned Magistrate has disregarded the aforesaid provisions. He has made an order in favour of the opponents under sub-s. (6) without having ever held any inquiry under sub-s. (4); he has based that order on the conclusion that his preliminary order under sub-s. (1) was ab initio bad, and he has virtually cancelled the preliminary order in contravention of the express provisions of sub-s. (5). Apart from these errors, he was not justified under any circumstances in making the final order under sub-s. (6), because the effect of cancelling the preliminary order which he had passed under sub-s. (1) was to deprive himself of jurisdiction to proceed further. In the circumstances mentioned above the question of law raised in the opponent's application of May 26, 1938, which has so greatly exercised the mind of the learned Magistrate did not arise at all. Incidentally, however, we consider that the learned Magistrate's conclusion on that question was right. The first proviso to sub s. (4) reads:

"Provided that, if it appears to the Magistrate that any party has within two months next before the date of such order been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed, he may treat the party so dispossessed as if he had been in possession at such date."

The inquiry under sub-s. (4) is as to possession on the date of the preliminary order under sub s. (1) and the words of the proviso "within two months next before the date of such order" are precise and unambiguous. It is difficult to see how these words afford any scope for holding that in these cases where a Magistrate does not make a preliminary order within two months of the dispossession, the party complaining is still entitled to proceed under s. 145, Criminal P. C. Undoubtedly, it is unfortunate that a party should be prejudiced by delay in the making of a preliminary order under sub-s. (1) especially if that delay is in any particular case attributable to the inaptitude or want of integrity of the Magistrate, but we cannot concede that any interpretation at variance with the plain words of the section is justified. We are aware that there are certain reported cases in which a contrary view has been taken; for instance, in Srinivasa Reddy v. Dasaratha Rama Reddy (6), a Judge of the Madras High Court held, to quote a portion of the headnote to the report, that

"though the words of the proviso are capable of the interpretation, that the dispossession must be within two months of the preliminary order, yet the intent and object of the section must be taken into

Criminal P. C. It was the legality of the preliminary order under s. 145 (1) which was questioned and the learned Magistrate has dealt with the application on that basis.

Arguments were heard on the application on June 16, 1938 and the matter was adjourned for orders to July 10, 1938. No inquiry as contemplated by s. 145 (4) appears to have been made by the learned Magistrate and no evidence taken, although on behalf of the applicants a request to take evidence had been made on June 16, 1938. On July 10, 1938 orders were postponed to July 26, 1938, but no orders were passed on that date. On August 12, 1938 the applicant's Advocate wrote to the learned Magistrate, asking for information regarding the expected order, but no reply was sent and no orders passed. Eventually on March 18, 1939, about eight months later, the learned Magistrate passed an order, upholding the preliminary legal objection raised by opponents in their application of May 26, 1938 and stating that his order of March 7, 1938 was, to quote his own words, 'not within the purview of the proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145, Criminal P. C.' Having thus come to the conclusion that his preliminary order of March 7, 1938 could not stand he went on to decide that the opponents had been in possession of the disputed land up to two months next before March 7, 1938. The learned Magistrate states his findings with regard to opponents' possession in the following words:

"Accepting therefore the preliminary legal point and relying on the rulings quoted by the learned Advocate for the opponents, I have no option but to hold that the opponents were in possession of the disputed land within two months next before the date of the order passed on March 7, 1938 and that I have no jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter."

Having stated that he had no jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter he concludes by stating:

"I further order that opponents should continue to be in the possession of the disputed land until evicted therefrom by due course of law and forbid all disturbance of possession until such eviction."

On the same date he passed a formal order under s. 145 (6) to that effect. Now from a bare recital of these facts, it is manifest that the learned Magistrate had made several errors and that his conduct of the case was unsatisfactory. On March 7, 1938 the learned Magistrate made an order under s. 145 (1), Criminal P. C., on the information placed before him by that date. That order appears to us to have complied with the provisions of s. 145 (1), Criminal P. C., and to have been a good and proper one in the circumstances. With regard to the question of possession the order recites that it has been made to appear to the learned Magistrate, inter alia

"that on December 1, 1937 the other party (opponents) came to site in order to forcibly evict the complainant (applicant) from possession."

In other words the order makes it clear beyond any question that on the date of the order the learned Magistrate considered that the applicant's party were in possession of the disputed land. The notice issued to the opponents in pursuance of this order also substantiates this. It reads:

"Whereas the complainant Mahomedali Khan has filed a complaint before me, that the mutasarrifi (enjoyment) and possession of original Survey Nos. 140, 141, 109 now blocks Nos. 183/3A, 18/1, 26/4, 18/4, 25/1 in Deh Larh Tapo Samabad are since the year 1912, in the hands of the vendees (1) Mahomedali Khan and (2) Mahomed Rahim Nizamani whose am-mukhtiar is the complainant Mahomedali Khan, and whereas on December 1, 1938 you along with other persons went to the said land and tried to take possession of the aforesaid blocks from the complainant's side forcibly, whereby there is apprehension of breach of peace;

You are hereby summoned to appear in my Court at Hala, either in person or through a Pleader on March 26, 1938 at 10 A. M. and to file a written statement as regards what you have to say in the matter."

Between March 7, 1938 and March 18, 1939 no evidence of any kind was taken and no inquiry within the terms of s. 145 (4) made and no new facts came to light. The opponents had filed written statements denying the allegations of the applicant, but the learned Magistrate had declined in spite of requests by the applicant to record any evidence. On March 18, 1939 the learned Magistrate thought fit to pass an order based on an interpretation of certain facts completely at variance with his previous interpretation of the very same facts.

As already stated the learned Magistrate was justified on March 7, 1938 in passing an order under s. 145 (1) on the assumption that the applicant was in the possession, but in holding on March 18, 1939 that these identical facts amounted to an admission by the applicant of forcible dispossession on December 1, 1937, the learned Magistrate has grossly erred in the inferences he draws as well as in his appreciation of the law. We have carefully considered the facts and we can find no justification whatever for the conclusion that the applicant admitted having been dispossessed on December 1, 1937. It is true that the word 'dispossession' has been used in the original complaint, but the facts stated clearly

December 1, 1937 opponents Nos. 1 to 6 arrived on the disputed land and squatted thereon, threatening violence in the event of any attempt to evict them. Opponent No. 1 stated that he was carrying out the order of his father Pir Zialdin Shah. Opponents Nos. 2 to 6 who had been the heirs of Muhammad Rahim working on this land asserted that they were now the heirs of opponent No. 1, in respect of the same land. The wheat crop then standing had actually been cultivated by opponents Nos. 2 to 6 on behalf of Muhammad Rahim Khan. Apprehension arising that the standing crop might be removed by force by the opponents and that there might be a breach of the peace, the applicant as Muhammad Rahim's agent instituted proceedings in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Hala, against the six opponents and Zialdin Shah on December 23, 1937. Such was the applicant's case. The proceedings were transferred by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Hala, to the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Hala, for disposal. Thereafter inordinate delay occurred in dealing with the matter and the learned First Class Magistrate's order under s. 145 (6), Criminal P. O., which is now the subject of attack in this Court, seeks to attribute the delay to the applicant. We deem it expedient to set out a short account of the manner in which this case has been dealt with.

The papers were apparently not received from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Hala, until January 3, 1938 owing to the intervening Christmas holidays. Notice was issued on January 5, 1938 to the applicant to appear on January 17, 1938 to give a statement on oath. This notice was not served on the applicant and a hearing was then fixed for February 7, 1938, fresh notice being issued. The applicant however appeared with an Advocate on January 28, 1938 and his statement was partly recorded. Delay arose because the applicant had not produced a certain document of title and his further examination was adjourned to February 8, 1938 on which date also the document was not produced. The applicant's further statement was again adjourned to February 23, 1938. On February 23, 1938 the aforesaid document was still not forthcoming and there was a further postponement to March 5, 1938, at the instance of the applicant's Advocate. On March 5, 1938, the applicant's further statement was recorded and on March 7, 1938 a preliminary order under s. 145 (1) was passed and the wheat crop on part of the disputed land was attached by an order under proviso 2 to s. 145 (4), Criminal P. O. It does not appear that the said document of title was produced on March 5, or at any time.

Notice was issued on March 10, 1938, to the opponents to appear on March 23, 1938 and to file their written statements. Further delay occurred in the serving of these notices and the written statements were not filed until May 9, 1938. In these statements possession by Muhammad Rahim Khan of the disputed land was denied and it was alleged that since the death of Rashidullah in 1923 Pir Zialdin Shah, his son had been in continuous possession. On April 26, 1938, that is to say, previous to the filing of the written statements the applicant had complained to the Court that certain of the opponents were endeavouring by force to cultivate the land. On this the Court had ordered that neither party was to do any cultivation until the final decision of the case. On May 26, 1938, the applicant complained in a detailed application that the opponents in disobedience to the Court's orders were cultivating the land, and they prayed that someone be put in charge of it. This request the Court refused but ordered that the tapedar should make a report. On the same date, that is to say, May 26, 1938, the opponents made through their Advocate the following application:

"It is submitted on behalf of the opponents that this Hon'ble Court will be pleased to dismiss the application as the order under s. 145, cl. 4 is illegal having been made more than two months from the date of the alleged dispossession, i. e., December 1, 1937. The order is dated March 7, 1938. The words 'two months before the date of such order' in the proviso to s. 145, Criminal P. O., means two months before the date of the preliminary order and not two months from the date of the complaint."

Criminal Revision Application No. 158
of 1939

LOBO, J. O. AND O'SULLIVAN, J.
MUHAMMAD ALI YAR MUHAMMAD
—APPLICANTS

versus

SHAMSUL HAQ PIR ZIALDIN SHAH AND OTHERS—OPPOSANTS

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145
—Words of Proviso to sub-s. (4) mean two months before date of preliminary order under sub-s. (1)—Inquiry under sub-s. (1)—Inquiry under sub-s. (4) whether obligatory after passing order under sub-s. (1)—Order under sub-s. (6), if must follow subsequently—Land cultivated by heirs of zamindar on his behalf—Person squatting on such land—Heirs declaring to be heirs of such person in respect of same land—Whether amounts to forcible ousting of zamindar.

An inquiry under sub-s. (4) of s. 145, Criminal P. C., is as to possession on the date of the preliminary order under sub-s. (1) and the words of the proviso "within two months next before the date of such order" are precise and unambiguous. These words afford no scope for holding that in those cases where a Magistrate does not make a preliminary order within two months of the dispossession, the party complaining is still entitled to proceed under s. 145. These words mean two months before the date of the preliminary order. 113 Ind. Cas. 336 (6) and 180 Ind. Cas. 1 (8), not followed, 152 Ind. Cas. 496 (3), relied on. [p. 639, col. 2.]

Sub-s. (1) of s. 145 does not contemplate any sustained inquiry before the making of the preliminary order. It is in the highest degree absurd for a Magistrate to delay the passing of a preliminary order while he undertakes a prolonged inquiry extending over several hearings.

Sub-ss. (1), (4), (5) and (6) of s. 145, Criminal P. C., are complementary. Once an order has been passed under sub-s. (1), it is obligatory for a Magistrate to make the inquiry provided for in sub-s. (4) subject only to the obligation under sub-s. (5) to terminate the proceedings in the circumstances therein contemplated. The words of sub-s. (4) "the Magistrate shall then....." are mandatory. The word "then" refers to the stage when in compliance with the order under sub-s. (1) the parties have put in their written statements and attended the Court. On the completion of the inquiry under sub-s. (4) a final order under sub-s. (6) must follow, it being obvious that the holding of the said inquiry is a condition precedent to the making of the order under sub-s. (6). An order under sub-s. (6) cannot be made without having held any inquiry under sub-s. (4).

Where after a person has squatted on the land of zamindar cultivated by the heirs of zamindar on his behalf, the heirs declare they are heirs of that person in respect of the same land such a declaration in such circumstances cannot amount to forcible ousting of the zamindar. 164 Ind. Cas. 969 (5), relied on.

Or. R. App. to revise the order passed by the First Class Magistrate, Hala, dated March 18, 1939.

Mr. Kishanchand J. Bijlani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Opponents

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

O'Sullivan, J.—This is an application to revise an order passed by the First Class Magistrate, Hala, in proceedings instituted under s. 145, Criminal P. C. by the applicant in his capacity as agent to a zamindar called Muhammad Rahim of Tando Allahyar taluka, Hyderabad District, against Zialdin Shah and his son Shamsal Haq, Pirs of Pir Jhando village, Hala taluka, and five others. Pir Zialdin Shah's name was dropped in the course of the proceedings and the case continued against his son Pir Shamsal Haq, opponent No. 1, and the remaining persons, opponents Nos. 2 to 6. The applicant's allegations were in brief as follows:

Pir Rashidullah, the grandfather of opponent No. 1, had sold in September 1917 certain land in Hala taluka to three persons including the aforesaid zamindar Mahomed Rahim and opponent No. 1's father. Pir Zialdin Shah had also been a party to the sale. The price of the land was payable by instalments and possession thereof was transferred to the purchasers in February 1919 when the first instalment was paid. No mutation in the Record of Rights had ever been effected by Rashidullah or his heirs in favour of the purchaser. Pir Rashidullah died in 1923, the final instalment of the purchase price being paid to his son Zialdin Shah. After Pir Rashidullah's death dispute arose between Zialdin Shah and his brothers regarding succession to their father's estate and gadi, the family being that of the well known Pirs of Jhando. Litigation ensued and did not finally terminate until a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1937. The applicant says that in view of this dispute between the sons of Pir Rashidullah it was not possible to obtain mutation of the Record of Rights in favour of the purchasers.

The land to which these proceedings appertain are part of that sold in 1917 and comprise six blocks, at present numbered 25/1, 18/4, 26/4, 10/1, 18/3 and 3-A which were allotted to Mohammad Rahim in 1927 on a partition between himself and his co-purchasers. These blocks continued in the exclusive possession of Muhammad Rahim being annually cultivated by him. On tained at the hands of the learned District Judge. In this connection reliance was placed upon a decision of the Bombay High Court and also upon a decision of this Court to which I was a party. The Bombay decision is in Rangappa v. Narayanrao (1). There the learned Chief Justice made this observation:

"A preliminary objection has been taken that defendant No. 1 could not appeal as between himself and defendant No. 2 (that is exactly the position in this case). The Subordinate Judge's judgment, however, shows that he dealt with the case at the hearing as if it raised not only a question between the plaintiff and defendants, but also one between the defendants, as his decree directs defendant No. 1 to pay defendant No. 2's costs. This distinguishes the case from cases of Gadadhar Banerjee v. Mun Mohunee Dossee (2) and Atma Ram v. Balkishen (3)."

The decision in Gadadhar Banerjee v. Mun Mohunee Dossee (2) related to a case in which the plaintiff did not appeal but there had been an appeal by the pro forma defendants, by making the real defendants, who had not appealed, respondents; and it was held that the pro forma defendants could question that portion of the decision which, as between the plaintiff and the non-appealing defendants, had not been appealed against. The learned Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court observed that the facts of the case before him distinguished it from the authority in Gadadhar Banerjee v. Mun Mohunee Dossee (2). So far as this Court is concerned, the matter is concluded by the decision in Isri Prasad Singh v. Jagat Prasad Singh (4). The head-note of that decision, which states the gist of the case correctly, runs thus:

"The plaintiff having got a decree for contribution against some of the defendants, was content with the decree and did not appeal against the other defendants who were exonerated, but an appeal was preferred by some of the defendants against whom decrees were passed praying that a decree might be passed against the other defendants as well in order that their liability might be reduced."

It was held that O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil P. C., applied and that the appeal was competent. I repeat that so far as this Court is concerned we are bound by that decision. I therefore hold that in the circumstances of this case the appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, involving as it will, if they should succeed, defendants Nos. 5 to 9, is competent.

The principal question is whether defendants Nos. 5 to 9 form a joint family with defendants Nos. 1 to 4. There was some discussion during the course of the argument as to whether by reason of the fact that at the time the action was brought the parties were admittedly separate, that is to say, the two sets of defendants formed two separate sets of joint family, had the effect of throwing the onus on the person who wished to contend that the separation had taken place on a specified date. In my judgment, however, although it is contended on the authority of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Bhagwani Kunwar v. Mohan Singh (5), that the onus is upon the party contending that separation had taken place on a material date, in the circumstances of this case it is unnecessary to come to any definite conclusion on that point. (After reviewing the evidence on this issue, his Lordship continued). In the circumstances the only conclusion I can arrive at is that defendants Nos. 5 to 9 having failed to establish that they were separate in the year 1924 the year in which the bond in suit was executed, judgment should have been pronounced not only against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 but also against defendants Nos. 5 to 9.

The learned Judge in the Court below found as to Rs. 2,712-8-0 that it was for antecedent debt. Therefore the defendants being sons and grandsons of the executant of the bond are liable. The same argument cannot be used as against defendants Nos. 5 to 9. They can be made liable only on the footing that that sum was for joint family necessity. The case will therefore have to go back for determination of liability of defendants Nos. 5 to 9 as regards Rs. 2,712-8-0. As regards the balance Rs. 1,787-8-0, there is a finding which is binding on both defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and defendants Nos. 5 to 9 that it was for legal necessity. The case therefore will be remitted for the determination of the question as to what extent defendants Nos. 5 to 9 are liable as regards Rs. 2,712-8-0. The decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 will stand.

The learned Subordinate Judge will record a finding on this question within three weeks of the receipt of the record and transmit the same to this Court.

themselves laid him on a cot. The Assistant Surgeon in his evidence says that he did not think that the wound on Gangayya's abdomen was anything but merely superficial and therefore he thought there would be plenty of time to attend to him in the morning. He admits however that when he saw him in the morning he realized that the patient was in a very grave and dangerous situation and he sent for the Magistrate to take his dying declaration. It seems to us that this witness must have made a very perfunctory examination of the deceased when he was brought to his house shortly after receiving the fatal injury, and we think this is a matter which should be brought to the notice of the Surgeon-General.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Decree against some defendants and others exonerated—No appeal by plaintiff, but defendants against whom whole decree was passed appealing with a prayer that decree might be passed against other defendants as well—Appeal held competent.

The plaintiff having got a decree against some of the defendants, was content with the decree and did not appeal against the other defendants who were exonerated, but an appeal was preferred by some of the defendants against whom decree was passed praying that a decree might be passed against the other defendants as well in order that their liability might be reduced:

Held, that O. XLI r. 33 of the Civil P. C. applied and that the appeal was competent. 172 Ind. Cas. 187 (4), followed.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated November 14, 1935.

Mr. S. K. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Rai G. S. Prasad, Rai T. N. Sahai, Messrs. S. S. Prasad Sinha, S. P. Srivastava and G. C. Das, for the Respondents.

Wort, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 arising out of an action on a mortgage, dated September 10, 1924. There were also joined with defendants Nos. 1 to 4 the defendants Nos. 5 to 9. The two principal questions which arose for determination in the Court below were first, whether the consideration for the mortgage was for joint family necessity; and, secondly whether defendants Nos. 1 to 4, together with defendants Nos. 5 to 9, formed members of one joint family, or, as defendants Nos. 5 to 9 alleged, they were separate from defendants Nos. 1 to 4.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were the sons and grandsons of Rameshwar Prasad Singh, who executed the bond in suit. Defendant No. 5 was the brother of Rameshwar Prasad Singh and defendants Nos. 6 to 9 were his sons. We are not here concerned with defendants Nos. 10 to 22 who had been subsequently added.

The learned Judge in the Court below decided that a substantial part of the consideration for the mortgage was for antecedent debt, and, as regards Rs. 1,787-8-0, the finding was that it was chiefly for land revenue and cess and therefore was for joint family necessity. The learned Judge came to the conclusion, in support of the contention of defendants Nos. 5 to 9, that separation of their branch of the family had taken place at the time or before the time of the bond and therefore that branch of the family was not liable in respect of that money.

The only question raised in this appeal is whether the learned Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived on the point I have last stated. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are the appellants, and in substance therefore they are asking for an enlargement of the decree which has been obtained by the plaintiff, in the sense of making defendants Nos. 5 to 9 liable also. It will easily be seen why defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are dissatisfied with the decree of the learned Judge. The property which is the security for the bond of 1924 is an eight anna interest in Mauza Jarang. If the defendant-appellants' contention is right, there remains eight annas interest of that village, admittedly unaffected by the bond of 1924, in which the defendant-appellants would still have an interest.

One of the first points that was raised was whether in the circumstances the appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was competent. It being admitted that the plaintiffs had not appealed and being satisfied with the decree which they ob-the hubbub arose on account of the stabbing of the deceased, the accused was not there. P. W. No. 11 is the watchman of a choultry and his house is next door to the choultry and about 20 yards from the scene of crime. He says that in the middle of the night he was awakened by a knocking at his door and went there and saw the accused. The accused fell down in front of his door. The accused told this witness that he had stabbed Gangayya and then had stabbed himself and at that time there was several knife wounds on the person of the accused. The witness told the accused to go and lie down at some place and not in front of his house and the accused went to the choultry nearby and lay down on the pial of the choultry. P. W. No. 12 is the wife of P. W. No. 11 and she gives evidence to the same effect. These two witnesses are corroborated by the Sub-Inspector of Police who says that P. W. No. 11 came to him at the Police Station and reported this incident. The Sub-Inspector is P. W. No. 13. He says that he went at once to the choultry and saw the accused lying there with wounds on his person and the knife lying near the steps of the choultry two yards away. That knife is M. O. No. 1.

The accused was committed for trial not only for the murder of Gangayya but also on a charge of attempting to commit suicide, but the learned Sessions Judge reserved the charge of the latter offence to a separate trial.

There is also evidence, which we have no reason to doubt, that the deceased himself stated that the accused was the man who stabbed him. He said so to his father P. W. No. 7 and he made a similar statement to the Magistrate who recorded his dying declaration in the morning, but learned Counsel for the appellant very rightly stresses the fact that when P. W. No. 8 got to the side of the injured man, the latter told him that he did not see the person who stabbed him. It is clear in our opinion that the deceased did not see his assailant and his statements that the accused stabbed him were based on what people round him said. But quite apart from that, there is ample evidence to bring home the offence to the accused, namely the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 12, which, as we have said, is corroborated by the statement made by P. W. No. 11 at the Police Station at the very earliest opportunity. The evidence of these two witnesses is also corroborated by the condition of the accused when the Sub-Inspector found him lying on the pial of the choultry immediately afterwards. In the Magistrate's Court, the appellant filed a written statement saying that on that night he was in a fit of madness and while he was lying asleep some unknown person inflicted the injuries on him. In the Sessions Court he said that this statement was correct and denied the truth of P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 12, but gave no reason why they should implicate him falsely.

Learned Counsel for the appellant contends that at the best the offence committed by the appellant would amount to causing grievous hurt. His argument is based on the fact that P. W. No. 2, the Assistant Surgeon, stated in answer to a Court question that the deceased might have survived if a major operation had been performed at once. The witness also stated that he did not open the abdomen as that was a major operation for which he had not the necessary expert assistance and when he was asked why he did not call in some other qualified medical man which he could have done, he said that he was afraid that even so the deceased might possibly die under the operation and he would come to be blamed. The fact remains that the appellant stabbed the deceased on a vital part of the body and that the deceased died as a direct result of that injury. It is clear also that such an injury is one which in the ordinary course will cause death. There were 26 ounces of fluid blood in the peritoneal cavity and, as we have said, there was acute inflammation of the peritoneum. That the deceased might have been saved if expert medical attention had been afforded at once makes no difference as to the nature of the crime. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the accused was guilty of murder and also that the appropriate sentence is death. We confirm the conviction and the sentence passed on the appellant and reject his appeal.

We regret to have to place it on the record that the conduct of the Assistant Surgeon in this case calls for adverse comment. He saw the injured man at his house at 12-30 in the night and made a most perfunctory examination of him, applied some bandages to the wound and told his relations to take him to the hospital. P. W. No. 7 the father of the deceased says that the doctor was angry at being disturbed from his sleep, and hit him a blow with his fist. P. W. No. 5 the uncle of the deceased says that when they got to the hospital, there was no ward attendant there and nobody to do anything for the injured man and that they Mitter that the whole interest in the property passed to the plaintiff-appellant by reason of the rent decree and auction sale which followed it, and that being so, he contends that we cannot now give effect to s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act so as to take away the interest which had become vested in the plaintiff and re-vest such interest in the contesting defendants. In my view, once we are bound to regard this transfer as a transfer made with the consent of the landlord, then it follows that the rent decree and execution sale in consequence of it cannot affect the position. As we are bound to deem the transfer to have been made with consent, then the sale in execution of the rent decree was a sale which in no way affected the contesting defendants' interest. Had the contesting defendants been parties to the rent suit or to the execution proceedings following it, different considerations might arise. However, they were not parties, and in my view the sale in execution of the rent decree cannot now be said to have affected the contesting defendants' interests in any way. In my view the facts of the present case fall precisely within the observations made by Sir George Rankin in the Privy Council case to which I have referred, and we are bound by such observations. In my judgment the contesting defendants in this case were entitled to rely upon s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act and the provisions of the Amendment Act of 1938, and such gave them a good defence to this claim.

Holding as I do that these sections afford the defendant-respondents a good defence, it is unnecessary to consider the question of limitation. For the reasons which I have given, I hold that the lower Courts and Rowland, J., were right in dismissing the plaintiff's claim, and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. It is to be observed that the defendant-respondents in this case do not claim an absolute interest in this property but only claim a title as tenants.

Referred Trial No. 29 and Criminal

Appeal No. 124 of 1939

April 3, 1939

BURN AND STODART, JJ.

In re MAHANTI SREERAMULU—

ACCUSED

Criminal trial—Murder—Death caused as direct result of stabbing by accused—Offence committed is murder—Fact that immediate expert medical attention would have saved deceased does not change nature of crime.

Where an accused has stabbed the deceased on a vital part of the body and the deceased has died as a direct result of that injury and the injury is one which in the ordinary course will cause death, the accused is guilty of murder. The mere fact that the deceased might have been saved if expert medical attention had been afforded at once makes no difference as to the nature of the crime.

Ref. T. and Cr. A. referred by the Sessions Court, Vizagapatam Division, dated February, 4, 1939.

Mr. T. R. Thyagarajan, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Stodart, J.—The accused, a man of 26, has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Gangayya, aged 20. The referred trial raises the question whether we should confirm the sentence of death. The appeal is by the accused praying that the conviction be set aside. It is certain that the deceased was stabbed in the abdomen in the night of August 19, when he was sleeping on the pial of the house in the occupation of one Atchayya. At his cries the other persons who were sleeping there and the deceased's relations came to his help. They carried him on a cot to the house of the Assistant Surgeon and from there to the local fund hospital where he died on the morning of August 21, at 8 'clock. The post mortem examination disclosed the fact that the stab had penetrated the abdominal cavity and had pierced the intestines and that death was due to profuse internal hæmorrhage and acute peritonitis.

P. W. No. 7 the father of the deceased who went to the scene of crime at once on hearing what had happened to his son says that at 9 that night he had seen and talked to the deceased at that place and that the accused was there at the time. He says that the accused and the deceased used to sleep on the pial with 7 or 8 other men. P. W. No. 8 is one of the men who used to sleep on that pial. He says that on the night in question the accused lay down to sleep at 10 P. M. beside him and that when in limine. Their Lordships are of opinion that no such saving can be implied. Section 26N is not a provision to the effect that no action shall lie in certain circumstances, nor has it any reference directly to litigation. Its provision is that every person claiming an interest as a landlord shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer made before January 1, 1923. This is retrospective; the question is not whether general language shall be taken only in a prospective sense. The object of this section can only be to quiet titles which are more than ten years old, and to ensure that if during those ten years the transferee has not been ejected he shall have the right to remain on the land."

It has been argued by Mr. Mahabir Prasad on behalf of the respondents that the present case is precisely covered by the observations of Sir George Rankin to which I have made reference. In the present case the transfer was made before 1923 and since the transfer the transferees have been in possession and are indeed in possession to this very day. He has argued that as a result of s. 26N or, perhaps to be more accurate, the latest amendment to this Act, we are bound to assume that the landlord consented to this transfer and, therefore, the transferee cannot now be ejected as he has been in possession ever since the date of the transfer.

This view finds support in recent Bench decisions of this Court. In Thakur Rai v. Issardyal Parshad (3), it was held that s. 26 N of the Bihar Tenancy Act was retrospective and therefore the interest of a transferee of a non-transferable holding was not affected by the sale in execution of a decree for rent against the recorded tenants only. In that case there was a transfer in favour of the plaintiff of a part of a non-transferable holding in the year 1913. In 1931, the landlord filed a suit against the recorded tenants but did not make the transferee a party. He obtained a rent decree, and in execution of that decree he purchased the holding on June 17, 1932. It appears that the present plaintiff was somehow ejected, and on December 21, 1933, he brought a suit for recovery of possession. This Court held that the transfer to the plaintiff had to be regarded as a transfer made with the consent of the owner, and, therefore, a good transfer. That being so, a rent suit brought against other persons could not possibly affect his title, and his title was in no way prejudiced by a sale in execution of the rent decree. It is to be observed that in this case the transferee was actually out of possession, yet the Court held that he had a good title by reason of the transfer and, therefore, was entitled to possession. In the case before the Court at the present moment the transferee is in possession and has been from the date of transfer.

A similar view was taken by this Court in the case of Muhammad Shafait v. Nathali Ram (4). In that case a landlord in execution of a money decree against some of the tenants purchased an occupancy holding which had been sold to the plaintiff before 1923, and in that capacity disposed the plaintiff who sued for possession. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court but was decreed by the lower Appellate Court and during the pendency of the appeal to the High Court the Bihar Tenancy Amendment Act, 1934, came into force. It was held that although the plaintiff had no title at the date of the suit nevertheless when the new Act came into force his title became complete and he could get a decree for possession. Here again the Court had to consider the effect of s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act. When the plaintiff in that case was dispossessed, he had no title, but the moment the Bihar Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1934 came into force the transfer to him had to be deemed as a transfer with the consent of the landlord. It had, therefore, to be regarded as a good transfer, and accordingly he was entitled to maintain his suit for possession. The effect of this section was also considered in the case of Miss G. B. Solano v. Umeshwari Koer (5). The facts of that case are somewhat different from the facts of the present case; but the case is important, because the learned Judges took the same view of the effect of s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act as the learned Judges had taken in the earlier cases.

In my view the cases of this Court to which I have referred must be followed. Though the transfers in the present case conferred no title upon the transferees at the date of the transfers, the effect of the amendments to which I have made reference is to give the transferee a good title. We must now regard the transfers as if they were made with the consent of the landlord. If they were made with the consent of the landlord, then the interest in the occupancy holding passed to the contesting defendants. It has been argued by Dr.

before Mr. Justice Rowland in second appeal, and he held that the suit was barred by limitation. He, however, was of opinion that the transferees could not claim the protection of s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act as they could not pray in aid that section to revive rights which had already been extinguished. In the result he upheld the decision of the Court below though on different grounds and dismissed the appeal.

Before Mr. Justice Rowland it does not seem to have been seriously contended that the contesting defendants had a good defence under s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act. The learned Judge observes :—

"In second appeal by the plaintiff it is contended that the statute has not been correctly applied by the Subordinate Judge. It cannot operate to revive in favour of defendants first party a title which had been extinguished before the amendment of the Beng. Ten. Act came into force. We have to see, it is said, what was the effect of the decree and the auction purchase at the time when they took place and if by then title once passed the statute would not divest the title so vested. This argument appears to me to have force. In fact, Mr. S. M. Mullick for the respondents had nothing to urge against it."

Before us, however, it has been strenuously argued by Mr. Mahahir Prasad on behalf of the respondents that his clients were protected by s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act and that they cannot be ejected.

In my view the respondents' contention is well founded. At the time when this litigation took place the law relating to the matter was contained in s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act. That section was in these terms :—

"Every person claiming an interest as landlord in any holding or portion thereof shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer of such holding or portion by sale, exchange, gift or will made before the first day of January 1923, and, in the case of the transfer of a portion of a holding, to have accepted the distribution of the rent of the holding as stated in the instrument of transfer, or if there is no such instrument, as settled between the transferor and the transferee."

This section has now been replaced as a result of amendments made by the Bihar Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1938. The amended section is now s. 26B of the Bihar Tenancy Act and there is a proviso to it in these terms :—

"Provided that if the transfer was made before the first day of January, 1923, it shall be binding on the landlord, and no notice shall be necessary and no landlord's registration fee shall be payable."

The transfer in question in this case was made in the year 1912, and by reason of s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act and the proviso to the present s. 26B of the Bihar Tenancy Act, we must assume that the transfer was made with the consent of the landlord. The effect of s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act has been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of K. C. Mukerjee v. Ramratan Koer (1) where it was held that s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bihar Tenancy Amendment Act of 1934, is expressed and intended to have retrospective action. As there was no saving clause, it is applicable to pending suits. In that case a suit was brought on June 30, 1927, against a transferee on the footing that she had taken a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding in the village by a deed dated September 28, 1916. The case made against her was that the transfer of the holding attracted certain principles of the law laid down in the well-known case of Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (2) and the landlord was entitled to re-enter upon the holding as upon an abandonment by the tenant. The Subordinate Judge accepted the plaintiff's case and passed a decree ejecting the transferee. On appeal to this Court the learned Judges were of opinion that since the date of the deed in question the plaintiff or his predecessors had recognized the right of the transferee and could not now impugn the transfer. Whilst the appeal was pending before their Lordships of the Privy Council, the Bihar Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1934 was passed which added s. 26N to the Bihar Tenancy Act. Their Lordships applied this amendment to the facts of the case and held that the landlord must be deemed to have consented to the transfer which was made before January 1, 1923, and, therefore, the transfer had to be regarded as a good transfer, and, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to eject the transferee. At p. 271^a Sir George Rankin, who delivered the judgment of the Board, made the following observations :—

"In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships that unless some saving can be implied as regards occupancy holdings which at the date of the commencement of the Act are in question in a pending suit, s. 26N must be applied to the present case and the plaintiff's appeal must fail his client he would ask that the order should be suspended in its operation till he had time to move a competent Civil Court and obtain an order therefrom. Be that however as it may, we are of opinion that the order of the learned Magistrate holding that Sayed Mahmoodshah was entitled to possession of the disputed property and that the Receiver should hand over possession of the dargah to him after one month from the date of the order was illegal in view of the clear provisions of s. 145, Criminal P. C., and in view of the Magistrate's own finding that at the time of the order under s. 145, cl. (1) the dargah was in the possession of Rahimalishah the applicant. We accordingly reverse the order of the learned Magistrate and direct that the applicant be put in possession of the dargah and declare him to be entitled to the possession thereof until evicted therefrom in the due course of law and forbid all disturbance of such possession until such eviction.

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) as amended in 1938—S. 26-B, Proviso—Transfer of non-transferable holding before 1923—Transferee ever since in possession—Sale in execution of decree for rent against recorded tenant—Interest of transferee, if affected.

Where a transfer of a non-transferable holding was made in 1912 and since then the transferee has been in possession, it must be assumed by reason of the proviso to s. 26-B of the Bihar Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1938, that the transfer was made with the landlord's consent. In such a case the transferee cannot be ejected. The interest of such a transferee is not affected by the sale in execution of a decree for rent against the recorded tenant only. 160 Ind. Cas. 105 (2) (1); 179 Ind. Cas. 104 (3), 169 Ind. Cas. 1000 (4) and 171 Ind. Cas. 306 (5), relied on, 27 Ind. Cas. 61 (2), referred to.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Rowland confirming the decrees of the Courts below which were in favour of the defendants.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain property bearing survey plot No. 236 in the village of Mokamah. The holding which was non-transferable originally stood in the name of the defendants second party, and they by two sale-deeds dated October 5, 1912, transferred a part of the holding to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the remainder to other transferees who are now represented by defendant No. 15. It appears that after these transfers the transferees entered into possession of the property and erected golas thereon, and from the findings it would appear that they have been in continuous possession for a matter of over twenty years. In the year 1930 the landlords instituted a suit for arrears of rent against the original tenants, the defendants second party, and on May 18, 1930, they obtained a decree. On September 22, 1931, the holding was sold in execution of this rent decree and purchased by the plaintiff-appellant who is said to be a minor son of one of the landlords. On November 18, 1931, the sale was confirmed, and on April 17, 1933, a Civil Court person went to effect delivery of possession. The latter, however, found that there were pakka buildings on the land and he was unable to deliver possession. On November 29, 1933, the plaintiff brought the present suit claiming a declaration of title and recovery of possession of the property after giving defendants time to remove the structures built thereon.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and defendant No. 15. Two grounds were taken in defence. In the first place, it was alleged that the contesting defendants who were transferees or represented the transferees of the original tenants, were entitled to the protection given by s. 26N of the Bihar Tenancy Act and, therefore, they could not be ejected. Secondly, it was pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

The learned Munsif held that the suit was barred by limitation; but on appeal the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that there was no bar of limitation, but it held that the transfer to the contesting defendants by the original tenants was a good transfer and that they could not now be ejected. The matter came brother Muhammadalishah and he was in possession of it. The applicant made no reference to Sayed Mahmoodshah, the opponent, and obviously intended to convey that he was in possession in his own right. The learned Magistrate, as appears from his order, found that at the time of the complaint under s. 145, Criminal P. O., the dargah was in the possession of Rahimalishah, the applicant, and that the opponent, Sayed Mahmoodshah, claimed as a descendant of Sayed Abdullah Shah to be the sajjadahnishin of the dargah and alleged that Rahimalishah was a mujawar appointed by him.

Now in a matter under s. 145, Criminal P. O., the procedure to be adopted and the manner in which the proceedings are to be disposed of are clearly set out in the section itself. Under cl. (1) when the Magistrate assumes jurisdiction he is to require the parties concerned to put in written statements of their respective claims 'as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.' Under cl. (4) the Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements put in, hear the parties, receive their evidence, take such further evidence as he thinks necessary,

"and if possible decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order before-mentioned in such possession of the said subject."

It is clear from these provisions of s. 145 that what the Magistrate is concerned with in proceedings relating to disputes as to immovable property under Chap. XII, Criminal P. O., is not the right to possess the subject-matter of dispute but the actual possession thereof at the date of the order under cl. (1), s. 145. The expression 'actual possession' is plain and unambiguous and has no reference to any right to possess. In Agni Kumar Das v. Mantazaddin (1), a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the words 'actual possession' in sub-s. (1) of s. 144, Criminal P. O., mean actual physical possession, even though wrongful, e. g., that of a recent trespasser in actual possession at the time of the proceedings under s. 145. Our attention was invited by the learned Advocate for the opponent to the case in Nritta Gopal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (2), in which a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the possession of an agent or servant which is permissive cannot give a party to a proceeding a locus standi as against his principal or master. It was contended that in the present case the possession of the applicant was that of a servant of the opponent. The applicant had therefore no locus standi as against his master, the opponent in these proceedings. The decision however is not applicable in the circumstances of this case; for, whereas in the case decided by the Calcutta High Court it was admitted that Chandi Charan Singh one of the shebaitis, was acting with the permission of the other shebaitis, in the case before us the applicant repudiates all connection with the opponent. No evidence one way or the other was recorded.

Now, the learned Magistrate having found that at the time of the complaint the dargah was in the actual possession of Rahimalishah the applicant, he had, under cl. (6) of s. 145, to issue an order declaring Rahimalishah, to be entitled to possession thereof until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction. And we have no doubt that the learned Magistrate would have made such an order had it not been for the fact that he appears to have been influenced and in part misled by certain statements and admissions made before him in these proceedings by the learned Advocate who appeared for the applicant. This is apparent from the order under revision. The learned Magistrate states:

"At the hearing of the matter Mr. Aslam, Counsel for party No. 2, fairly conceded that in view of the City Survey Extract produced by party No. 1 he cannot press the claim of his client in the Criminal Court."

And again:

"Mr. Aslam for party No. 2 assures me that he will move the competent Civil Court to assert his own position and hence he requests that the Receiver appointed by this Court may be directed not to hand over possession to party No. 1 before expiry of one month from to-day."

The learned Advocate for the applicant (the applicant being party No. 2 in the Magistrate's Court) informs us that Mr. Aslam's statements and admissions have been entirely misunderstood by the learned Magistrate and that all Mr. Aslam intended to convey to the learned Magistrate was that so far as the right to possess is concerned he conceded that Sayed Mahmoodshah had a prima facie right in view of the City Survey Extract produced by him; and that when Mr. Aslam stated that he wanted time to move a competent Civil Court what he intended to convey to the Magistrate was that if the order was going to be against that on a claim to recover Rs. 5,250 as arrears of maintenance he got a decree for Rs. 4,800 with future interest at 6 per cent per annum and there is no indication whatever of a claim for past interest), this claim should be disallowed. He further refers to the case of Saraswati Kuer (Bahuria) v. Sheoratan Kuer (Bahuria) (A. I. R. 1934 Patna, 99) (6) in which it was held that

"a widow is not entitled to claim interest on the sum which she claims as maintenance under the general Hindu Law. She is, however, entitled to interest from the date of the suit until the date of payment at 6 per cent. per annum."

The lower Court had decided this question on the view that the claimant was entitled to interest by way of damages and relied on Narendra Chandra Lahiri v. Nalini Sundari Debi (25 Ind. Cas. 939) (1) in which the plaintiff was held entitled to get interest by way of damages because she had been wrongfully kept out of her dues by the defendant. Learned Counsel for the respondent has preferred to rely on the Interest Act of 1839, and we think that he was entitled to do so. The claim in the present case is for a certain sum payable at a certain time, that is a monthly allowance of guzara impliedly payable at some time in every month for that month. Section 1 (the only section in the Act) of Act No. XXXII of 1939, the Interest Act, provides as follows:

"It is hereby enacted that, upon all such debts or sums certain payable at a certain time or otherwise the Court before which such debts or sums may be recovered may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time."

In our opinion a monthly maintenance or allowance made payable under a compromise in a suit comes within the scope of this provision and it was competent to the lower Court to allow interest at the current rate up to the date of suit. The rate which has been allowed as the current rate by the lower Court is Rs. 6 per cent. per annum which, as the rate which is generally allowed for pendente lite and future interest, cannot be said to be in any way unreasonable.

On this view there is no force in the present appeal which accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145 (1)—"Actual possession" has no reference to any right to possess.

What the Magistrate is concerned with in proceedings relating to disputes as to immovable property under Chap. XII, Criminal P. C., is not the right to possess the subject-matter of dispute but the actual possession thereof at the date of the order under cl. (1), s. 145. Or. R. App. to revise an order of the Third Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, dated April 20, 1939.

Mr. W. B. L. Vellani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Lobo, J.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Third Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, in certain proceedings before him under s. 145, Criminal P. C., relating to a "dargah" called 'Sayed Abdullah Shah Dargah' situated near Clifton in Karachi. In compliance with an order under cl. (1) of s. 145 the applicant Rahimalishah and the opponent Sayed Mahmoodshah filed written statements. The opponent contended that he was the custodian and sajjadahnishin of the dargah; that as such custodian and sajjadahnishin it was his right to appoint mujawars of the dargah, that he had appointed several mujawars in succession, the last of these being the applicant Rahimalishah. He contended that Rahimalishah had recently openly declared himself to be the person in sole charge of the dargah and its property and income. The applicant in his written statement contended that the dargah of Sayed Abdullah Shah had been for about sixty years in the possession of one Murshid Syed Ali Shah; on his demise in 1920 his eldest spiritual son Karamalishah an elder brother of the applicant was appointed mutawalli; thereafter two other brothers of his, Abdulla Sain and Muhammadali Shah, were appointed mutwallis. He himself had been given charge of the shrine by his limitation. Had he, as he might have done, put the claimant to proof of the amount of arrears still outstanding, the case might have presented itself in a quite different form. The evidence on the record proves that a whole series of payments were made to the claimant on account during the years 1932 and 1933. By Ex. A-7, Ex. A-6, Ex. 11 and the deposition of Dwarka Prasad proving entries in accounts it is established that the following payments were made to Brijendra Bahadur Singh, all of them on account

March 16, 1932,	100
May 11, 1932	200
October 9, 1932	25
November 16, 1932	300
December 20, 1932	300 and
April 30, 1933	600

The last four entries all appear as payments alal hisab and they all find a place under head 114 described as peshgi or advance account. Brijendra Bahadur Singh went into the witness box and he proved by his own statement that the guzara for March to November, 1931, was still in arrears. In examination-in-chief he stated that he received something towards the arrears of his maintenance in 1932 and 1933, but no question was put in cross-examination to suggest that this amount was a payment towards the arrears of March to November, 1931. The learned Special Judge, in our opinion, has rightly held that the entries in regard to these payments and the wording of the cheques contain a clear acknowledgment that at the date of that payment there were arrears outstanding, that is they did not at any rate amount to a full settlement of the account, but were merely payments towards that account. On behalf of the appellant it has been argued that such an acknowledgment as is found in these papers only amounts to an acknowledgment of the existence of a liability to the extent of the amount actually paid, cf. Ram Prasad v. Binaek Shukul (A. I. R. 1933, All., 453) (4) the second head-note on p. 454. We think that the acknowledgment which is found in these entries that payments are made alal hisab goes further than this and comes rather within the scope of such an acknowledgment as is mentioned in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rup Chand (I. L. R. 33 Cal., 1047) (5) in which it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "an acknowledgment of liability should the balance turn out to be against the person making it, is a sufficient acknowledgment under s. 19 of the Lim. Act."

The acknowledgment found in this case is a general and unconditional acknowledgment, and it would cover any arrears existing within three years of the date at which that acknowledgment was made. The learned Government Advocate sought to rely on the words "in advance" which find a place in the cheque, Ex. A-6, dated May 11, 1932, and contended that this indicated that the guzara had been paid up to the end of April, 1932. On the other hand this very document bore a receipt by the claimant in which it was stated that Rs. 200 only was received towards the guzara arrears. In these circumstances it could not be said that acceptance of this cheque amounted to an admission that this was an advance payment towards the guzara of May, 1932. Learned Counsel for the respondent has referred to Chitaley's Indian Lim. Act, 1938 Edition at p. 658 where he says:

"Thus where a person admits the existence of open and unsettled accounts between himself and others, there is impliedly an admission of liability coupled with a qualification of such admission by the condition that the balance is found on investigation to be against the person making the admission. Such an admission is sufficient for the purposes of this section provided that the balance is found to be against the person making the admission."

(In the present case the balance is proved by the evidence of the claimant and its existence is not denied in the written statement). Reference has also been made to a passage on p. 666 which runs as follows:

"Thus, an acknowledgment of a debt need not specify any precise sum as due."

In our opinion the learned Special Judge has rightly held that Ex. 11 (and indeed the same might have been said about several other exhibits) serves as an acknowledgment under s. 19 of the Indian Lim. Act and thus saves limitation so far as the claim from March 1931, till November, 1931 is concerned.

The second question which has been argued before us is in regard to the decision on issue No. 1 in regard to interest. The learned Gov. Advocate for the appellant contends that in view of the fact that there has been no demand and refusal in the present case so far as appears on the record and since in the past no interest has been demanded or paid (vide for example Ex. 6 the decree obtained by the present respondent in a former case which shows nothing to show whether at any time and, if so, when any final settlement of account was arrived at. On the Court of Wards taking over the estate again on May 12, 1934, Brijendra Bahadur Singh filed an application under s. 17 of the Court of Wards Act on November 29, 1934, claiming arrears of guzara from March 1, 1931. To this the Court of Wards after some time replied, on November 20, 1935, admitting the claim for three years' maintenance for the period ending on November 29, 1934, but stating that the claim for the period of nine months from March 1931, to October 1931, was time-barred. They also denied that the claimant was entitled to any interest on the arrears. Subsequently on an application having been made under the Encumbered Estates Act, Thakur Brijendra Bahadur Singh on March 3, 1936, filed a claim for Rs. 13,200 on account of arrears of guzara from March 1931 to October 1934, with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the arrears and future interest at 3/8 per cent. per annum till the date of realization. He also made other claims which do not arise in this appeal. This claim was contested by the Deputy Commissioner in a written statement filed on November 14, 1933, in which it was stated that out of Rs. 13,200 Rs. 10,500 had been admitted to be due and had been allowed by the Court of Wards under s. 19 of the Court of Wards Act, but that against that amount a sum of Rs. 4,009-4-4 was to be set-off under the attachment of three decrees which had been obtained by the estate against the claimant. As regards the claim for Rs. 2,700, nine months' guzara from March to November, 1931, the effect that this amount might have been due was not denied but it was pleaded that the claim was time-barred, and it was said that the payment relied on by the claimant to bring the claim within limitation was denied, and even if proved, did not save limitation. The claimant had alleged that no question of limitation arose because a part payment had been made in April, 1933, of which an entry was to be found in the estate papers. There is no doubt that the Court of Wards was in a difficult position because although it had taken over the management of the estate in May, 1934, it was not in possession of the estate papers of the time during which the estate had been under the management and control of the taluqdar Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh himself. Even then it seems to us that the defence put forward was not as complete as it should have been as the estate was presumably entitled to put the claimant to proof of the fact that the amount claimed for the period from March to November 1931, was still outstanding. This the estate failed to do. It by implication admitted the amount to be outstanding and merely pleaded that the claim for that amount was barred by limitation.

The learned Special Judge on the pleadings framed six issues, of which only issues Nos. 1 and 2 are still for decision in the present appeal. They are :

- (1) Is the claimant entitled to any interest on the arrears of maintenance; if so, at what rate?
- (2) Is the claimant entitled to any maintenance from March 1931, till November 1931?

Is this claim within limitation?

The learned Special Judge took issue No. 2 first. He held that the case was governed by Art. 115 of the Indian Lim. Act. He accepted the contention that the payment of money alal hisab amounted to an acknowledgment and saved limitation so far as the claim from March 1931, to November, 1931, was concerned, and he accordingly decreed the claim for that period as well as for the period from December, 1931, to the date of suit which was admitted to be due. On issue No. 1 in regard to interest he held, relying on the cases of Narendra Chandra Lahiri v. Nalini Sundari Debi (26 Ind. Cas., 939), (1), Parshadi Lal v. Brij Mohan Lal, (I. L. R. 11 Lucknow, 575 at p. 582) (2) and Bhriugu Datt v. Gaya Prasad, (10 O. W. N. 1271) (3), that the claimant was entitled to interest by way of damages. It may be noted that in deciding this issue he stated incorrectly that the claimant had claimed interest by way of damages. The claimant had in fact merely claimed interest without alleging that he sought it as damages or otherwise.

In this appeal it is once more contended that the use of the phrase alal hisab does not constitute acknowledgment so as to bring the claim for the period from March, 1931, to November, 1931, within limitation. The position is certainly very peculiar and gives rise to some suspicion, but the matter has to be decided in the light of the pleadings, and the position in regard to the pleadings is that the plaintiff by implication admitted that this amount was due, but merely pleaded that it was barred by interest to interpret the section so as to give relief to the defendants in respect of the interest which they would otherwise be liable to pay. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to have a decree for the principal sum of Rs. 12,500 and a total interest Rs. 12,500 up to April 26, 1929, when the suit was filed, plus pendente lite and future interest as ordered by the High Court.

S. Varadachariar, J.—I wish to add a few words with reference to the contention urged by the learned Counsel for the respondents on the application of s. 7 of the Bihar Act of 1939 to the circumstances of this case. That section limits the interest claimable up to the date of the plaint to the "amount of loan mentioned in the document." As Rs. 1,00,000 is the amount mentioned in the mortgage bond in the present case, the learned Counsel argued that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim full interest as per terms of the bond, so long as it did not exceed Rs. 1,00,000. I am unable to accede to this contention. On the plaintiffs' own showing, the liability of the appellants to the plaintiffs was only to the extent of one-sixth of the total liability and the total amount of the loan has for the purposes of this suit been found to be only Rs. 75,000. Though the respondents' contention has the merit of plausibility and ingenuity, it seems to me that on a reasonable interpretation of the section, the appellants' liability for interest up to the date of the institution of the suit must be limited to Rs. 12,500. The appeal is to this extent allowed and the case will be remitted to the High Court for a revised decree being passed on the above footing. The plaintiffs will be entitled to the costs awarded to them by the decrees of the High Court and the Trial Court. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Maurice Gwyer, C. J.—I agree.

F. O. A. against the order of the Special Judge, First Grade, Kheri, dated April 16, 1937.

Mr. H. S. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sita Ram and Raghunandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a first appeal by the Deputy Commissioner, Kheri, as Manager of the Court of Wards, Mahewa Estate belonging to Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, taluqdar, from the judgment of the Special Judge, 1st Grade, Kheri, who has granted a simple money decree to the creditor claimant respondent of this appeal Thakur Brijendra Bahadur Singh for the full amount claimed.

This appeal has arisen out of the following circumstances:

The claimant respondent Thakur Brijendra Bahadur Singh under the guardianship of his mother had instituted a suit claiming the whole Mahewa taluqa. The defendant to that suit was the Deputy Commissioner as Manager of the Mahewa estate which was at that time under the Court of Wards. (It was subsequently released from the Court of Wards but again taken over by the Court of Wards on May 12, 1934). In that suit a compromise was arrived at on September 13, 1917, the important condition of which for the purposes of this case was that Brijendra Bahadur Singh was to receive a monthly guzara or maintenance allowance of Rs. 300. That compromise was subsequently upheld in a suit and is not now in dispute. During the period in which the estate was free the payment of the guzara to Brijendra Bahadur Singh was somewhat irregular, and it seems that although payments were made from time to time, these payments were always made alal hisab, that is on account, and there is

Mr. Raghubir Singh, (Advocate, Federal Court) with Mr. P. P. Varma, (Advocate, Patna, High Court), instructed by Mr. T. K. Prasad, Agent, for the Respondents.

S. M. Sulaiman, J.—This is a mortgagors' appeal arising out of a suit brought to enforce a mortgage, dated January 1, 1915, executed by Dabindra Prasad Sakul, defendant No. 4, and Birendra Prasad Sakul, defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,00,000 carrying interest at Rs. 0-8-0 per cent. per mensem compounded every second year. The present plaintiffs were by inheritance entitled to only two sixth share in the mortgage deed. The rest has gone to the defendants. The Courts below have found that there was a legal necessity for 25,000 only which represented an unpaid purchase money for properties taken by both, while Rs. 25,000 went into the pocket of Dabindra alone. The plaintiffs had discharged Dabindra Prasad and his sons from all liability and sued to enforce the mortgage against the half share of Birendra and his sons. The amount claimed in the plaint was one-sixth of Rs. 1,00,000 plus corresponding interest. The Courts below have passed a decree for Rs. 12,500 (one-sixth of Rs. 75,000) and interest at contract rate up to the date fixed for payment in the decree. The defendants' plea that s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, should be applied was rejected by the High Court on the ground that the section had been held by a Full Bench to be void.

Section 11 of the old Act has now been replaced by s. 7 of the new Act (Act VII of 1939), the applicability of which is governed by our ruling in Case No. 9 of 1939 (*Surendra Prasad Narain Singh v. Sri Gajadhar Prasad Sahu Trust Estate) decided to-day.

If the principal sum due from the defendants-appellants were taken to be Rs. 12,500, and if the principle of s. 7 were to apply and the plaintiffs are to be given interest up to the date of the suit, not exceeding the principal sum, then the total amount due up to April 26, 1929, when the suit was brought would be Rs. 25,000 only. According to the accounts as appended to the decree of the first suit, the amount of principal and interest calculated up to that date exceeds Rs. 28,000. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this amount should be reduced to Rs. 25,000.

The learned Advocate for the appellants, however, contends before us that as the sum of Rs. 1,00,000 is mentioned in the mortgage deed, the maximum limit for the award of interest is that figure, and therefore the amount awarded by the Courts below, being well below it, cannot be reduced. It seems difficult to accept this argument when the plaintiffs themselves have broken the integrity of the mortgage and split up the liability.

Reading s. 7 of the new Act as a whole, it is quite obvious that it deals with a suit brought by a money-lender (against the defendant who is sued) in respect of a loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) in which a decree has to be passed (against the defendant who is sued) the amount of interest allowed prior to the suit not exceeding the amount of the loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) or if the loan (due from the defendant sued against) is based on a document, the amount of the loan (due from the defendant sued against) mentioned in or evidenced by such a document. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature that if there are several executants who have borrowed various sums and the creditor sues one of them for his separate share only, having already realized the balance from the others, then the maximum prescribed for the amount of interest to be decreed against him is not to exceed the aggregate of the various sums borrowed by him as well as all the other pro forma defendants who are not really being sued. The only reasonable interpretation to put on the section is to read it as referring to the claim brought against the particular defendant who is sued, and the amount which is due from him alone and is the subject-matter of the claim.

The construction sought to be put on the section on behalf of the plaintiffs would frustrate the object in view. In the present case, on the findings of the Courts below, the principal amount for which the contesting defendants were liable, is only Rs. 12,500 and no more. This is therefore the only amount, apart from interest, for which the decree can be passed against them. The mortgage-deed was wholly invalid in respect of Rs. 25,000 as against them. In my judgment, it will be in accord with the intention of the Provincial Legislature as disclosed by the various provisions in the Act for the reduction of

The trial Court in a very elaborate judgment repelled almost all the pleas set up in defence and decreed the suit for the arrears of rent for 1341 Fasli and for ejectment.

Both the parties appealed from the decision of the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court disagreed with the findings of the trial Court and allowed the appeal of the defendant and dismissed that of the plaintiffs. From the decision of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiffs have filed these two appeals.

The lower Appellate Court on the evidence in the case refused to give any definite finding as to whether the land was held in muafi right by the defendant or not, but on a consideration of that and other evidence in the case came to a definite finding of fact that the defendant had been holding before the date of the suit the land in dispute as a tenant. Whether any rent had been settled between the parties or the rent had to be determined in future is not quite clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. This finding of the Court gives effect to a plea in defence set up in para. 13 of the written statement. This finding is a finding of fact and binding upon me in second appeal. The case, therefore, resolves itself into a simple question of law as to whether s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act would cover also the case of a person who was not a trespasser before the suit was filed but was holding as a tenant although his rent was undetermined. The answer of this question is very simple and is furnished by the language of s. 127, itself. Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, in my opinion, cannot be resorted to for the purpose of securing the ejectment of persons whose title to the land is not clear or who while holding with the consent of the landlord are holding without any determination of rent between them and the landlord. Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, must on its terms apply to a person who was a rank trespasser before the filing of the suit and whom the landlord wishes to eject or from whom he wishes to realise rent. If he wishes to do any of these things, he has been given an option by law for the purpose of securing his object to treat him as a tenant for the purpose of that suit. It is not open to the landlord to have recourse to s. 127, in respect of persons, who are not treated as tenants for the purpose of a suit under s. 127, but who were admittedly tenants from before although their rent was undetermined. If the object of the landlord is to have the rent of an admitted tenant determined, there are other provisions in the Oudh Rent Act which arise for application. In my opinion, on the finding of fact that the defendant was holding the land in suit as a tenant since before the suit, the suit was not maintainable.

The result is that both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7—Scope—Loan advanced on mortgage—Creditor suing one of executors for separate share having already realized balance from others—Maximum amount of interest that can be decreed.

Reading s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regn. of Transactions) Act as a whole, it is quite obvious that it deals with a suit brought by a money-lender (against the defendant who is sued) in respect of a loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) in which a decree has to be passed (against the defendant who is sued) the amount of interest allowed prior to the suit not exceeding the amount of the loan advanced (to the defendant sued against) or if the loan (due from the defendant sued against) is based on a document, the amount of the loan (due from the defendant sued against) mentioned in or evidenced by such a document. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature that if there are several executors who have borrowed various sums and the creditor sues one of them for his separate share only, having already realized the balance from the others, then the maximum prescribed for the amount of interest to be decreed against him is not to exceed the aggregate of the various sums borrowed by him as well as all the other pro forma defendants who are not really being sued. The only reasonable interpretation to put on the section is to read it as referring to the claim brought against the particular defendant who is sued, and the amount which is due from him alone and is the subject-matter of the claim. It will be in accord with the intention of the Provincial Legislature as disclosed by the various provisions in the Act for the reduction of interest to interpret the section so as to give relief to the defendants in respect of the interest which they would otherwise be liable to pay. 187 Ind. Cas. 612, referred to.

Where the total amount of loan is Rs. 75,000 but the liability of the defendant is only to the extent of one-sixth of this liability i. e., Rs. 12,500, the interest that would be allowed to the plaintiff against the defendant would not exceed Rs. 12,500.

that represent only interest. The scheme of the Bihar Money-lenders Acts emphasises the distinction between liability in respect of the principal and liability in respect of the interest and whether a party relies on the words "mentioned in" or on the words "evidenced by" at the end of s. 7 of the Act of 1939, the "amount of loan" must be determined with reference to the whole document and not by confining attention to a particular entry.

I am for the above reasons unable to accede to the respondents' contention that the sum of Rs. 11,246-9-9 shown in Ex. I (z) (a) should be taken as the starting point for the determination of the extent of the defendants' liability even under s. 7 of Bihar Act VII of 1939. The plaintiff will only be entitled to claim up to the date of the plaint the sum of Rs. 3,700 or such other sum as the parties may agree or the High Court may on the accounts find to represent the principal amount due. On this sum the plaintiffs will be entitled to simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the plaint to the date of the decree to be passed by the High Court. From that date, the aggregate amount due for principal and interest will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

The decrees of the High Court and of the trial Court are set aside except in so far as they relate to costs. The High Court will pass a revised decree in the light of the foregoing directions. The defendants will remain liable for the costs awarded against them by the decree of the trial Court and the original decree of the High Court. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Maurice Gwyer, C. J.—I concur, and only desire to add a few words. Section 7 of the Act of 1939 is no doubt extremely obscure and ill-drawn; but if the Advocate-General's contention were correct, I should find it difficult to understand why, in an Act plainly intended for the relief of debtors, money-lenders should have been presented with so simple a method of circumventing it. I should for this reason be unwilling to accept his contention, unless the language of the Act left me no alternative. In my opinion that is not so. I agree that it is impossible to regard the record of transactions which was kept by the parties in the present case as a document on which a loan can be said to have been based or which evidences a loan; and I think that the words in s. 2 of the Act, "transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability," ought in any case, having regard to the manifest intent of the Act, to be strictly construed.

I agree with the order proposed to be made.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 127—Scope and applicability—Person not trespasser before suit but holding as tenant although rent undetermined—Section does not apply.

Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act cannot be resorted to for the purpose of securing the ejectment of persons whose title to the land is not clear or who while holding with the consent of the landlord are holding without any determination of rent between them and the landlord. Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act does not cover the case of a person who was not a trespasser before the suit was filed but was holding as a tenant although his rent was undetermined.

S. R. A. against the order of the District Judge of Sitapur, dated October 30, 1936.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Rauf Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naziruddin, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal has taken much longer than an appeal of this nature should have taken. This is due to the fact that the defendant, or whoever represented the defendant, did not put forward in the written statement the defendant's pleas as clearly and specifically as one would desire. Secondly it has to be noticed that the judgments in the two Courts below have proceeded upon entirely different grounds.

The suit was a simple suit for determination of rent for land held by the defendant under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act and consequent ejectment of the defendant.

The defence, considering all the different pleas mentioned in the written statement, amounted to saying that the defendant had not taken the land or was not retaining possession of the land without being entitled to it and it was not open to the plaintiffs to treat him as a tenant for the purposes of ejecting him or claiming determination of rent.

Ex. I (z) (a) is "the document on which the loan is based." This expression is, to say the least, not very happy but interpreting it in the light of the definition of "loan" in s. 2 (f) and of the scheme of the Act, it is not very difficult to gather the meaning intended. In attempting to include in the definition of "loan," documents executed in respect of a past liability (as distinguished from a contemporaneous advance), the Legislature used the expression "transaction on a bond...executed in respect of a past liability." Here again, the expression "transaction on a bond" is perhaps open to criticism and I am not sure if the word "bond" in this context was intended to be limited to a formal deed or to documents of the kind specified in the definition of "bond" in the Indian Stamp Act. But I am unable to believe that mere debit entries or balance entries in accounts (even though signed by the debtor) could have been intended to be comprised in the expression "transaction on a bond." It seems to me at least necessary that the document relied on should have been intended to embody the contract between the parties and should ex facie show a promise or undertaking to pay before it can be spoken of as a "bond." The Indian Law had clearly emphasized the distinction between a promise to pay and a mere statement or acknowledge of liability (see the antithesis in Art. 1 of the Indian Stamp Act and the way that an I. O. U. is dealt with in the illustrations to s. 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act). The decision in Narain Das v. Miran Bakhsh (5), seems to me to have gone too far in holding that book entries of balances signed by the defendants would amount to a "bond" within the meaning of Art. 67 of the Indian Lim. Act. The definition of "bond" in s. 2 (3) of that Act clearly implies that the document must be one "whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another." I am unable to concur in the view that the mention of interest being payable at a particular rate and the possible implication therefrom of a promise to pay the principal would suffice to bring the account-entry within the category of "bond" (cf. Observations of the Judicial Committee in Muhammad Akbar Khan v. Attar Singh (7), where dealing with the definition of a "promissory note" their Lordships stress the distinction between an ordinary undertaking to pay and one which has only to be inferred or implied). Reading the words "if the loan is based on a document" in s. 7 of the Bihar Act in the sense above indicated it cannot be held that the entry I (z) (a) in this case is a "document on which the loan is based," because it merely says : Rs. 11,249-9-9 is due by me up to Asin 24, 1336."

The learned Counsel for the respondents based an argument on the difference between the word employed at the end of s. 7 of the Act of 1939 and the words occurring in the corresponding provision (s. 11) of the Act of 1938; it is not easy to follow that argument. The earlier Act affixed the limit at the amount of loan mentioned in "the document on which the suit is based" while the Act of 1939 speaks of the amount of loan "mentioned in or evidenced by such document." The use of the expression "such document" is of course an improvement, as this portion of the section is introduced by the words "if the loan is based on a document." But it is not easy to state what distinction the Legislature had in mind when, in the later Act, it referred to two alternatives, by the words "mentioned in" and "evidenced by" respectively. In Singheswar Singh v. Madni Prasad Singh (8), the learned Judges of the High Court have endeavoured to state a possible explanation, in the light of what was mentioned to them by the Advocate-General of Bihar. I do not find it necessary to express any opinion on that statement, because, in either alternative, the amount to be taken note of is the amount of loan and the word "loan" must be understood in the light of the definition clause already referred to. It must also be borne in mind that in both the Acts this portion of the section is introduced by the same opening words "if the loan is based on a document."

Even if it were possible to regard the accounts in this case as the document on which the loan is based, it does not seem to me possible or reasonable to confine our attention, as the learned Counsel for the respondents invited us to do, to the particular entry marked Ex. I (z) (a). The account books must be taken as a whole and as the entries therein clearly show what items represent principal and what items interest, the Court must arrive at the "amount of the loan" by excluding the items ants had been calculated on the basis that Rs. 11,249-9-9 was due on October 12, 1929; adding a claim for compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with annual rests, the plaintiff, which was filed on August 20, 1932, claimed Rs. 15,713-4-6 with further interest.

Section 7 of Bihar Act VII of 1939 provides that in respect of interest payable up to the date of the institution of the suit, the Court shall not pass a decree for an amount "which together with any amount already realised as interest ... is greater than the amount of loan advanced or, if the loan is based on a document, the amount of loan mentioned in or evidenced by such document."

With reference to the concluding words of the section above set out, it was urged on behalf of the respondent that, in the present case, the chitha entry, Ex. I (z) (a), dated October 12, 1929, which has been signed by the first defendant should be regarded as "the document on which the loan is based" and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to treat the sum of Rs. 11,249-9-9 there shown as "the amount of loan" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Act. If that contention were accepted, the appellant would not of course be entitled to any relief in this appeal, because the interest claimed between October 12, 1929, and the date of the institution of the suit did not exceed the amount mentioned in the document. It was in this connection urged that the chitha entry Ex. I (z) (a) should be held to amount to an "account stated" between the parties and as such to furnish a separate cause of action for the recovery of the money there shown as due. In support of this contention the learned Counsel for the respondents relied on the decisions of the Judicial Committee in L. R. 1934 A. C. 332, and in Firm Bishen Chand v. Girdhari Lal (3), and on certain observations of the Lahore High Court in Narain Das v. Miran Bakhsh (5).

The authorities cited on behalf of the respondents themselves recognise the distinction between cases in which a statement of account signed by the debtor may be intended to be only an admission of the correctness of the account or a mere acknowledgment of a debt and cases in which it may be an "account stated" in the real sense. [See also the antithesis recognized in O. XX, r. 8, of the English Supreme Court Rules.]

Whether a particular statement of account

falls in the one category or in the other is a question to be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case. An examination of the chithas, Ex. I series, in the present case leads me to think that the signed entry at the end of each year followed by a corresponding entry at the commencement of the next year could only have been intended to serve as an admission by the debtors of the correctness of the account which was maintained by the creditor. Except on this hypothesis, there was little significance in going through this process every year. In this view, the last entry, Ex. I (z) (a), dated October 12, 1929, could have no greater significance than the corresponding entries in the chithas of the earlier years. It has not been suggested or shown that at the time when that entry was made, it was intended to be anything like a final closing of the accounts between the parties, so as to put the debtors' liability on a new basis. So far as one can see, it was merely an accident that the accounts stopped with F. 1336, probably because the creditor died about the end of 1929 or early in 1930 and his estate soon became the subject-matter of litigation (probate case No. 24 of 1930). The legal significance of a set of accounts closely resembling Ex. I series in the present case was considered by Jenkins, O. J., and Woodroffe, J., in Galstaun v. Hutchison (6) and the learned Judges held that the signed entries in the bahi chithas would not even amount to an acknowledgment of a "debt" within the meaning of Art. 1 of the Indian Stamp Act 1898. It is not necessary for us to go so far; but the observations of Woodroffe, J., in that case may be usefully referred to in this connection. It may also be mentioned, for what it is worth, that the Courts below relied on the signed entries in the accounts only as "acknowledgment" sufficient to save the bar of limitation [vide the discussion of issues Nos. 2 and 5]. If Ex. I (z) (a) had been regarded as an "account stated" in the true sense, no question of limitation would have arisen at all, as the suit was instituted within three years of Ex. I (z) (a) vide Art. 64 of the Indian Lim. Act.

Even if it should be assumed that Ex. I (z) (a) represents an "account stated" between the parties, that does not seem to be decisive of the question under s. 7 of Bihar Act VII of 1939. The respondents can press into service the concluding words of the section only if it can be said that question was also raised as to the extent of the benefit which the defendants would be entitled to on the true construction of s. 7 of the new Act.

The objection to the right of the appellant to claim the benefit of the new Act in the proceedings before this Court was raised not only in this appeal, but in three other cases which were heard in course of January and February this year. With a view to facilitate a full argument of this objection, we agreed to defer pronouncing our judgment till all the four appeals had been heard. Some aspects of this objection have been dealt with in the judgment in case No. 13 of 1939 and in my learned brother's judgments in this case and in case No. 10. It was also urged in some of the cases that as the contention based on the new Act had not been mentioned as a ground in the proceedings taken in the High Court, even after the new Act came into force, the appellant ought not to be permitted to raise it here. This argument ignores the provision of s. 205 of the Constitution Act. The certificate was granted by the High Court when the Act of 1938 was in force and there was no necessity or occasion to raise before the High Court in subsequent proceedings the contention based on the new Act. Once the appeal is before this Court it is open to this Court to grant leave to the appellant to raise particular grounds of appeal. It must also be observed that the contention based on the new Act is not really a ground of appeal against the decision of the High Court, because the new Act was not in existence at the time of that decision. As explained in the judgment in Shyamkant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (1), it is this Court that takes cognisance of the new Act, with a view to do justice between the parties, as the new Act has been made retrospective. It was suggested in one or two cases that the validity even of s. 7 of the new Act was open to challenge, but the objection was not pressed.

The contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents as to the effect of the application of s. 7 to the case was based on the nature of the dealings between the parties and of the accounts maintained by the creditor in respect of the same. The transactions between the parties, so far as they are relevant to the present case, began, in September 1911, with a purchase of immovable property by one Ishwardhari Singh, the undivided uncle of the appellant, from the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. Out of the sale price of Rs. 2,900, Rs. 1,900 was paid in cash and for the balance of Rs. 1,000 an account was opened in the plaintiff's books (Ex. I series). Two days later, there was an advance of Rs. 115; and there were a few advances during F. 1319. In F. 1320, a sum of Rs. 2,000 due under two hundies drawn by Ishwardhari Singh in favour of the same creditor was brought into the same account. In F. 1320 the account was signed not only by Ishwardhari Singh, but also by two of his undivided younger brothers, one of whom was the father of the second defendant. From this date, the interest payable on the account was, by agreement between the parties, increased from fourteen annas to one rupee per cent. per mensem. The accounts continued up to October 12, 1929, that is, the end of the mahajani year corresponding to F. 1336. Though the only subsequent advance by the creditor seems to be a sum of Rs. 5 paid in cash in F. 1334, the receipt side of the accounts shows several items of payments from time to time. The way that the account books were maintained has been described in the judgment of the High Court as well as in the judgment just delivered by my learned brother. The result of the account was that though the total amount of the loan, including the unpaid balance of the purchase money, was only about Rs. 3,700 and an amount of about Rs. 4,953 had been paid by way of interest, the acknowledgment on October 12, 1929, showed that a sum of Rs. 11,249-9-9 was then due from the defendants to the creditor [vide entry marked Ex. I (7) (a).] It may be mentioned in passing that it was stated before us by the learned Counsel for the respondent that in the chitha for F. 1336, not merely the heading but the whole of the page was in the handwriting of the first defendant. In the view that we take of the case, nothing turns upon this circumstance.

On the facts above stated, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that as the creditor had already received towards interest an amount exceeding the principal, the plaintiff was not, in view of s. 7 of the Bihar Act VII of 1939, entitled to any further sum for interest up to the date of the institution of his suit and that the amount now payable by the defendants should be calculated on the footing that a sum of only Rs. 3,700, i. e. the principal amount, was due at the date of the institution of the suit. In the plaint, the sum due from the defend-the sum of Rs 11,249-9-9 was not the loan advanced, but was the principal sum plus interest that had accrued during the previous years, minus all payments that had been made during the past years. The last chitha itself separately specifies the amounts for one year. Of course the mere mention of a figure in a document is not always absolutely conclusive as it remains open to the executants to show that in reality the full consideration mentioned therein had not actually passed. Much less would the sum total noted in the chitha make it conclusive that the whole of it was the loan. The intention of the Provincial Legislature in enacting s. 7 read with s. 2 (f), which draw a distinction between loan and interest, appears to be to accept the amount of the loan mentioned or evidenced by a document, if the loan is based on such a document and amounts to a transaction on a bond bearing interest and duly executed. But when a statement of account, not amounting to a bond, itself shows that the whole of the amount mentioned therein is not a loan, but part of it is professedly interest, that interest cannot be accepted conclusively as a part of the loan within the meaning of s. 7.

The question then simply resolves itself into this: Can the endorsement made by the defendant at the bottom of the last chitha be regarded as "a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability?"

It seems that such a construction would be contrary to the intention of the parties. The last chitha cannot, therefore, be treated as a bond within the scope of the definition of "loan" in s. 2 (f). Accordingly, the amount entered in the last chitha cannot be regarded as the minimum amount behind which the Court cannot go and which it must assume to be the loan. In this view the first portion of the section comes into play and the Court is debarred from granting a decree for an interest in excess of the principal amount of the loan. As interest in excess of that amount has already been paid, the plaintiffs can have a decree for the principal amount advanced and no more.

The last point urged by the appellant is that the Court should re-open the transaction under s. 8 of the new Act. In the first place this point, which was covered by s. 12 of the old Act, does not appear to have been pressed before the High Court; and without a special leave of the Federal Court, as referred to in s. 205 (2) of the Govt. of India Act, it cannot be raised in appeal. In the second place, the point really becomes wholly unnecessary if the plaintiffs are to get a decree for the principal amount only and not for any interest.

I would accordingly allow the appeal and remit the case to the High Court with the declaration that the following decree be substituted for the one appealed from:—

"The appeal be allowed, the decree of the trial Court modified and the plaintiff's suit decreed for the principal sum (about Rs 3,700) only and his claim for past interest disallowed, with pendente lite interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and future interest on the consolidated amount at the same rate."

Varadachariar, J.—This is an appeal, by the first defendant, against a decree for money passed by the Courts below against the appellant and his undivided co-parceners. Amongst the contentions urged on the defendants' behalf, before the High Court at Patna, there was one based upon s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, which limited the amount of interest which a money-lender was entitled to claim. The High Court rejected this contention, in the view that it had taken in prior cases, that s. 11 of the Bihar Act of 1938 was void, on the ground of repugnancy to existing Indian legislation. This appeal has been preferred to this Court, on a certificate, granted under s. 205 of the Constitution Act, to the effect that the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of that Act.

Before us the appellant's learned Counsel relied upon the decision of this Court in Jagdish Jha v. Aman Khan (4) (case No. 6 of 1939) and contended that, apart from the question of the validity of s. 11 of Bihar Act III of 1938, the debtors were in any event entitled to claim the benefit of s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939 (VII of 1939), which had been passed after the decision of this case, in the High Court and had in substance reproduced the provisions of s. 11 of the Act of 1938 with retrospective effect. As the earlier case before this Court had been heard ex parte, the learned Counsel for the respondent desired, and was permitted, to urge certain contentions against the view taken in that case as to the right of a debtor in similar circumstances to claim the benefit of the new Act. accounts were adjusted an acknowledgment for the amount found due (including interest) was written out and signed by the debtors and a chitha for the next mahajani year opened with its top lines only written and signed by them."

For the last chitha (Exs. 12. and 12 (a).) dated Asin 24, 1336, corresponding to October 12, 1929, which only was within three years of the suit, there were the following words: "wrote out chitha for 1336 Fs. It is correct (Sd). Surendra Narayan Singh. By my own pen." Two stamps of two annas each were affixed at this place. This particular endorsement did not contain any express promise to pay the amount nor any stipulation to pay interest. As noted by the High Court, below this writing the formal chitha was prepared by the plaintiff's servant in these words: 'chitha for 1336 F. prepared in favour of Babu Gajdhar Prasad Sahu.....interest payable at 1 per cent. per mensem.....' Then followed the transactions for 1336 Fs. These included on the credit side the balance brought over from 1335 Fs., as well as the interest that accrued during 1336 Fs. and on the debit side four small payments. Then a balance was struck up to Asin 24, 1336. Fs. amounting to Rs. 11,249-9-9. Below this, two stamps of two annas each were affixed and the following endorsement was made:

"Rupees 11,249-9-9 only is due to me up to Asin 24, 1336, the end of the mahajani year. (Sd) Surendra Narayan Singh. By my own pen."

In the account prepared by the plaintiff's Munib, the rate of interest payable had certainly been noted; but in the endorsement signed by the debtor there was no express stipulation to pay such interest, although that also must be deemed to have been implied.

The chitha form a series of entries in the plaintiff's account books. In order to make the last portion of s. 7 applicable against the defendant, the plaintiff's have to argue that the document referred to in the section must here mean the chitha on the last page of the defendant's account in the plaintiff's account book. As there were cross-entries in the plaintiff's accounts, and the payments made were entered on the debit side and deducted from the amounts on the credit side, and then a final balance struck. It is obvious that the entry at the bottom of the last chitha was not a mere acknowledgment of liability like the endorsement at the top, but that it was a record of an adjustment and an account stated. Eluira Rodrigues v. God- nicalo Hy Polito (2). It, therefore, follows that there was, by necessary implication, a promise to pay the amount due with interest, although with the exception of the words "due by me" there were no other words which could convey an express promise to pay. Firm Bishen Chand v. Girdhari Lal (3).

The point, however, is clear that in the year 1929, long before the Money-lenders Act was in contemplation, the intention of the parties was simply to adjust their accounts showing the balance brought over from the previous year, the interest that had accrued during the year and the reduction on account of the payments made in that year. The amount of stamp duty paid, though not by itself conclusive, also furnishes some indication that it was not the intention of the parties to get a fresh bond executed with an express promise to pay the amount due. Under Art. 15 of Sch. I of the Stamp Act the duty payable in respect of a bond is at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per Rs. 500 or part thereof for sums exceeding Rs. 1,000. The stamps of two annas each that were affixed to the chithas show that the parties contemplated the recording of an acknowledgment of liability after an adjustment of accounts, or of an account stated, and not the execution of any formal bond, with an express promise to pay, which would have required a higher stamp duty.

The entries at the top and the bottom were admittedly separated by a year's interval, and the middle entries were certainly not simultaneous with the first, and need not necessarily have coincided in time with the latter. The entries made by the plaintiff's Munib in the chitha are in the third person and do not read like the recitals in a bond executed by the defendants. On the other hand, the endorsement at the top and the entry at the end are in the first person, which profess to have been made by the debtor himself. It is, therefore, impossible to treat the whole document as one bond. The transaction as evidenced by the last chitha does not really go any further than the account stated. The documents itself shows that as they refer to the amount of loan (I) mentioned in or (II) evidenced by such document. Presumably by the expression "the loan based on a document" is meant the loan which has a document for its title-deed, on which the suit may have to be brought to recover it. The words in the old s. 11, after the word 'document,' which have been deleted now, were 'on which the suit is based.' Those words were likely to suggest that for the purposes of the total amount of the loan, the document which created a fresh cause of action for the suit was conclusive. That would have included accounts stated and adjustments (which give rise to a fresh cause of action), though probably not acknowledgments. Presumably it was to remove the possibility of such a construction that the Legislature has deleted those words. The addition of the words "or evidenced by it" does not alter the position in any way for the governing words that still remain are "if the loan is based on a document.....the amount of the loan."

In the definition of 'loan' the first category viz., "an advance, whether of money or in kind, on interest" obviously excludes interest. The respondents rely on the second category of transactions mentioned in the definition. But there too the words "bearing interest" suggest the distinction between loan and interest, in spite of the fact that the words 'in respect of past liability' are wide enough to include liability for past debt, whether principal or interest. The transaction has to be on a 'bond' executed in respect of past liability. The third category of "any transaction which, in substance, is a loan" may for instance possibly include a promise to pay unpaid purchase money or promise to pay a sum of money for some other good consideration, but not a mere acknowledgment of interest due, unless it also amounts to a renewal of a bond. In consequence of s. 2 (f) the word 'document' used in s. 7 obviously means the 'bond' referred to in the definition of loan, as that is inseparably involved in the definition itself, so far as past liability for interest is concerned.

The term 'bond' has not, however, been defined either in the Act or in the General Clauses Act. Two definitions of it are to be found in Indian Acts. Section 2 (3) of the Lim. Act (Act IX of 1908) defines 'bond' as including :

"any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be."

Section 2 (5) of the Indian Stamp Act (Act II of 1899) defines 'bond' as :

"(a) any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be ; (b) any instrument attested by a witness and not payable to order or bearer, whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another ; and (c) any instrument so attested, whereby a person obliges himself to deliver grain or other agricultural produce to another."

It will thus be seen that the essential common feature of these definitions is 'any instrument whereby a person obliges himself.'

In England the word 'bond' is sometimes taken in a wider sense, but there too the instrument must ordinarily bind the obligor for the payment of a sum of money to the obligee. In Mozley and Whiteley's Law Dictionary, 5th Edition, 1930, p. 42, it is stated to mean "an instrument under seal, whereby a person binds himself to do or not to do certain things." In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, 2nd Edition, p. 204, 'bond' is stated to mean "an obligation by deed." On the other hand, in Wharton's Law Lexicon, 14th Edition, p. 137, a 'bond' is stated to mean "a written acknowledgment or binding of a debt under seal," and at p. 308, 'deed' is defined as "a formal document on paper or parchment duly signed, sealed and delivered."

The definitions in the two Indian Acts make it still clear that the instrument itself must oblige the obligor to the obligee, that is to say the language of the instrument itself must expressly create the obligation. Although the word 'bond' had not been defined in the Money-lenders Act, it is fair to infer that the word has been used in it in the sense commonly understood in this country in view of the definitions in the Indian Acts, and not in the wider sense so as to include accounts stated, adjustments or acknowledgments. It, therefore, seems to me that an instrument cannot be a 'bond' unless it contains an express obligation undertaken by the executants to pay or deliver goods. If the promise to pay is to be inferred by implication then the document may amount to acknowledgment of liability or adjustment, or even account stated, but would not be a bond:

As pointed out by the High Court (p. 33 of the paper book), which governed the rights of the parties on the date when the High Court decided the appeal. When the certificate was duly granted his right to appeal to the Federal Court on that point undoubtedly accrued. Thereafter under s. 205 (2) the only forum of appeal available to him was the Federal Court and his right to the Privy Council, with or without special leave, disappeared. Once the door of the Federal Court was opened to the appellant, it cannot be shut against him on the double ground that he can no longer rely on the certificate because the old law has been replaced by a new one, and he cannot rely on the new law because to avail himself of the new law he must get the certificate vacated, and then go to the Privy Council. If this Court is not prepared to consider the old section, because it has been not only repealed but replaced, by a new section then it must consider and apply the latter, unless it can dispose of the appeal on some other shorter ground. As a special case, the Federal Court has also power to grant leave for taking such a ground under s. 205 (2) of the Govt. of India Act, and can also take account of the new Act suo motu.

"At the close of every mahajani year when

The High Court conceded, or at any rate assumed, that if the provisions of the old s. 11 had been applicable, the plaintiffs could not have got a decree for more than the principal amount because the total amount of the loan advanced had been about Rs. 3,700 only while the amount repaid by way of interest was Rs. 4,953. The plaintiff-respondent relies on the last words of s. 7, viz "no Court shall ... pass a decree for an amount of interest...which... is greater than the amount of loan advanced or, if the loan is based on a document, the amount of the loan mentioned in, or evidenced by, such document." They contend that the suit is based on chithas and, therefore, the Court cannot go behind the amount of the loan mentioned in and evidenced by the last chitha.

The Bihar Money-lenders Act contains several definitions 'Principal' is defined in s. 2 (h) as meaning in relation to a loan the amount actually lent to the debtor; whereas under s. 2 (d) 'interest' means rate of interest, including the return to be made over and above what was actually lent. Under s. (2) (f) 'loan' means

(1) an advance

(a) whether of money

(b) or in kind,

on interest made by a money-lender,

(2) including a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability, and

(3) any transaction which, in substance is a loan, with two exceptions which are not relevant here.

The explanation makes it clear that a bond bearing interest executed in respect of goods taken on credit constitutes a loan but a supply of goods on credit is not a loan. Thus 'loan' is a wider word than the principal amount actually lent, as it may be an advance in cash or kind, or may be a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability or may be any transaction which is substantially a loan. Interest that accrues is not an advance of money, but can become a loan if liability to pay it is undertaken in a 'bond.'

As the same word 'loan' has been used in s. 7 it should bear the meaning given to it by its definition. But the definitions in s. 2 are themselves subject to the condition "Unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context." The term 'loan' although wider than the term 'principal' is obviously used at three places in the same s. 7, in contradistinction to 'interest' used therein. Indeed, the section itself uses both the words 'loan' and 'interest' in two different senses. When the same section talks of the amount of interest separately and aims at reducing it, it is reasonable to infer that loan would not necessarily include the interest on it. The section applies to a suit brought in respect of "a loan advanced," and the interest to be decreed is not to exceed the amount of "the loan advanced" or if "the loan" is "based on a document," the amount 'mentioned in or evidenced' by it. The words in s. 7 are not total amount of debt mentioned, but the 'amount of the loan advanced or based on a document.' Had the intention been to refer to the total amount, including principal and interest mentioned in any document' it would have been simpler to use some other word like claim or debt. Interest would be included in the loan if its amount is entered in the document on which the loan is based.

Unfortunately the expression "if the loan is based on a document" used in s. 7, is rather unhappy and liable to create an ambiguity. Ordinarily one speaks of a claim being based on a document and not a loan being based on it. The concluding words, however, make the meaning clear of the Govt. of India Act, and can also take account of the new Act suo moto. The Federal Court can take cognisance of the new Act, with a view to do justice between the parties, as the new Act has been made retrospective. 182 Ind. Cas. 161 (1), relied on. [p. 619, col. 1]

Meaning, scope and interpretation of s. 7 of the new Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939, considered.

The account books must be taken as a whole and where the entries therein clearly show what items represent principal and what items interest, the Court must arrive at the "amount of the loan" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939, by excluding the items that represent only interest. The scheme of the Bihar Money-lenders Act emphasises the distinction between liability in respect of the principal and liability in respect of the interest and whether a party relies on the words "mentioned in" or on the words "evidence by" at the end of s. 7 of the Act of 1939, the "amount of loan" must be determined with reference to the whole document and not by confining attention to a particular entry. [p. 620, col. 2; p. 621, col. 1.]

Sulaiman, J.—It is submitted before us on behalf of the respondents that the new Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, (Act VII of 1939), which has received the assent of the Governor-General, cannot be impugned on the ground of any repugnancy. But it is contended that this Court cannot, or at any rate should not, apply the new Act to this appeal. The appellant had invoked s. 11 of the old Money-lenders Act, but could not possibly rely on the new Act before the High Court as the judgment was pronounced on January 3, 1939, and the certificate also granted on that date, while the new Act, which received the assent of the Governor-General on April 15, 1939 was not published in the Gazette till May 1, 1939. Although the certificate had been granted, the appellant made a supplementary application in the High Court for leave to appeal to the Federal Court, which had stated the grounds of objection, but this also was made before the last mentioned date. The appellant did however, rely on the new section in his petition of appeal, dated August 18, 1939, lodged in the Federal Court and therefore complied with O. XII, r. 5, F. C. R. In the circumstances the appellant cannot now be tied down to the grounds mentioned in his supplementary application to the High Court for obtaining the leave.

As regards the new s. 13, which the appellant can invoke in the first Court even if the Federal Court were not to interfere it was pointed out in Shyamkant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (1) that although this Court was not bound to take the new Act into account it had certainly power to do so. The wordings of the new s. 7 are mere imperative and prevent a Court in any appeal or revision also from passing a decree for an amount in excess of that specified. Although this Court would not itself pass a decree in this case nevertheless, it may remit the case to the High Court with a declaration as to the judgment and decree which are to be substituted for the judgment and decree appealed from; and the judgment and decree of the High Court now to be passed shall have to be in strict conformity with the provisions of the new s. 7. It is therefore, all the more necessary that this Court should not ignore the coming into force of the new provisions, which would bind the High Court when the decree comes to be passed. If this Court were to ignore the new Act altogether the appellant would have no remedy left, as the High Court would not be able to give to the appellant the relief he is entitled to under that section. Without any direction from this Court the High Court would not be able to modify its own preliminary decree, which was passed when the old Act was in force, unless s. 7 were widely interpreted so as to apply to the final decree and also avoid its being at variance with the preliminary decree.

It is argued that the High Court had granted a certificate that the case involves a question of interpretation of the Govt. of India Act; but as that Act has been repealed, no question of any such interpretation now remains for consideration; and so the appeal is no longer maintainable. But the certificate has not become void or inoperative owing to the Provincial legislation having been repealed and replaced by a new one. Nor can there be any question of getting it vacated. The appellant is still asserting the validity of the old Act,

Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and on a revision application and also on an application to refer to this Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax. It is urged that whether the Income-tax Authorities are allowed to go behind a statement made in a deed of partnership when registration is sought is a question of law, and it is contended that they are not allowed so to do. This proposition has been negatived in more than one High Court. In In the matter of Bissessar Lal Brjlal (1) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the Income-tax Officer has power to call for evidence over and above the documentary evidence adduced in the partnership deed. In the High Court of Lahore it was held in Haji Ghulam Rasul Khuda Bakhsh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Lahore (2) that it was open to an Income-tax Officer to find against the declarations and the provisions contained in the partnership deed and to refuse registration if he found that the deed was incorrect. It is true that this was a case of a joint Hindu family and the inquiry was authorised under s. 25-A of the Act. The principle must, in my opinion, apply equally in cases of registration under s. 26-A of the Act since it cannot be presumed that an inquiry is to be made only in cases of Hindu family concerns and that applications for registration by these alone, asserting partnership where there had formerly been joint undivided status, are the only deeds which can be open to suspicion. The latest decision is that in Haji Noor Mohammad Haji Aleemullah v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces (3). There it was held that Income-tax Authorities are competent to hold as Judges of fact that a partnership which purports to be evidenced by a deed produced before them is fictitious, the only proviso appears to be, according to this judgment, that there must be some evidence on which the decision as Judges of fact is reached. Undoubtedly there is evidence in the case before me, evidence which I have already described. In this Court in Mulla Fida Ali Sultan Ali v. Commissioner of Income-tax C. P. & U. P. (4) it is laid down that if the Income-tax Authorities find that a deed of partnership is sham and not intended to be acted upon, and there is evidence on which they could arrive at such a finding, the High Court will not weigh the evidence with a view to decide whether the finding is correct or otherwise. This appears to me to conclude the matter, and if it is urged that the decision of a Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Kikabhai (5) takes a different view (the case was merely given in reference before me and its applicability was not shown), then it must be held to have been overruled by the Divisional Bench of this Court in Mulla Fida Ali Sultan Ali v. Commissioner of Income-tax C. P. & U. P. (4) already cited.

The applicants have had to make an unrefundable deposit of Rs. 100 and pray that in the event of ill success, no costs should be awarded against him. The learned Counsel for the Commissioner of Income-tax does not press for costs, and in the circumstances, although I consider that some costs would be justified, I make no order. The application is accordingly dismissed.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7 — Certificate under old Act—New Act coming into force — Appeal if can be entertained by Federal Court — Scope and interpretation of s. 7—Entries in account books showing what items represent principal and what interest—"Amount of the loan", how arrived.

Once the door of the Federal Court is opened to the appellant, it cannot be shut against him on the double ground that he can no longer rely on the certificate because the old Bihar Money-lenders law under which the certificate was granted to question the validity of a section of the old Act has been replaced by a new one, and he cannot rely on the new law because to avail himself of the new law he must get the certificate vacated and then go to the Privy Council. If Federal Court is not prepared to consider the old section, because it has been not only repealed but replaced, by a new section then it must consider and apply the latter, unless it can dispose of the appeal on some other shorter ground. As a special case, the Federal Court has also power to grant leave for taking such a ground under s. 205 (2)

The Income-tax Authorities are entitled to go behind a deed of partnership which the persons produce and to find that the deed is bogus and to refuse to register them as a firm for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. If the Income-tax Authorities find that a deed of partnership is sham and not intended to be acted upon, and there is evidence on which they could arrive at such a finding, the High Court will not weigh the evidence with a view to decide whether the finding is correct or otherwise. 128 Ind. Order.—This is an application by a firm said to consist of three persons, Hafiz Abdul Gafoor, Abdul Latif and Mohammad Ibrahim, under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act, asking for a direction that the Commissioner of Income-tax should refer certain questions for the opinion of the High Court. There are 13 questions suggested in all, but it is admitted that the whole position comes to the simple question whether, when certain persons have made an application in accordance with s. 20-A of the Income Tax Act, the Income-tax Authorities are entitled to go behind a deed of partnership which the persons produce and to find that the deed is bogus and to refuse to register them as a firm for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. Although the present application is made in the name of the firm showing three partners, the case has been treated by the Income-tax Authorities, and indeed by the firm itself, as consisting of four partners; one of the partners, Abdul Razak, has been omitted from those participating in this application.

The facts, briefly, are that since 1934 there had been a registered firm consisting of Abdul Gafoor and Mohammad Yasin, each having an eight-anna share in the partnership. On June 17, 1937 Mohammad Yasin died and on July 9, 1937 a new partnership was drawn up, showing as partners Abdul Gafoor, his son Abdul Razak, Abdul Latif the brother of Mohammad Yasin, and Mohammad Ibrahim, the minor son of Mohammad Yasin, aged 9, each partner having been declared to have a four-anna share in the business. The Income-tax Officer considered the application for registration, which was presented to him on the basis of this partnership deed as suspicious and asked for the firm's books. These disclosed that when the old partnership which had been in existence for some three years had been dissolved owing to the death of Mohammad Yasin there had been no settlement of the old accounts or a determination of the share of the deceased partner which would go to his heirs under Muhammadan Law, that no account had been made of the total capital of the firm or indeed of the capital contributed by the two partners under the former deed or of the four partners under the present deed. Neither had there been any individual account between the earlier partners or between the present ones. It was also considered suspicious that one of the new partners should be a boy who was still at school and who was admitted to an equal share of the profits of the partnership on the ground that he knew some English and would be able to deal with the English correspondence, and that Abdul Latif should be shown as a four-anna owner when he had previously worked for the firm without remuneration, and that a child should be brought in on equal terms with the others in matters of profit.

Now, there is no prohibition in law against a child being introduced to share in the profits of the firm, and s. 48 of the Income Tax Act shows that in a firm which has been registered such a minor is equally entitled to the benefits accruing to a firm from registration, that is to say, the benefits of individual assessment, or rather the benefits accruing under s. 48 of the Act. The facts which I have set out and which indeed are not disputed do, in my opinion, constitute evidence on which the Income-tax Authorities were entitled to come to a conclusion that the deed of partnership newly entered into was a sham transaction drawn up for the purpose of attempting to obtain an undue benefit in the matter of assessment. That the deed is a sham transaction has been found by the Income-tax Officer, on appeal by the few previous years has with some of his supporters trespassed upon the land this year after the Chettyar had leased it to some other person. Witnesses also make general statements such as that the applicant has a reckless disregard for the safety of others' property, that he is a promoter of agrarian trouble and that he is a man who wields influence over the members of his association and that therefore his being at large without security would be hazardous to the cultivators and land owners. These statements fall far short of making out a case under either cl. (e) or cl. (f).

Clause (e) speaks of habitual commission or attempt to commit or abetment of the commission of offences involving a breach of the peace. The evidence does not disclose either the commission or attempt to commit or abetment of the commission of any offence involving a breach of the peace except the alleged trespass which might not even be criminal. But the alleged trespass even if it were criminal and consequently amounted to an offence, the evidence does not disclose that the applicant either habitually committed, attempted to commit or abetted the commission of such an offence, for the evidence merely discloses only one offence while the word "habitually" implies frequent practice or use. It implies a tendency or a capacity resulting from the frequent repetition of the same acts: see Bhubaneshwar Kuer v. Emperor (1). Moreover, the words "offences involving a breach of the peace" mean offences in which a breach of the peace is an ingredient and not offences provoking or likely to lead to a breach of the peace: see Arun Samanta v. Emperor (2). It is not suggested that the alleged trespass actually gave rise to any breach of the peace or public tranquillity. For these reasons, I am firmly of the opinion, that the evidence for the prosecution has failed to establish a case under s. 110, cl. (e).

With reference to cl. (f), the general statements that the applicant had a reckless disregard for the safety of others' property and that he was a promoter of agrarian trouble and that he is a dangerous and desperate character wielding influence over the members of his association whose being without security was hazardous to the community, have not been supported by any particular act or conduct on his part other than that of his inciting the members of his association to demand a certain higher rate of wages. On the other hand, many of the prosecution witnesses admitted that the applicant was not a criminal. From this I take it that they never knew that the applicant had committed any crime or any criminal offence. The allegation that the applicant used to promote agrarian troubles appears to have been based simply and solely upon the applicant's activities in inciting the agricultural labourers to demand higher wages which are not the sort of activities for which a person can be held to be so desperate and dangerous that his being at large without security would be hazardous to the community. His movement may not be popular among a certain section of the public who may even consider him to be an objectionable member of the community, but he is merely for that reason not necessarily a person so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. In the absence of evidence of the applicant's conduct showing that he has become so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community the finding that the applicant was of the category mentioned in cl. (f) of s. 110 cannot be maintained. The order made against the applicant is therefore not in accordance with law. For these reasons I set it aside. The bond which the applicant has executed will be cancelled.

as a percentage of the annual value of holdings containing dwelling houses within the limits of the Municipality. Thus, a holding containing no dwelling houses was exempt. There were other exemptions also; e. g., the proviso to s. 322 directed that no such fees shall be levied in respect of any shop or place of business which did not contain any privy or cesspool. The result was that the holdings in schs. B and C to the plaint in the present suit were exempt, in the one case because they were shops containing no privies or cesspools and in the other case because the holding was a Thakurbari containing no dwelling house. In the new Act the fee and the exemptions have been swept away. Instead, the Corporation is empowered under s. 123 (1) (d) to levy a consolidated conservancy, latrine and drainage rate known as the conservancy rate. This rate is levied on a percentage basis on the annual value of all holdings within the Municipality.

There is thus no precise correspondence between the old fee and the new rate: the name is different and the incidence is different; and it is therefore not possible to apply to them the language of the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act. Where the old and the new imposts correspond, the proviso obviously applies, but it is not possible to apply it in cases where there is no correspondence. We cannot say that an assessment of one kind under the old Act must, by virtue of the proviso, be deemed to be an assessment of a rather different and more comprehensive kind under the new Act. Indeed, so far as the holdings in schs. B and C are concerned, there was nothing of any kind under the old Act to correspond to the new conservancy rate: they were formerly wholly exempt from the latrine fee. It follows therefore that we have here a case where property is for the first time sought to be assessed to the conservancy rate and since this has been done without a valid valuation list, the resulting assessment is ultra vires. It is unnecessary to examine the effect of the omission to give notice as required by s. 147. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

THE KING—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110 (e)—“Habitually,” meaning of—“Offences involving breach of the peace,” meaning of.

The word “habitually” in s. 110 (e), Criminal P. O., implies frequent practice or use. It implies a tendency or a capacity resulting from the frequent repetition of the same acts. 100 Ind. Cas. 967 (1), relied on.

The words “offences involving a breach of the peace” in s. 110 (e), Criminal P. O., mean offences in which a breach of the peace is an ingredient and not offences provoking or likely to lead to a breach of the peace. Arun Samanta v. Emperor (2), relied on.

Or. R. App. for review of the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Myaungmya, dated August 14, 1939.

Mr. Aye Maung (2), for the Applicant.

Mr. Myint Thein, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant Maung Po Aung applies to have the order passed against him, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Myaungmya under s. 110 (e) and (f), Criminal P. O., which has been confirmed on appeal by the District Magistrate of Myaungmya revised. After a brief reference to the evidence of witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate declared that—

“there is abundant evidence to show that the respondent falls within the classes from whom security can be demanded.”

But I find it impossible to see that even accepting all that the witnesses for the prosecution say that the applicant has been proved to be a person who “either habitually commits or abets the commission of the offences involving a breach of the peace” or “is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community.” The evidence for the prosecution in the main is to the effect that the applicant was the president of the Cultivators’ Asi-ayon of Aleygyaw village in Myaungmya District and as such he used to incite the members of his Asi-ayon (which means an association) not to do field work such as ploughing or transplanting at wages below certain rates and that the applicant who worked a certain piece of land belonging to a Onettyar as the latter’s tenant for a ment related back to the date of the suit as originally filed. On this view it was within the six months' limit and therefore not time-barred.

On the merits the question which arises in this appeal is whether the impugned assessment is ultra vires. To decide this question it is necessary to consider in some detail the various provisions relating to assessment under the new Act. The conservancy rate is a consolidated conservancy, latrine and drainage rate on the annual value of holdings levied under s. 123 (1) (d) of the new Act. Briefly the procedure for assessment is in five stages: (1) The decision to impose the rate. This is a matter for the Commissioners at a meeting under s. 123 (1). (2) The preparation of the valuation list. In this list are entered all the holdings in the Municipality together with the annual value of each. The work is to be done by the assessor of the Municipality as provided in s. 133. (3) The determination of the percentage on the valuation at which the rate is to be levied. This is to be done by the Commissioners at a meeting under s. 135. (4) The preparation of an assessment list by applying the percentage fixed to the annual value of each holding. This is to be done by the Commissioners under s. 136. (5) Publication and review. This is to be done as provided in ss. 147 and 149. Such in brief outline is the scheme of assessment under the new Act. Now it is certain that if the Municipal Corporation were making an assessment for the first time in respect of any rate based upon the annual value of holdings, it would have to go through all the five stages mentioned above. It is also certain that in the present case all those stages were not gone through. To mention only two omissions, there was no valuation list prepared nor were the notices required under s. 147 given. As regards the first of these two omissions, it has been argued that there was a valuation list prepared in 1923-24 under the old Act and that this list, being saved by the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act, made the preparation of a fresh list unnecessary. This argument requires a little examination. At the outset it may be observed that the new Act makes a careful distinction between valuation and assessment. Thus, the assessment list mentioned in s. 136 of the new Act is a distinct document from the valuation list mentioned in s. 133. Again, s. 137 (2) refers separately to valuation and assessment in laying down the period for which each is valid. So, too, does s. 148 (1) in making provision for review applications. So, too ss. 150 and 151 for their respective purposes. There was a similar distinction under the old Act and indeed the two things are different, although the process of assessment necessarily involves an antecedent valuation. Now, the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act though comprehensively drawn and though purporting to save almost everything done under the old Act omits to mention valuation. The proviso runs thus:

"Provided that all Municipalities constituted limits defined, regulations, measurements and divisions made, licenses and notices issued, taxes, tolls, rates, and fees imposed or assessed, budgets passed, assessments made, plans approved, permissions or sanctions granted under the Ben. Municipal Act, 1884, shall so far as they are in force at the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been respectively constituted, defined, issued, imposed, assessed, passed, made, approved or granted under this Act, and shall (unless previously altered, modified, cancelled, suspended, surrendered, or withdrawn, as the case may be, under this Act) remain in force for the period (if any) for which they were so constituted, defined, issued, imposed, assessed, passed, made, approved or granted."

This may be contrasted with s. 2 of the old Act, which after repealing various previous enactments were on to provide

"that assessments, valuations, measurements, divisions, and appointments made, powers conferred and notifications published under any such enactment, and all other rules (if any) now in force and relating to the matters hereinafter dealt with, shall (so far as they are consistent with this Act) be deemed to have been respectively made, conferred and published hereunder."

It will be noticed that whereas there was a specific saving of valuations in the proviso in the old Act there is no such saving in the proviso in the new Act. Therefore, even if we assume that there was a valid valuation list under the old Act in force immediately before the commencement of the new Act it will not count as a valuation list made under the new Act. It is however contended on behalf of the Municipal Corporation that even if the valuation cannot be held to survive the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act operates to keep alive the assessment itself. To see whether this contention is sound we have to examine the scheme of taxation under the new Act and compare it with that under the old Act. Under the old Act there was no such thing as a conservancy rate, but a Municipal Corporation was empowered to levy a fee for the cleansing of latrines under s. 26 (f). Section 321 of the old Act provided that the fees so levied should be fixed with reference to, but not necessarily accrual would be June 2, 1933. In either case, the suit would have become barred by limitation several months before the date on which it was actually brought, if the appellant's contention is accepted. In my opinion, the appellant's contention cannot be accepted. It is true that the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners is a different person from the Municipal Commissioners considered as a Corporation. But there can be no doubt that from its very inception the present suit was intended to be against the Corporation rather than the Chairman. This is clear from the nature of the allegations made in the plaint and from the nature of the relief prayed for. The plaint challenges the validity of various resolutions and proceedings of the Municipal Commissioners and ask for a declaration that the assessment purporting to have been made by them is ultra vires and illegal. Consequently relief in the shape of an injunction is also prayed for, but even if this be regarded as being against the Chairman it is obvious that the main relief sought was against the Corporation. From the very beginning therefore the main claim was against the Corporation; memories of the old Act were doubtless responsible for the naming of the Chairman as the defendant. This was therefore a case where a misdescription was corrected and not a case where a new party was impleaded by the amendment. Such was the view taken by Jack, J., and it is a view supported by the decisions in Gopiram Behariram v. E. I. Ry. & O. & R. Ry. (1), Anukul Chandra v. Dacca District Board (2), Jogendranath Banerji v. Tollygunj Municipality (3), Municipal Commissioners of Pabna Town v. Anukul Chandra Maitra (4), Saraspur Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. (5), Nanak Chand v. E. I. Ry. (6) and Mannu Kasundhan v. Crooke (7). Against that view we have been referred only to two cases, B. N. Ry. v. Behari Lal (8) and E. I. Ry. Co. v. Ram

Lakhan Ram (9). But both these cases are distinguishable, because in both the relief sought was some kind of personal relief against the defendant originally impleaded, so that it could not be said that the plaintiff really intended to sue the Railway Company and merely misdescribed the party. Indeed in the Patna case Das, J., himself put the ground for his decision thus:

"But in my opinion, there is all the difference in the world between misdescribing a party intended to be sued and suing a wrong party. It was strongly contended before us that the plaintiff intended to sue the Railway Company and, in substance, sued the Railway Company. But the plaint speaks for itself and it is quite impossible for us to have recourse to extrinsic evidence. A personal decree was sought against the Agent, East Indian Railway, and there is no suggestion in the plaint that it was sought to bind the Railway Company by any decree that the plaintiff might obtain against the defendant."

In the case before us the plaint makes it perfectly plain that the plaintiff sought to bind the Corporation by the decree which he prayed for. We are not aware of any case exactly in point decided by the Privy Council, but the decision in Gaekwar Baroda State Railway v. Mafiz Habib-ul-Huq (10), is of some assistance. In that case it appears to have been held that the suit was in reality one against the Gaekwar of Baroda in spite of the name actually mentioned in the plaint. It may be observed that under s. 87, Civil P. O., a Sovereign Prince or a Ruling Chief (such as the Gaekwar of Baroda) can only be sued in the name of his State; the suit in question was not in terms against the State of Baroda, but against the Gaekwar Baroda State Railway through the Manager and Engineer-in-Chief. Nevertheless, it was held that the suit was really one against the Gaekwar of Baroda himself, and as such incompetent without a certificate under s. 86 of the Code. It is clear therefore that the name is not always the true criterion for determining the party really sued. We have to consider the nature of the allegations in the plaint and the nature of the relief sought. There can be no doubt that in the case before us the suit was from its very inception a suit against the Municipal Corporation. Therefore the effect of the amendment was not to substitute or add a new party or to convert the suit into a new suit. In these circumstances it must be held that the amendment—

ed against the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners instead of against the Municipal Commissioners themselves as required by s. 15, Ben. Municipal Act a subsequent amendment impleading the Municipal Commissioners themselves is merely a correction of misdescription under O. I, r. 10, Civil P. O., and not an addition of a new party within the meaning of s. 22, Lim. Act. The amendment relates back to the date of the suit as originally filed and time cannot be reckoned as from the date of the amendment.

[Case-law discussed.]

Bengal Municipal Act, 1932, makes a careful distinction between valuation and assessment. Thus, the assessment list mentioned in s. 136 of the Act is a distinct document from the valuation list mentioned in s. 133. Although the process of assessment necessarily involves an antecedent valuation, yet the two things are different.

There is no precise correspondence between the fee under the old Ben. Municipal Act and conservancy rate under the new Act. The name and the incidence are different; and it is, therefore, not possible to apply to them the language of the proviso to s. 2 of the new Act. Where the old and the new imposts correspond, the proviso obviously applies, but it is not possible to apply it in cases where there is no correspondence. A valuation list prepared under the old Act is not a valid valuation list made under the new Act.

Where property is for the first time sought to be assessed to the conservancy rate without a valid valuation list, under s. 133, Ben. Municipal Act, the resulting assessment is ultra vires.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Jack, in Appeal No. 937 of 1935, dated May 18, 1937.

Messrs. S. N. Banerjee, Suresh Chandra Sen and Prakash Chandra Pakrashi, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. N. Bose, Dr. S. C. Basak and Mr. Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.

Narsing Rau, J.—This is an appeal under cl. 15, Letters Patent, from a decision of Jack, J., and arises out of a suit for a declaration that the conservancy rates imposed by the Commissioners of the Dacca Municipality upon certain holdings described in Schs. A, B and C to the plaint are ultra vires and illegal and for an injunction restraining the Commissioners from realizing the rates. The suit was instituted before the Munsif of the Third Court of Dacca who dismissed it. There was an appeal to the District Judge of Dacca who also dismissed the suit. Then there was an appeal to the High Court heard by Jack, J., who allowed the appeal and decreed the suit and this is now an appeal from his decision.

The Dacca Municipality appears to have been originally constituted as a Municipality under the Ben. Municipal Act of 1884, hereinafter referred to as the old Act. This Act was repealed in 1932 by the Ben. Municipal Act of 1932, hereinafter referred to as the new Act, which came into force on December 1, 1932. The proviso to s. 2 of the new Act states, among other things, that all Municipalities constituted under the old Act shall be deemed to be constituted under the new Act, so that the Dacca Municipality is now to be deemed a Municipality constituted under the new Act. Under s. 13 of the old Act there were to be Commissioners for each Municipality and s. 29, provided that the Commissioners shall in the name of their Chairman, by the description of "the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of..." be a body corporate and in such name shall sue or be sued. The position under the new Act is slightly different. For each Municipality constituted under the new Act there is, as before, to be a body of Commissioners and these Commissioners are a body corporate, but they have now to be sued in their own name and not as before in the name of their Chairman: see s. 15 of the new Act.

The first point raised in this appeal arises out of this provision. It arises in this way. When the suit was first brought, that is to say on December 2, 1933, it was brought against the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of the Dacca Municipality. It will be noticed that the suit was brought after the commencement of the new Act but the plaintiff, presumably through ignorance of the change made by the new Act, brought the suit against the Chairman of the Commissioners instead of against the Commissioners themselves. The mistake appears to have been discovered subsequently and the plaint was amended on June 5, 1934, so as to implead the Municipal Commissioners themselves as required by the new Act. The point now taken before us on behalf of the appellant is that the suit in its amended form must be regarded as a new suit, brought on the date on which the amendment was made, that is to say on June 5, 1934. If this view is accepted, the suit was barred by limitation by virtue of the provisions of s. 535 of the new Act, which requires that the suit shall be brought within six months of the accrual of the cause of action. According to the plaintiff, the cause of action in this case accrued on July 31, 1933; but, if we hold that it accrued on the date on which bills for the rates in question were presented to the plaintiff for payment the date of where the sale is by a Qurq Amin as distinguished from any other ministerial officer of the sale is complete the moment the Qurq Amin accepts the bid and the deposit of one-fourth of the highest bid is made. In support of his contention he places strong reliance upon paras. 1023 and 1027 of the Revenue Manual. Paragraph 1023 of the Revenue Manual enumerates the duties of a Qurq Amin in addition to such other duties as the Collector may require him to perform. One of such duties is laid down in cl. (e) and is the sale of immovable property other than land paying revenue to Govt. e. g., houses, or groves in Oudh, etc., in execution of decrees of Revenue Courts, unless, owing to the property being of considerable value, the Court directs it to be sold by the Tahsildar or Naib Tahsildar.

Paragraph 1027 runs as follows:

"When a sale is held in execution of a decree the proceeds, after deduction of commission and other charges, may be paid by the Qurq Amin direct to the decree-holder if he is properly identified;

Provided that if there are several decree-holders and they are not all present, or any of them object to immediate payment, the balance, after deduction of charges, shall be paid into the treasury."

From these two paragraphs the learned Counsel for the opposite party contends that as the Qurq Amin is empowered to sell immovable properties other than land paying revenue to Govt. and as he is further entitled to distribute the sale proceeds amongst the decree-holders, it necessarily follows that the sale by him is a complete sale. We regret we are unable to agree with this contention. Paragraph 990 was referred to. This paragraph finds place in Chap. XL, which regulates the sale of ancestral land by the Collector in execution of Civil Court decrees. This paragraph has, therefore, no application to the present case. Chapter XLI, of the Revenue Manual deals with the sale of ancestral land in execution of Revenue Court decrees which also has no application to the present case.

In the present case we are told that the sale was of certain groves. The proceedings of sale were, therefore, clearly governed by O. XXI of the Civil P. O. The sale was, therefore, really by the Rent Court even though by the force of certain rules in the Revenue Manual the officer to carry out the sale on the spot may have to be the Qurq Amin. Paragraphs 1023 and 1027 fall in Chap. XLII, which provides for process fees and disposal of sale proceeds in sales carried out by Amins.

It does not provide for the procedure for sale in execution of a decree by a Rent Court under the provisions of the Civil P. O. The enumeration of duties of the Qurq Amin in this Chapter does not mean that where the Qurq Amin is employed as a ministerial officer for selling the property in execution of a decree, then the Qurq Amin is substituted for the Court itself. The Qurq Amin, in our opinion, remains but a ministerial officer to carry out the sale and has to obtain the order of the Court accepting the sale. Even in the present case we find that Qurq Amin sent a report to the Court for acceptance of the sale. We find nothing which might distinguish the present case from the cases referred to above.

We hold that the sale in the present case took place when on February 7, 1935, the Court passed an order accepting the sale and fixing March 4, 1935, as the next date for hearing, and that the application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. O., and the deposit in pursuance thereof were within time.

We allow the application, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. The applicant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Bengal Municipal Act (XV of 1932), ss. 15, 136, 133, 2, Proviso—Suit against Chairman of Commissioners intended against corporation—Amendment impleading Commissioners themselves—It is mere correction of misdescription under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—S. 22, Limitation Act (IX of 1908), does not apply—Valuation and assessment, distinction—Assessment without preparing valuation list under new Act, validity—S. 2, Proviso, applicability—Valuation and assessment made under old Act, if kept alive by proviso.

The name is not always the true criterion for determining the party really sued. The Court has to consider the nature of the allegations in the plaint and the nature of the relief sought. [p. 607, col. 2.]

Where a suit for declaration that the assessment is ultra vires and illegal, intended to be brought against the Corporation is through mistake institut-

On the same date, i. e., February 7, 1935, the judgment-debtor applied for permission to deposit the decretal amount together with penalty under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. C. The order was that the judgment-debtor should first make the deposit before any order could be passed. The judgment-debtor deposited the necessary amount on March 8, 1935, which was accepted by the Court and the sale was set aside.

From this order an appeal was filed by the decree holder and the auction-purchaser and the learned District Judge, who heard the appeal, allowed it and dismissed the application of the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. C., and passed an order of confirmation of sale under O. XXI, r. 92 of the Civil P. C.

The present application is in revision against that order of the learned District Judge passed in appeal and the main question for decision is whether the deposit required by O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. C., was within time or not.

Order XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. C., authorises the judgment-debtor to apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court (a) for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase money and (b) for payment to the decree-holder the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale have been received by the decree-holder. Rule 92 (2) of O. XXI of the Civil P. C., lays down that where in the case of an application under r. 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of the sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale.

Article 166 of the Indian Lim. Act is as follows:—

"166. Under the same Code to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, including any such application by a judgment-debtor."	Thirty days	The date of the sale."
---	-------------	------------------------

Both from Art. 166 of the Indian Lim. Act, and r. 92 (2) of O. XXI, of the Civil P. C., it is clear that an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree by a judgment-debtor and the deposit required by that rule must be made within thirty days from the date of sale. The question in the present case is, what is the date of the sale.

The lower Appellate Court has held on the facts of the present case that the sale must be taken to have taken place on February 1, 1935, when the Qurq Amin accepted the bid of Iftikhar Husain and ordered him to deposit one-fourth of the purchase money and accepted the deposit.

It is contended before us that the sale actually took place on February 7, 1935, when the Court executing the decree accepted the Qurq Amin's report as to sale and adjourned the case for March 4, 1935. Numerous cases have been cited by the parties before us and we shall refer only to a few of those our own Court.

In Hari Shankar v. Amina Bibi, reported in 1935 Oudh Weekly Notes, 205 (1), a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, in the case of a self-acquired property held that the Collector conducting the sale is only a ministerial officer of the Civil Court appointed to sell the property; and the sale, although held by the officer of the Court or by a person appointed in this behalf is, nevertheless, a sale by the Court itself. It is not completed until the Court formally accepts the bid and declares the purchaser under O. XXI, r. 84 of the Civil P. C. Prior to such order, the bidder, whose bid has been accepted by the sale officer at the time of the bid, does not acquire any interest in the property. He becomes the purchaser only when the sale is approved by the executing Court, and, therefore, the starting period of limitation under Sch. I, Art. 166, of Indian Lim. Act for an application to set aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. C., is the date when the sale is so approved by the executing Civil Court, and not the date when the Collector or sale officer accepts the bid and reports the sale to the Civil Court.

In this case two earlier decisions of this Court in Kanwal Ram v. Gurdei, 8 O. W. N. 633 (2) and Mahabir Singh v. Lal Ambika Bakhsh Singh, (10 O. W. N. 816) (3), were relied upon.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party has contended that none of these three cases is applicable to the facts of the present case where the sale was by a Rent Court and through a Qurq Amin. The learned Counsel has referred us to certain paragraphs of the Revenue Manual and contended that to the question whether the appellant would be entitled to claim an increased amount if circumstances changed, but he was of the opinion that the case fell within the decision in Brij Mohanlal v. Shiam Singh (1). There the Allahabad High Court held that where an award has been accepted by the parties, and one of them has received benefits under it he is not entitled at a later stage to challenge its validity. In the present case it is certainly not open to the appellant to raise any question as to the validity of the award. She knew of the provisions in the award and for fourteen years she accepted without question the the amount given to her by it. That she knew of the terms of the award and accepted it as being valid is shown by Ex. 3 which is a receipt given by her in respect of the payment of the first annual payment of Rs. 42. The receipt reads as follows:

"As my husband Subbarayadu, your undivided brother is dead, and as you are bound to protect me, the mediators who were chosen by you and me have settled that a sum of Rs. 42 per annum should be given as maintenance by you to me. I consented to the said settlement. You have therefore paid me in cash this day a sum of Rs. 42 (Rupees forty-two) being the amount of maintenance for one year from the 15th Margasira Sudda of this year to the 15th Margasira Sudda of the ensuing Rakshasa year. Hence the same has been received."

In the face of the express statement that she had consented to the award it is not possible for the appellant to contend that she did not accept it or that she did not know the terms of it. The District Judge has found as a fact that she did accept the award and this finding is conclusive on the question. It was held in Mohieswara Rao v. Durgamba (2) that a contract by a Hindu widow with her husband's co-parceners to receive a fixed sum per annum for maintenance and not claim any increase in future even in case of change of circumstances was a valid agreement. If it were open to the appellant at this late stage to question the award—I hold that it is not—she accepted the arrangement embodied in it and this constituted an agreement between her and her husband's co-parceners under which she was to be paid this sum for life without any right in either party to claim a variation, whatever change there might be in circumstances. From whatever point of view the case is considered the decision must be against the appellant. The appeal consequently fails and will be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 166—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 89, 99 (2)—Application to set aside sale under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Starting point of limitation—Sale held by Rent Court through Qurq Amin, whether makes any difference.

The starting period of limitation under Sch. I, Art. 166, of the Lim. Act, and r. 99 (2) of O XXI, Civil P. C., for an application to set aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil P. The same is true even where the sale is by a Rent Court and even though by the force of certain rules in the Revenue Manual the officer to carry out the sale on the spot may have to be the Qurq Amin. 153 Ind. Judgment.—The facts of this case are that certain immovable property of the judgment-debtor, the applicant before us, was sold in execution under a rent decree passed by the Rent Court. The sale was held by the Qurq Amin of the Court. He proceeded to the spot on February 1, 1935, conducted the sale and accepted one-fourth of the amount of the highest bid from Syid Iftikhar Husain, the highest bidder. Out of the deposit he purchased court-fee labels worth Rs. 11-14 for the sale fee and deposited the balance, i. e., Rs. 33-12 in the treasury. After this he reported to the Court for acceptance of the sale on February 5. The Court on February 7, 1935 noted the fact of sale for Rs. 180, the realisation of one-fourth of the price, and ordered the case to be put up on March 4, 1935.

bhog which need be no more than the ordinary daily food of the family. We are satisfied that the defendant has spent more for the benefit of the idol than was spent by the testator himself and at least as much as was spent by the original managers or by the defendant's own father. Even if, therefore, there was a trust and the defendant was the manager of it, he has done nothing contrary to the terms of the trust and, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled either to replace him as managers or to be joined with him in the management of this property.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs appellants urges that the suit was brought bona fide and the costs should be met from the estate, i. e., the property disposed of by the will. Presuming that this could be done, it appears to us that the real object of the plaintiffs was to displace the defendant in order to have themselves as managers the very wide powers given by the will if such powers could validly be conferred, that is to say, the plaintiffs were suing for their own advantage and not for the benefit of the idol. In the circumstances we see no reason why they should be granted costs.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Arbitration—Award—Party accepting and receiving benefit under it—Whether can subsequently challenge its validity—Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance—Contract with husband's co-parceners to receive fixed sum per annum even in case of changed circumstances, is valid and binding on her.

Where an award has been accepted by the parties, and one of them has received benefits under it he is not entitled at a later stage to challenge its validity. Brij Mohanlal v. Shiam Singh (1), relied on.

A contract by a Hindu widow with her husband's co-parceners to receive a fixed sum per annum for maintenance and not to claim any increase in future even in case of change of circumstances is a valid agreement and binding on her. 78 Ind. Cas. 831 (2), relied on.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao, dated March 23, 1937 in S. A. No. 626 of 1933.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and G. Chandrasekhara Sastri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appellant is the widow of one Subbarayadu who died in August 1913. Subbarayadu was joint with his brothers, respondents Nos. 1 to 4. After the death of her husband the appellant went to live with her maternal grandfather and continued to live with him until his death in 1926. Shortly after her husband's death the appellant claimed the widow's right of maintenance out of the joint family property. The question of the amount to be paid to her was referred to arbitration. She was a major at the time and signed the reference, which is dated April 25, 1914. The arbitrators gave their award on October 18, 1914 under which the appellant was to receive from her brothers-in-law by way of maintenance a sum of Rs. 42 per annum during her lifetime. The award also provided that the appellant should not be entitled to an increase in the rate even if circumstances changed. The rate was to be Rs. 42, no more and no less. Notwithstanding the award, the appellant, after grandfather's death claimed to be entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 20 per mensem, to an annul payment of Rs. 25 for clothing, and to a sum of Rs. 200 for residence and cooking utensils. She based her claim on two grounds: (1) at the time of the award and until his death her maternal grandfather was helping to support her; and (2) the income from the joint family property had increased. The members of the family refused to accede to the appellant's demand. The consequence was she filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam the suit out of which this appeal arises. The respondents pleaded the award and their plea was accepted. The appellant then appealed to the District Judge of Vizagapatam. The District Judge agreed with the decision of the District Munsif and dismissed the appeal. She then filed a second appeal which was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who considered that the decisions of the lower Courts were right but granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Venkataramana Rao, J. accepted the contention of the appellant that the award went beyond the terms of reference in that the question referred was merely the amount of maintenance to be paid without regard and the entire income was only Rs. 800. We would here add that even this provision for the managers was a temporary one for eventually the Govt. was to be the manager. Obviously the facts there are very different from those in the present case where the expenditure on the idol which the managers could not avoid could be reduced by them to a very small sum while the income of the property amounted to at least Rs. 5,000 annually. We might also note that there was a temple there and not an idol in one room of a residential house as is the case here.

Srinibash Das v. Monmohini Das (3 C. L. J. 224) (3) was a case of an absolute gift to an idol after certain legacies of fixed amounts and it was held on the facts that there was no colourable intention but a real dedication.

Manohar Mukherjee v. Bhupendra Nath Mukerjee (A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 791 at 793) (4) has also been cited as it is there laid down that the direction that the shebait shall spend any surplus income on certain charitable objects or pious acts does not make the dedication incomplete. The dedication if merely colourable would be bad, but the provisions in question in that case affected the surplus income only and were subordinate to the main religious purpose and a Hindu God may be allowed to do some works of charity.

This does not help us in the present case because nek kam or good works is vague and not necessarily an expenditure on a charitable object and apart from that it was not merely a small surplus that could have been devoted to such a purpose but the whole income after bhog and as we have said bhog might have involved only a very small expenditure.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has cited cases to support his argument that in the present case there was either no dedication at all or at most only a trust or charge for the benefit of the idol.

In Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (I. L. R. 32 Cal. 129) (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that in dedications of the completest kind an idol is rightly regarded as a juridical person capable as such of holding property; but there are less complete endowments in which notwithstanding a religious dedication property descends (and beneficially) to heirs subject to a trust or charge for the purposes of religion.

In Sonaton Bysack v. Sreemutty Juggut Soondree Dossee 8 Moore's Indian Appeal, 66 (6) although the testator declared that he had granted to a certain idol which he had established in the house the whole of his movable and immovable property, it was held that the bequest to the idol was not an absolute gift and the four sons of the testator were entitled to the surplus of the property after providing for the performance of the ceremonies and festivals of the idol.

In Pande Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (48 I. A. 143) (7) the will provided that the property of the testator should be considered to be the property of a certain idol but further provisions such as that the residue after defraying the expenses of the temples should be used by the legal heirs to meet their own expenses, and the circumstances, such as that the ceremonies to be performed were fixed by the will and would absorb only a small proportion of the total income, might indicate that the intention was that the heirs should take the property subject to a charge for the performance of the religious purposes named.

We do not think it necessary to refer to other cases which have been cited because while the principle to be applied is what we have stated above, no two wills are the same and so decisions are only a guide to the application of the principle.

We find in the present case that the will is altogether so vague that it is not possible to say for certain that the testator intended a permanent dedication to the idol absolutely. Supposing, however, that the words "ba nam zad Sri Thakurji Maharaj" could be held to denote, in the absence of anything else, an absolute dedication, yet the succeeding clauses show either that the testator really meant to benefit the family and not the idol, or he intended the managers to spend practically as much as they liked on good works which were independent of the idol and which form a provision too vague to be given effect to, for good works are not necessarily confined to charitable purposes.

We agree, therefore, with the learned Civil Judge that no valid trust was created by the will and that at most there was a charge or trust in favour of the idol for incorrect and the other view is manifestly preferable. If the words parwarish karen mean maintaining and not merely feeding from the bhog a number of persons composed solely in all probability of what we might call dependents of the deceased, if no one else was chosen by the managers and they need choose no one else, the result would be that the income of this property which was to stand in the name of the Thakurji would be devoted almost wholly to the upkeep of the family and not for the benefit of the Thakurji. After this bhog and maintenance or maintenance by bhog, whatever the meaning be attached to it, the directions are as follows :

"Aur jo munafa baqi rahe usse Thakur Maharaj ke kharch jo munasib ho ya jo nek kam tajwis kiya jaye karte rahin."

We are asked by the learned Counsel for the appellants to insert the words Thakurji Maharaj ke after nek kam, so that the alternative would be expenditure for the benefit of the idol for kharch or for nek kam. We find it quite impossible to do this. Two alternatives are there, either spending money on or for the Thakurji as appears suitable to the managers, or performing nek kam which can well be translated as "good works." If by kharch be meant expenditure on the Thakurji, in the circumstances it would have been very little seeing that in the time of the testator it was composed of expenditure at two festivals amounting to an average under Rs. 40 a year and there is no reason to expect that the two managers would think it proper to spend more than the testator did himself. If by kharch is meant expenditure on behalf of the Thakurji it would include good works unless they were independent of the Thakurji so that nek kam in the second part of the sentence can only be taken to mean good works independent of the Thakurji. If, therefore, the managers chose to spend the money on good works they could do so in preference to spending it for or on the Thakurji and the only expenditure for the benefit of the Thakurji would be bhog which was really bhog to the Thakurji and was not expenditure for the benefit of the family or of dependents and not of the Thakurji. The term "good works" is certainly exceedingly vague and in Bai Bapi v. Jamna Das Hathisang (I. L. R. 22 Bom. 774) (1) a similar provision was held to be void for uncertainty.

It appears from the evidence on the record that Shiam Sunder, father of Mohan Lal was treated more or less as a son by the testator, but at the time that this will was executed he was only about 20 years of age and, therefore possibly in the opinion of the testator unsuitable to have absolute disposing power over the property of the deceased. The testator may also have considered it dangerous to leave his wife in the position of a Hindu widow and, therefore, he may have intended nothing more than making a temporary arrangement by appointing two managers of the Thakurji to be in reality guardians of Shiam Sunder. This might well explain why he did not clearly say that the idol was to be malik and why there was no provision for the appointment of managers after the death of the two actually named by the testator.

The learned Counsel has referred us to certain cases as supporting his argument that this was a genuine dedication forever and ever of the whole property of the deceased to the Thakurji. The principle in all such cases is clear: if the real intention of the testator was to benefit the idol and there was clear dedication then the idol becomes the owner of the property. If, on the other hand, the dominating intention was to benefit individuals and not a deity then the whole transaction would be a mere colourable imitation of a dedication or at most there might be a charge in favour of the particular idol.

The first case that the learned Counsel relies on is Jadu Nath Singh v. Thakur Sita Ramji (44 I. A. 187) (2). Here a Hindu dedicated the whole of his property to a temple. Half the income was to be enjoyed by the managers without power of alienation and upon the death of the named managers the Govt. was to become manager and the whole net income was then to be applied to the expenses of the temple. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that there was in the beginning a clear expression of an intention to apply the whole estate for the benefit of the idol and the temple and the rest was only a gift to the idol sub modo by a direction that of the whole which had already been given part was to be applied for the upkeep of the idol itself and the repair of the temple and the other was to go for the upkeep of the managers. The shares were half and half parts of the will, might be believed to be more probably the intention of the testator. The learned Judge has taken separately the sentence starting badeen lihaz kul jaidad ghair manqula and ending banamzad Shri Thakurji Mahraj ke karke as showing the intention of the testator to dedicate the whole of the immovable property to the Thakurji Mahraj. We think, however, that this sentence must be construed with what follows because the whole of the will must be considered together to arrive at the meaning of it. The words banamzad Sri Thakurji Mahraj ke karke are ungrammatical, but we think they can be read as corresponding to Sri Thakurji Mahraj ke nam men karke. We note then that no word showing absolute interest without limitation of time appears. The idol is not made malik nor is it said that he shall have the full powers which the testator had. It would perhaps not be an unfair translation to say that the testator is putting this property in the name of the idol without saying exactly what right the idol shall have. This is the first example of vagueness. Next Ram Raghubir wrongly described as "son-in-law" and Mst. Jhabbo the widow are given the management of the property, ba Sarbarkari mukhtiar. They are not called shebais or mutwallis, or any similar words. Nothing is said as to who is to succeed, and it is a remarkable omission if the Thakurji was being given the property for ever and ever. This is not even a case where the persons appointed had heirs who would obviously succeed them at their death. Jhabbo Bibi had no son while Ram Raghubir was not of the family except that he married a daughter of Mahadeo Prasad, brother of the testator, and there is nothing to show that he had any son to succeed him. This made it especially remarkable that the testator should not provide for successors when as he says in the beginning his intention in making this will was to avoid future litigation.

Coming now to other duties of these managers, we come to that sentence aur amdani munafa se Thakur Mahraj ka bhog lagakar sab log yani zouja waghaira minmuqir wa jisko ki zouja minmuqir wa Lala Ram Raghubir munasib samjhen parwarish karen. There are two possible readings of this—(1) that the two managers should make offerings to the idol in the shape of bhog and distribute those offerings, after presentation to the idol, to the wife of the deceased, to persons described as waghaira minmuqir and also to any other persons chosen by the two managers or

(2) that they should give offerings and after doing that they should maintain the wife etc., not merely from the offerings.

The learned Judge has adopted this second reading and has therefore held that the testator really meant to provide food, clothing etc., for the wife and other persons. This would certainly be a considerably greater expenditure than giving offerings to the Thakurji and could easily swallow most, if not all, of the income of the property.

This idol was with two other idols kept in a room in the upper storey of the house of the testator which upper-storey was composed otherwise of female apartments. There is evidence to the effect that the custom of bhog in families like that of the testator consists in presenting to the idol the daily food of the family which is afterwards eaten by the family. This would in fact be submitting for the blessing of the deity the daily food and would not involve the provision of food beyond that required by the family. We note in this connection that in the accounts maintained by the testator as expenses of the idol there is an average of under Rs. 40 consisting of expenditure on two festivals a year, but nothing for daily bhog so that it appears that there was no custom of feeding strangers with the bhog. The idol had no separate temple nor did this will order any temple to be built and only such persons as were chosen by the two managers were entitled to the bhog besides the widow waghaira. Unless, therefore the two managers went out of their way to select persons to receive bhog, the expenditure on bhog would be very little. An example of obscurity here is the use of the term waghaira minmuqir. No manager could possibly decide looking at the will alone who constituted this waghaira. He might guess that the testator meant the persons residing in the house who in his life time ate the daily food, but this would be mere guess work. If we hold that by this sentence the testator meant that a certain number of people were merely to share the bhog, we find the difficulty that the term parwarish karen is an every day expression which means far more than mere giving food to persons, and includes the provision of clothes and other reasonable expenses. We find it quite impossible to say which of the two alternatives the testator intended, and we certainly cannot say that the view held by the learned Civil Judge is manifestly

Bisheshar Nath had or had not been adopted by Kanjimal. Various members of the family held different views, but for practical purposes this question was set at rest by a deed of relinquishment by Parmeshuri Das in favour of Shiam Sunder if Parmeshuri Das was in fact the nearest reversioner, that is to say, if Bisheshar Nath had been adopted by Kanjimal which Parmeshuri Das denied.

Bisheshar Nath executed a will Ex. 1, dated November 20, 1887, and the case of the plaintiffs was that that will left the property of the testator absolutely to an idol to which we shall refer as Thakurji, the managers being Mst. Jhabbo Bibi and Ram Raghubir who will be found in the pedigree. The plaintiffs then alleged that Shiam Sunder came into possession adversely or if he was a mutwalli then he did not perform his duties properly. Consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to the following reliefs:

- (a) that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 be appointed mutwallis of Thakurji and Mohan Lal, son of Shiam Sunder defendant, be ordered not to interfere with the plaintiffs, or
- (b) that if the defendant is a mutwalli then he be required to render accounts and a decree be passed for any amount found due after payment of additional court-fees if necessary;
- (c) that if the plaintiffs alone be not appointed trustees then they should be appointed trustees jointly with the defendant;
- (d) that if reliefs (a) and (c) be not granted then a perpetual injunction be issued to the defendant to the effect that he should not prevent plaintiffs Nos 1 and 2 from worshipping the Thakurji and taking offerings and taking part in the management, and finally;
- (e) that any other relief consonant with justice be also passed in plaintiffs' favour.

The learned Civil Judge came to the conclusion that the will was duly executed, that there was no valid trust in law creating an endowment in favour of the Thakurji because at every stage of the will one comes upon different possible interpretations and taken as a whole the will certainly reserves a substantial portion of the income for the shebait and his favourites and that it is vague and uncertain about the disposition of the property bequeathed. The property would, therefore, devolve on the heirs-at-law of the testator subject to a charge for the daily bhog, periodical utsavs and other incidental expenses of the Thakurji.

In the appeal the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has argued that an absolute interest was given to the idol and so the property did not go by inheritance to the heir-at-law of the testator and even if the defendant be regarded as the manager for the idol, his conduct in denying the rights of the Thakurji and in appropriating to himself income which should have gone to the Thakurji entitles the plaintiffs to be substituted as managers in the place of the defendant.

The whole decision of this appeal must, therefore, be based on a consideration of the terms of the will and the legal effect of it.

In this will the following passages occur:

Badeen lehar kul jaedad ghair mangula jo ki bila shirkat ghair wa bila masalih digre hai aur ba qabza wa dakhil malikana hamare ke hai, kisi warisan ya azizan ka koi haq nahin hai, lihaza bahalat sehat-i-nafs wa sabat-i-aqal bila ikrah wa ajhar, ba durusti hawai khamsa ba nam zad Sri Thakur Ji Mahraj key karkey iqar karta hun aur likhe deta hun ki kul jaedad ka intizam mawaziat wa jaedad ghair mangula ka ikhtiar Lala Ram Raghubir wald Bhairon Prasad damad apne ko aur niz Mst. Jhabbo zauja-i-mankuha apne ko deta hun ki ba sarabararkari mukhtiar hamare ke kul jaedad ka intizam karen aur jis kadar qarza dena hai uska hal bahikhata wa niz dastawezat se zahir hoga wa munafa amdani muwaziat se ada kia jaye aur mula-zmin hamare badastur qaem rakkhe jawen. Aur amdani munafa se Thakur Mahraj ka bhog lagakar sab log yani zouja waghaira minmuqir wa jisko ki zouja minmuqir wa Lala Ram Raghubir munasib samjhen parwarish karen. Aur jo munafa bagi rahe usse Thakur Mahraj ka kharch jo munasib ho ya jo nek kam tajwiz kiya jaye karte rakin. Illa jaedad ghair mangula ke ekhtiar bai wa rahan ka na ziua minmuqir ko aur na damad hamare ko hasil hoga, agar barkhilaf iske kiya jaweto batil wa na-masmua ho.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs states that we should place ourselves in the armchair of the testator and construe the will so as to give effect to the intention of the testator by suitably construing passages in the will which are not obviously plain, so as to give them the meaning which the testator would have given them. He urges that intestacy should be avoided whenever possible. We agree generally with what he has urged, but we must say that there are cases when a Court with the best of intentions cannot understand what was the intention of the testator, and further, when the testator has used plain language, we cannot give a meaning contrary to this plain language even if to give such contrary meaning might give effect to what, from other drawn from the fact that the grantor did not remain in possession and that therefore there was an indication that the document was an out-and-out sale rather than a mortgage, falls to the ground. Where the usufruct is to be taken into consideration, the indications point clearly to a mortgage, and the test of possession, which would only be of value in the absence of any stipulation for interest or deduction for profits made from the use of the property, disappears. Thus not only is the presumption that the document is a mortgage un rebutted, but the majority of the tests which the learned Judge placed before himself for consideration would indicate that the document was a mortgage and must be interpreted as such, and the decision which has been reached on the one test which the learned Judge interpreted as giving a contrary indication was reached on no evidence at all.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and its decree set aside, and the decree of the trial Court is restored. Costs in the trial Court will be as ordered in that Court and the costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court will be borne by the defendant No. 3 Jagannath.

Will—Construction—Principles—Value of decisions—"Good work" whether vague—Held there was no permanent dedication absolutely in favour of idol.

In interpreting a will the Court should place itself in the armchair of the testator and construe the will so as to give effect to the intention of the testator by suitably construing passages in the will which are not obviously plain, so as to give them the meaning which the testator would have given them. Intestacy should be avoided whenever possible. But there are cases when a Court with the best of intentions cannot understand what was the intention of the testator, and further, when the testator has used plain language, it cannot give a meaning contrary to this plain language even if to give such contrary meaning might give effect to what, from other parts of the will, might be believed to be more probably the intention of the testator. [p. 598, col. 2; p. 599, col. 1.]

No two wills are the same and so decisions are only a guide to the application of the principle. [p. 601, col. 2.]

The whole of the will must be considered together to arrive at the meaning of it. [p. 599, col. 1.]

The term "good works" is certainly exceedingly vague and is void for uncertainty. Nek kam or good works is vague and does not necessarily mean an expenditure on a charitable object. Bai Bapi v. Janna Das Hathising (1), relied on [p. 600, col. 1; p. 601, col. 1.]

If the real intention of the testator was to benefit the idol and there was clear dedication then the idol would become the owner of the property. If, on the other hand, the dominating intention was to benefit individuals and not a deity then the whole transaction would be a mere colourable imitation of a dedication or at most there might be a charge in favour of the particular idol.

[Case-law referred to.]

Held, after construing the terms of the will that the will was altogether so vague that it was not possible to say for certain that the testator intended a permanent dedication to the idol absolutely. No valid trust was created by the will and that at most there was a charge or trust in favour of the idol for bhog which need be no more than the ordinary daily food of the family. [p. 601, col. 2; p. 602, col. 1.]

F. C. A. against the decree of the Sessions and Civil Judge, Lucknow, dated October 28, 1936.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji, Rajeshwari Prasad and Ramapat Ram, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a first appeal by plaintiffs against a decision of a Civil Judge of Lucknow dismissing a suit with costs.

To understand the appeal the following pedigree is necessary:

On the death of Bisheshar Nath the nearest reversioner was either Parmeshuri Das or Shiam Sunder according to whether

The correctness of the calculation has not been the subject of dispute. As this amount was paid within three years and as the result of a transaction between Rao Ranjit Singh and the plaintiff, I do not see how it can be construed as other than a re-purchase. The document in question is in my opinion a mortgage by conditional sale. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has taken notice of the various tests which have been applied from time to time in the Courts in India in distinguishing a mortgage from a sale with a condition of re-transfer and has referred to the summary of the most important tests which appear in Sir Dinshab Mulia's Transfer of Property Act, second edition, on p. 330. The learned Judge has quoted the first five of the six tests given in that work, namely, (1) the existence of a debt, (2) the period of re-payment, (3) the continuance of the grantor in possession, (4) the stipulation of interest on re-payment and (5) a price below the true value. He has, however, omitted the last test, namely, whether the stipulation for re-conveyance is in a contemporaneous deed or in one executed after a lapse of time. It is possible that he omitted this particular test inasmuch as by virtue of the Proviso to s. 58 (c) of the T. P. Act, which was added to it by the amending Act of 1929, no transaction purporting to be a mortgage by conditional sale shall be deemed to be a mortgage unless the condition of re-transfer is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale, and the question whether deed is contemporaneous or subsequent does not arise. The proposition, however, that a contemporaneous entry stipulating re-conveyance indicates a mortgage still holds good, and the obvious effect of the added proviso is that prima facie the document is a mortgage and that the burden lies on the opposite party to show that it appears rather to be an out-and-out sale, in which case the tests mentioned would have to be applied.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has failed to notice that the burden of proving that the document is not a mortgage when prima facie it must be taken to be one lay on Jagannath who contested it. Without any discussion of this point the learned Judge immediately proceeded to an application of the tests. The first test, the existence of a debt, although mentioned by him is not considered neither did he consider whether the period of repayment was a short period indicating a sale or a long period indicating a mortgage. As the length of a period as an indicating factor is always relative, the point is not one of any particular importance. The learned Judge did not attach any importance to the next two tests enumerated by him, apparently considering that they cancelled each other out since the grantor did not continue in possession, such continuation being held to indicate a mortgage, whereas the stipulation for interest on repayment, which undoubtedly existed in this case, did indicate a mortgage. He based the whole of his reasoning on the fifth test, namely, that a price below the true value of the fields indicated a mortgage, and he came to the conclusion that the full value of the fields had been mentioned in the sale deed Ex. P-2. This finding has been challenged as having been improperly arrived at inasmuch as there was no pleading in respect of what the original price of the fields was and that the matter was not put in issue. The learned Judge's reasoning is that if the value was as low as 1850 in 1932 it could not possibly have been worth more than Rs. 2,500 in 1930, I do not consider that the learned Judge is entitled to come to this conclusion in so empirical a manner without any evidence on the subject being on the record. If he wished to ascertain what the value of the fields was in 1930 and the correctness of his interpretation of the document turns in his view entirely on this point he should have afforded the parties opportunity to lead evidence on the subject. It was certainly no part of the plaintiff's duty to plead that the price mentioned Rs. 2,500, was below the true value of the fields. That was a point which, as I have shown, should have been taken by the defendant in order to rebut the presumption that the document was not what by reason of the Proviso to s. 58 (c) of the T. P. Act it must be presumed to be.

In any case the one test which the learned Judge has discussed is not in itself conclusive but only an indication. There was a stipulation for re-payment of the sum with interest, which is certainly a weighty factor inclining to the interpretation of the document as a mortgage. A still weightier factor is the deduction of the profits which the grantee made during the time of his possession, and it may be added here that as the usufruct was to be considered, the inference which the lower Appellate Court appears to have

On June 15, 1930 Rao Ranjit Singh, the defendant No. 1, had executed a document in favour of Gokuldas, the defendant No. 2, and the point for determination is whether this document is to be interpreted as a mortgage or as an out-and-out sale with a condition of re-purchase. The document is Ex. P-2, and after declaring that the fields had been sold and the title transferred contained the further stipulation that if at any time within three years Rao Ranjit Singh was to pay back the Rs. 2,500 paid to him in respect of these fields with compound interest at 1 per cent. per mensem after deducting the income which Gokuldas might derive from these fields, there should be a re-conveyance in his favour. It may be added that on June 30, 1932 Gokuldas executed an agreement to sell in favour of Jagannath, the defendant No. 3. This agreement was not fulfilled, and on July 11, following the defendant No. 2 executed another agreement to sell in favour of the plaintiff Saheba. In the agreement in favour of Jagannath there was no mention by Gokuldas of the agreement to re-convey to Rao Ranjit Singh on re-payment within three years, although this was mentioned in the agreement in favour of Saheba. Neither of these agreements was implemented, and Jagannath brought a suit for specific performance during the pendency of the hearing of the suit which is now the subject of second appeal and obtained a decree, the Judge, who is the same Judge who decided the case now under appeal in Saheb's favour, holding that however imperfect Gokuldas's title to sell to Jagannath may have been, Jagannath had sued for specific performance with his eyes open as to the doubt of Gokuldas's title to sell and was entitled to his decree for specific performance for what it was worth. On October 6, 1932 Rao Ranjit Singh executed a sale deed of the property in favour of the plaintiff, and of the purchase money which amounted to Rs. 2,000 Rs. 150 was paid to Rao Ranjit Singh and Rs. 1,850 was paid to the defendant Gokuldas, on a calculation based on the assumption that the document between Rao Ranjit Singh and Gokuldas was a mortgage, in full satisfaction of the mortgage claim. It will be noted that this sum of Rs. 1,850 is the sum for which Gokuldas had contracted to sell to Jagannath. The document Ex. P-2 was then given back to Rao Ranjit Singh, and the plaintiff claimed that he had bought the fields clear of any incumbrance since the mortgage had been satisfied.

The trial Court in a brief judgment came to the conclusion that the document between Rao Ranjit Singh and Gokuldas was in effect a mortgage, basing his opinion on the wording of the document, fortified by what he considered the surrounding evidence as shown by the oral evidence. The learned Judge did not consider that s. 92 of the Evi. Act debarred him from admitting oral evidence on this point as it was not sought to contradict or vary the terms of the document. The learned Judge also came to the conclusion on the issue whether the plaintiff had any notice of the agreement to sell between Gokuldas and Jagannath that the plaintiff had no notice. The plaintiff's claim was accordingly decreed.

In first appeal in the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, the Appellate Court rightly held that the trial Court was wrong in admitting evidence as to the intention of the parties and held that the document must be construed on its merits alone. The Court also held as a question of fact, and in my opinion quite correctly, that the plaintiff did have notice of the transaction between Gokuldas and Jagannath. The Court held that the correct interpretation to be placed on the document was that it was not a mortgage but an out-and-out sale and that the defendant Jagannath, who was the appellant before it, had acquired an absolute title to the fields when the defendant No. 1 had failed to repurchase them from the defendant No. 2, and that he was in possession of the fields and that the plaintiff was not entitled to oust him from that possession. The decision of the trial Court was reversed and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal in which the only contesting defendant is Jagannath.

If the document Ex. P-2 is to be treated as a mortgage, there can be no question that the mortgage has been satisfied, and even if it were to be held that it is not a mortgage, I do not think that the lower Appellate Court can be said to be correct in stating that the defendant No. 1 failed to re-purchase. There is no doubt that on October 6, 1932 Gokuldas was paid and accepted a certain sum of money which purported to have been reached on a calculation of the amount due plus interest after deducting the profits he had received from the usufruct of the field.

case however, we are not concerned with any process which has been issued under Chap. V of the Regulation for the recovery of the amount due to the Local Board. The Board have chosen to institute a civil suit for the recovery of the money due to them, and I find nothing in the Regulation to debar them from adopting this course if they wish to do so. It is true that in a previous proceeding the Local Board resorted to various processes for the realization of their dues. It appears that some portion of the amount due to the Board was recovered in this way, but the present civil suit is for the realization of the balance due to the Board. The claim of the Board arises directly from a breach of the conditions of the defendant's lease and does not appear to be connected with the processes previously issued, in such a way as to bring it within the scope of s. 154 (g) of the Regulation. As far as those particular processes are concerned, it is not contended that any difficulty occurred which could have given rise to any claim. All that appears to have happened was that the Tezpur Board attached and sold some of the moveable properties belonging to the defendants under s. 69 of the Regulation and no objection or claim was filed by any person in connexion with this procedure.

It is further urged that, as the Tezpur Board once resorted to the revenue authorities for the recovery of their dues, they were thereby debarred from recovering any portion of the money due to them in a Civil Court. I am not however prepared to accept this argument. Chapter V of the Regulation merely provides a speedy execution procedure for realizing revenue and quasi revenue. As in the present case the whole of the amount due could not be realized in execution, the debt due to the Board remained unsatisfied, and, in my view, it remained open to them to recover this money by instituting a civil suit if they considered this method the most convenient means for the purpose of realizing their dues. It is argued that s. 84 of the Regulation indicates that all the sums realizable as arrears of land revenue must be recovered under the provisions of Chap. V, but I do not think that that section can bear this interpretation. I consider that s. 84 should be read as subject to s. 154 by which the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is expressly excluded in connexion with certain matters only. If a process were issued under Chap. V for the recovery of a sum realizable as land revenue the provisions of Chap. V would automatically apply by virtue of s. 94, but if the party entitled to recover such a sum instituted a suit in a Civil Court for this purpose there is nothing, in my opinion, in the Regulation to prevent the party from doing so. In this view of the case, I consider that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. This appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. The hearing-fee is assessed at three gold mohurs. Leave to prefer a further appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused. The Rule for stay is discharged. No order is made as to costs in the Rule.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), ss. 154 (1) (g), 94—Claim of Local Board for recovery of money arising from breach of lease and not connected with process issued under Chap. V—Suit in Civil Court, if competent—S. 94, interpretation.

The expression "process" obviously has a technical meaning under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and refers to the various processes for the recovery of arrears of land revenue which are mentioned in Chap. V of the Regulation, and the methods which may be adopted in this connection are actually described as "processes" in s. 91 of the Regulation.

Where the claim of the Local Board arises directly from a breach of the conditions of the defendant's lease and is not connected with the processes issued under Chap. V, there is nothing in the Regulation to debar the Board from instituting a suit in Civil Court for the recovery of the money due to them. The mere fact that the Board once resorted to the revenue authorities for the recovery of their dues, does not debar them from recovering any portion of the money due to them in a Civil Court.

Section 94 cannot be interpreted to mean that all the sums realizable as arrears of land revenue must be recovered under the provision of Chap. V. Section 94, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation should be read as subject to s. 154 by which the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is expressly excluded in connection with certain matters only. If a process were issued under Chap. V for the recovery of a sum realizable as land revenue the provisions of Chap. V would automatically apply by virtue of s. 94, but if the party entitled to recover such a sum instituted a suit in a Civil Court for this purpose there is nothing in the Regulation to prevent the party from doing so.

A. from the appellate order of the Special Sub-Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated April 29, 1938.

Mr. Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Panchanon Ghose and Paresh Nath Mukherji (Sr.)—for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case, the Local Board of Tezpur have sought to recover by a civil suit a certain sum of money due from the defendants in their capacity as the lessees of the Borgong Hat. In view of the provisions of s. 93-A, Assam Local Self-Govt. Act, there is no doubt that the amount due to the Board may be recovered as if the same were an arrear of land revenue recoverable under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation 1886, but the question for consideration is whether this Regulation will have the effect of preventing the Board from realizing their dues by instituting a civil suit if they prefer to adopt the latter procedure. The learned Munsif held that the effect of s. 154 (1), Assam Land and Revenue Regulations, was to debar the Board from instituting a civil suit in connexion with this matter. A contrary view has been adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge. The relevant provisions of s. 154 of the Regulation are as follows:

"Section 154 (1)—Except when otherwise expressly provided in this Regulation, or in rules issued under this Regulation no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in any of the following matters: . . . (g) claims connected with, or arising out of, the collection of land revenue or any process for the recovery of an arrear of land revenue or of any sum which is by this Regulation, or by any other enactment for the time being in force, realizable as an arrear of land revenue . . . (2) In all the above cases jurisdiction shall rest with the revenue authorities only."

As I read sub-s. (g) of s. 154 (1) of the Regulation, the intention of the Legislature was to exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in respect of claims of two kinds, namely (1) those connected with or arising out of the collection of land revenue and (2) similar claims connected with or arising out of any process for the recovery of (a) of an arrear of land revenue or (b) of any sum realizable as an arrear of land revenue. The present claim clearly does not fall within the first category mentioned above. The sum which the Local Board are now seeking to recover is admittedly a sum realizable as an arrear of land revenue, but, it is necessary to consider whether the claim of the Board connected with this sum arises out of any process so as to bring it within the second category of the claims mentioned above. In my opinion this condition has not been fulfilled. The expression "process" obviously has a technical meaning under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and refers to the various processes for the recovery of arrears of land revenue which are mentioned in Chap. V of the Regulation, and the methods which may be adopted in this connexion are actually described as "processes" in s. 91 of the Regulation. It is clear from the provisions of such sections as 69, 79, 91 of the Regulation that ample scope is allowed to the aggrieved parties to file claims for the adjustment of their grievances in regard to these processes, and in such cases it would follow from what is stated in s. 154 read with s. 94 that the revenue authorities only would have jurisdiction to deal with such claims. In this application, there is no executable decree. It seems to me that there can be no question of the execution of a decree which is not in being at the time of the application. It would not be proper to couple an application for execution along with the application to set aside the order of satisfaction for until the decree had been restored to being, there would be nothing to execute, nor even any determination of the amount for which execution could issue. I have been referred to two decisions, Rajagir Sahay v. Ishwardhari Singh (1) and Ratanchand v. Chandulal (2), wherein it has been held that an application to re-construct a lost decree is not a step-in-aid of execution. Still less, it seems to me, can we regard an application to revive a decree, which according to the record is finally satisfied, as a step-in-aid of execution of that decree which unless and until it is revived has no judicial existence.

The argument that the decree must be treated as having been suspended during the pendency of the application to set aside the satisfaction order and appeals therefrom does not rest on any specific provision of the Lim. Act nor on any definite authority but is only based on analogies from observations in cases arising out of very different facts. It seems to me quite clear that this decree was not suspended during the appeals from the order on this application and the fact that it was not suspended is shown by the filing of an execution petition while the second appeal was pending. Had this decree been in suspense so that no execution petition could be filed, it might be argued that limitation would not run. But in fact an execution petition was filed and the existence of the second appeal would not have been a valid objection to the executability of the decree in pursuance of that execution petition. It seems to me therefore that it cannot be contended that this decree was in suspense while these appeals were pending.

It has been suggested, however, that if this application cannot be regarded as a step-in-aid of an existing decree, it can be regarded as an application for the decree itself so that the provisions of cl. (2) of Art. 182 would be directly applicable. This contention seems to me to have more basis in logic than those which have succeeded in the lower Appellate Court. It is arguable as a matter of pure logic that when you are seeking to get a decree, you are not obliged to execute that decree until the scope and extent of that decree have been finally determined in appeal; by analogy, therefore, when you are seeking to revive a decree which has lost its judicial existence, you should not be required to execute that decree until the precise scope of its revival has been ascertained by a final order in appeal. Unfortunately for the respondent, however, questions of limitation cannot be determined by pure logic and any exception from the general rules laid down in the Schedules to the Lim. Act must be brought within the four walls of the statute. It is, I think, definitely established that cl. (2) of Art. 182 has no application to appeals other than appeals against the decree itself. Its scope has been extended to cover an appeal against a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit when there is an executable final decree which is liable to be modified in the light of that appeal. But I am not aware of any authority for extending the scope of Art. 112, cl. (2) to appeals from orders in collateral proceedings which may affect the decree to be executed. It has been definitely held that this clause does not apply to appeal from orders on an application to set aside the decree—vide Brijaraj v. Nauratan Lal (3) and Fakir Chand v. Daiba Charan (4) and from the very provisions of the Code itself it may be inferred that the principle of cl. (2) has not been extended to appeals against an order in review of a judgment or appeals against an order amending a decree. In effect, the proceedings of which the respondent seeks to take advantage were more in the nature of an appeal against an order in review than anything else and I do not think there is any statutory provision whereby the person whose decree has been modified as a result of a review application against an order recording satisfaction can have been benefited for purposes of limitation of the period taken up by appeals against that order. In the result, therefore, I allow the appeal and dismiss the Execution Petition No. 730 of 1934 with costs throughout. Leave to appeal is granted.

The result, therefore, is that I would discharge this reference, set aside the conviction under s. 302 and the sentence of death and convict the appellant of an offence under s. 304, I. P. O., and sentence him to a term of five years' rigorous imprisonment.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 1 of 1937

August 7, 1939

WADSWORTH, J.

THARKAM KOJINIYAKATH MOIDIN

KUTTI—APPELLANT

versus

K. N. SUBRAMANYA IYER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—Application to revise decree finally satisfied—Whether step-in-aid—Decree, if suspended pending application to set aside satisfaction order or appeals therefrom—Art. 182 (5), applicability to appeal against review application to set aside order recording satisfaction of decree.

When at the time of making an application there is no executable decree, the application cannot be regarded as step-in-aid of execution. There can be no question of the execution of a decree which is not in being at the time of the application. It would not be proper to couple an application for execution along with the application to set aside the order of satisfaction, for, until the decree had been restored to being, there would be nothing to execute, nor even any determination of the amount for which execution could issue. An application to revive a decree which is finally satisfied, cannot be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution of that decree which unless and until it is revived has no judicial existence.

A decree cannot be treated as having been suspended during the pendency of the application to set aside the satisfaction order and appeals therefrom.

Clause (2) of Art. 182, Lim. Act, has no application to appeals other than appeals against the decree itself. Its scope has been extended to cover an appeal against a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit when there is an executable final decree which is liable to be modified in the light of that appeal. But there is no authority for extending the scope of Art. 182, cl. (2) to appeals from orders in collateral proceedings which may affect the decree to be executed. There is no statutory provision whereby the person whose decree has been modified as a result of a review application against an order recording satisfaction can have the benefit for purposes of limitation of the period taken up by appeals against that order.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, South Malabar in A. S. No. 41 of 1935.

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. M. Ramalinga Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal raises a question of limitation which, so far as I am aware, is not covered by any express authority. The appellant is the judgment-debtor. The decree was dated December 7, 1923 and on December 23, 1924 there was an order, passed at the instance of the decree-holder, recording satisfaction. The decree-holder subsequently made an application to the Court as a result of which, on August 24, 1925 the order recording satisfaction was in part cancelled and the decree as an executable decree was revived. This modifying order was itself the subject of an appeal which was dismissed on January 4, 1927. Against this dismissal, there was a second appeal which was dismissed on August 5, 1932. In the interval between the dismissal of the first appeal and the dismissal of the second appeal, an execution petition was filed on August 3, 1927 and it was dismissed. The present execution petition was filed on March 29, 1934; that is to say more the six years after the previous execution petition, but within two years of the dismissal of the second appeal against the order setting aside the record of satisfaction of the decree. Now, the question is whether this execution petition is within time having regard to the provisions of Art. 182, Lim. Act.

In the lower Appellate Court, the matter was put on two grounds. Firstly that the application to modify the order recording satisfaction of the decree must be regarded as a step-in aid of execution, so that the starting point for limitation will be the final appellate order passed on that application with reference to cl. (5) of Art. 182. The other ground was that the decree must be regarded as under suspension during the period of the trial of the application to set aside the satisfaction order and the appeals therefrom. The learned Judge actually decided the matter on the basis that this application was a step-in-aid of execution. I find it very difficult to accede to this proposition. Granting that there are circumstances in which an application may be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution though not filed in a pending execution petition, as when the decree-holder applies for the transfer of a decree to another Court for execution, it is to my mind very difficult to regard an application as a step-in-aid of execution, when at the time of making this does not establish it, and I am not satisfied with Sibū's evidence when I find that he made no mention of this important fact when first seen by the Police.

The learned Advocate-General has frankly admitted that the case, as presented by the prosecution is difficult to sustain. It is a version of a series of attacks for no apparent reason. An attempt was made by some of the witnesses to show that Jate was drunk; but the Sub-Inspector makes it clear that when he arrested him at 10 A. M. he was not under the influence of drink. Sibū makes contradictory statements concerning his condition. He said:

"When I was trying to take him to the Police Station he appeared to be the worse for drink. He was talking correctly, but his eyes were small and blood-shot. I did not notice any smell of drink about him. It was about 7 A. M. when we started for the Police Station with Jate."

If no smell of drink was noticeable, it is fairly clear that early that morning Jate was not so drunk as to attack everybody at sight. Yet that is what is suggested he did. An attempt was also made to show that Jate was mad; but the Sub-Inspector stated that when he arrested him he showed no signs of madness. Jate was kept under observation for some time in jail, but the medical evidence is to the effect that he was perfectly sane. If Jate was neither mad nor drunk, then his actions, as described by the prosecution, cannot possibly be accepted. Why should a sober and sane man first attack two people and chase them away, then go into the house of a friendly neighbour and attack him and later kill his wife with a plough-share? That, however, is the case which the prosecution in the Sessions Court asked the Court to accept. In my view the admitted facts of this case establish beyond all doubt that Jate on the morning in question was moved by some substantial motive, and the learned Advocate-General admits that this is probably true. The question is what was the motive which impelled Jate to attack Bahura and his wife. Jate says that he found them in bed together and I see no reason for rejecting his statement. Jate has been consistent throughout. He has frankly admitted that he attacked Bahura and killed his wife and also stated in his confession that he would have killed Bahura if he could only have caught him. There is a ring of truth about his confession, and it appears to me that he must have found his wife in a compromising position to cause him to attack Bahura and when the latter escaped to kill his wife. The version given by Jate explains what happened subsequently.

The case for the prosecution is inexplicable. No man, whether he be an aboriginal or not, would career about the village attacking persons unless something had moved him. Of course, if he was drunk or mad, he might act in that way; but drunkenness and madness must be eliminated from this case. Jate was clearly enraged at something and acted upon an impulse caused by what he had seen. I am satisfied that Jate's version of what occurred is the true one and that he acted under grave and sudden provocation.

It was argued on behalf of the appellant that as a matter of law a Court is bound either to accept the confession as a whole or to reject it. I am not accepting Jate's confession as a whole, because I am bound to in law. I am accepting it as a whole, because I believe it to be substantially true. In my view a Court is not bound in law to accept a confession as a whole. If the Court is satisfied that part of a confession is true and part is false, it can accept such portion as it finds to be true and reject the false portion. The law upon this subject has been clearly laid down by this Court in the case of the King-Emperor v. Itwa Munda (1), in which a Full Bench held that if an accused person makes a confession, the whole of that confession must be placed before the Court and is receivable in evidence. But there is no rule of law which compels belief in the whole of the statement. The Court, if it comes to the conclusion that the statement in its essential particulars is true, is entirely entitled to disregard the statements which it may hold in circumstances not to be true. The point of law does not arise in this case; but I merely mention it because I wish to make it clear why I accept Jate's statement as a whole, that is, that he saw his wife in a compromising position and lost control of himself and first attacked Bahura and then killed his wife. It appears to me that the only consistent version in this case is the version given by Jate throughout, namely in his confession and in both Courts. Accepting that version, I hold that he acted under grave and sudden provocation and that causing Teju's death was not murder but culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

The crime, however, is a serious one, and taking everything into consideration I think assault and that he searched for Jate. He went to Jate's house and there found Teju pounding mahua seeds but Jate was not there. As he was going away from his house, he met Jate on the road and told him to accompany him to the thana. Jate did so, and if this evidence be accepted Teju was alive when Jate and the chaukidar set off for the thana. This is a most important fact; but it is clear from the Police diary that when Sibū was interrogated by the Police he made no reference whatsoever to the fact that he had seen Teju alive at her house shortly before he met Jate and persuaded him to accompany the party to the thana. The learned Advocate-General has pointed out that Sibū does not appear hostile to Jate, but if he had seen Teju alive immediately before Jate left, he would, in my view, have undoubtedly mentioned the fact to the Police.

The suggestion now made on behalf of the prosecution is that Teju was alive when Jate and the chaukidar left the village for the thana and that she was murdered later on after Jate had left the chaukidar and returned to his village. In those circumstances, it is said that whatever happened previously, such could be no justification for killing his wife. Even if he had seen his wife in the embraces of Bahura, the killing of his wife some hours afterwards could not have been said to be the result of sudden provocation, though it might be said to be the result of grave provocation. It is, therefore, very important in this case to ascertain whether there was or was not a lapse of time between the attack on Bahura and the attack on Teju. If Sibū's evidence be accepted, there was such a lapse of time, but having regard to the fact that he never mentioned having seen Teju alive to the Police I cannot accept his evidence.

The prosecution also called Teju's son Hari Uraon (P. W. No. 11). According to him, he returned to the house about kalwa time (which is said to be about 10 A. M.) from the fields and found the door of the house fastened on the inside. He says he heard his mother crying "come and save me, Jate is killing me." He tried to push open the door, but he failed to do so and then went weeping to the house of his cousin Sukru Uraon and told him that his mother had been killed. Sukru, who is said to be a lame man, declined to go to Teju's assistance. When this witness was examined by the Police when the investigation commenced, he made an entirely different statement. That statement was to the effect that when he came home he found that his mother had been killed. In short he admitted that he had seen and heard nothing at all, yet in Court of Session he stated that he had actually heard his mother crying for help. In my view the evidence of Hari cannot possibly be accepted, and the learned Advocate-General has very properly not invited the Court to accept the evidence of this witness.

A number of witnesses were called with a view to establishing what Hari did and said after he is supposed to have heard his mother cry for help; but if Hari's evidence be rejected obviously the evidence of these witnesses must also be rejected. There was also the evidence of a number of witnesses who stated what they had been told by other witnesses. I cannot understand the relevancy of this evidence as most of it is hearsay and not admissible. Even if it was admissible, it establishes little or nothing.

The prosecution also tendered in evidence the confession of the accused, and that is undoubtedly evidence against him. That confession, however, if accepted, establishes not murder but the lesser crime of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. It is clear that if a person sees his wife in the arms of another and in the anger of the moment kills either his wife or her paramour, he is not guilty of murder. The provocation would be both grave and sudden and would, in my view, reduce the crime to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Such is Jate's version; but it is said that such portion of the confession as suggests grave and sudden provocation is clearly false by reason of the evidence for the prosecution which suggests that Teju was alive after Bahura had been assaulted and was alive when Jate accompanied the chaukidar to the thana. Jate left the chaukidar some time afterwards, and it is said that Teju must have been murdered when Jate returned to the village. In those circumstances, it is urged that the provocation, even if it existed, could not be described as sudden. A man who thinks over what he has seen for some hours might still act under grave provocation, but such could not be described as sudden. I have, however given my reasons for finding it impossible to accept the evidence of the prosecution that Teju was alive when Jate left with the chaukidar for the thana. Karma's evidence, even if accepted,

The evidence is that shortly afterwards Jate went into Bahura's house and there attacked him. Bahura (P. W. No. 1) says that he was sleeping in his house with his wife, child and mother. Jate came with an axe and forced the door open shouting "where are you" Bahura said "what do you want?" On hearing Bahura's voice Jate struck with the axe which caused an injury on Bahura's thigh. Bahura tried to get away, but Jate followed him into the inner room where they grappled. Bahura's wife also intervened and Manga rushed from his own house and joined in the scuffle. Jate was disarmed and fled from the house. Again no reason whatsoever has been suggested for this attack upon Bahura. Bahura said that he had no feud with Jate nor with his brother Karma and that he used to visit Jate's house on occasions. It is to be observed that in the first information report Bahura said that Jate had gone mad since the night previous; but in evidence he said

"I cannot say whether Jate's mind was really affected at that time. I said in my first information report that he was mad, because he was behaving like a mad man, viz, in trying to assault people."

The evidence of Bahura is supported by the evidence of Manga Uraon (P. W. No. 2) and Charia (P. W. No. 3) Bahura's wife. In my view it is impossible to accept this version of the attack on Bahura. If the evidence is to be accepted, Jate, for no reason whatsoever, went into a house of a friendly neighbour and attacked him with an axe. That in itself is a difficult story to believe; but it is impossible to believe that the present version when it is compared with the version given by Bahura in the first information report. In the first information report the suggestion is that immediately after the attack on Bhinsaria and Manrakhan, Bahura was attacked. No mention is made in that report of the attack having taken place in Bahura's place. Further, no mention is made of intervention by Bahura's wife or by Manga P. W. No. 2.

Bahura and Manga went to Sibu chaukidar, and they are alleged to have told the latter what had occurred. A search was made for Jate and when he was found the chaukidar and the others accompanied by Jate went towards the thana. According to the prosecution, Mst. Teju was alive at that time, and if that fact was satisfactorily established there could be no question that Jate's confession is false. Karma (P. W. No. 6) a brother of Jate gave evidence, and he stated that, on the early morning of the day of the murder Teju came to his house and told him that Jate had an axe in his hand and was talking angrily. Teju asked him to intervene but he refused to do so owing to fear. About an hour later the witness said that he was informed by Sibu chaukidar that Jate had wounded Bahura with a balwa. He says that he went to see Bahura and then met Jate in the village. He mentions how they all went to the thana accompanied by Jate, but the latter left them before reaching the thana saying that he would not go with them. This witness said that when they left the village to go to the thana, Teju was still alive because he had seen her in the morning. The witness does not say that he saw Teju immediately before he left for the thana. Even if this witness's evidence is accepted in its entirety, it does not establish that Teju was alive when the chaukidar and others left for the thana. All it would establish is that an hour previously Teju was alive. The learned Advocate-General had asked us to accept this witness's evidence and to hold that it establishes that Teju was alive when Jate and the chaukidar set-off for the thana. I, however, find it difficult to believe this witness because according to the Police diary he made no mention of seeing Teju in the early morning when he was interrogated by the Police. In the interests of the accused we have carefully scrutinised the statement which he made. There is no reference whatsoever in it to having seen Teju on the morning on which she undoubtedly was killed. The learned Advocate-General has very rightly pointed out that Karma is a witness who is apparently not hostile to his brother Jate. In cross-examination he tried to make out that Jate had been mad previously and that he had killed Teju and struck Bahura because he was mad. The witness admitted in cross-examination that he had not mentioned to any one that Teju came to him early in the morning; but he said that he told the Daroga about it at the Police Station. As I have said it is clear that he did not tell the Sub-Inspector because there is no reference whatsoever to it in his statement. For these reasons I find it impossible to accept Karma's evidence that Teju was alive when the party left for the thana.

The learned Advocate-General has also invited us to accept the evidence of Sibu Dusadh (P. W. No. 5) the village chaukidar. According to him, Bahura told him of the on July 5, Bahura made a first information report. The contents of this report are important and I think it advisable to set out the report in extenso:—

"My name is Bahura Uraon. My father's name is Mangli Uraon. I am resident of Dewaki, thana Ghaghra. To-day on Wednesday, date not known having come to you with Karma Uraon and Sibuchaukidar, at 9 o'clock I beg to report that Jate Uraon has gone mad since (last) night. He had pursued the two persons, Bhinsaria Uraon and Manrakhan to assault them, but they fled away. Musammat Tejui, Jate Uraon's wife, stopped him, and they fled away. Then he caught hold of a balwa and came to me and wanted to assault me also with the balwa. I caught hold of his balwa, and a scuffle took place, and I got slight injury in the right thigh at his hands. I was bringing him to the thana but he ran away while on his way after he had covered half the distance. This is my statement. Investigation may be made."

The suggestion in this report is that immediately after the appellant had chased Bhinsaria Uraon and Manrakhan, he caught hold of an axe and attacked the informant Bahura. Bahura does not suggest that the attack took place in the latter's house, and there is no reference to Bahura's wife intervening or to Manga (P. W. No. 2) arriving on the scene. What is said is that the wife of the appellant intervened when Bhinsaria and Manrakhan were attacked and that immediately afterwards Bahura was attacked. After this report had been recorded, the Sub-Inspector Sheonarain Prasad (P. W. No. 22) set off for the village of Dewaki. On the way he met the appellant Jate, who made a statement to him, and in consequence of which Jate was arrested. Shortly afterwards some villagers came along and told the Sub-Inspector that Jate had killed his wife. Jate was arrested at 10.5 A. M. and the Sub-Inspector recorded the information concerning the death of Jate's wife at 10.30 A. M.

Jate was produced before a Magistrate on July 10, 1939, as he desired to make a confession. The Magistrate cautioned him and told him that he was not bound to make a statement and that any statement he may make might be used as evidence against him at his trial. He asked him if he desired to make a statement of his own free will, and Jate answered that he was making the statement of his own accord. Jate's confession to the Magistrate is in these terms:

"A few days ago, I went to drink handi at night. When I returned home in the morning, I saw my wife Teju sleeping with Bahura Uraon. They were in compromising position. I was enraged. I took down a balwa which was hanging and I first gave a blow to Bahura in the right leg. He took to his heels. He also snatched my balwa and ran away. Then I picked up a plough share and struck my wife twice on the neck. She died on the spot. Had not Bahura fled away, I would have killed him also. Then I at once went to the thana alone and reported all the matter to the S. I. of Police. This is my statement. Teju was my brother's wife. I had married her later on, in Sagai form. She is older than I. She had a daughter by me."

In the Court of the Committing Magistrate the appellant admitted making this confession and again repeated that he had found his wife sleeping with Bahura and that he had assaulted Bahura and killed his wife in consequence of what he had seen. In the Court of Sessions the appellant repeated this version and throughout his statements have been entirely consistent.

There can be no doubt whatsoever that Teju met her death by violence. There were very severe injuries on the skull and on the face and the neck and the cause of death, according to the Assistant Surgeon who conducted the post mortem examination, was shock and brain concussion caused by the injuries which he described in his report. The appellant admits that he caused these injuries; but it is contended on his behalf that the case cannot be one of murder because the assault on Teju was committed as the result of grave and sudden provocation.

The prosecution alleged, however, that this was not a case where there was any provocation either grave or sudden. As I have stated, it was alleged that Jate for no apparent reason, first attacked two men who made good their escape. One of those men Manrakhan Chik (P. W. No. 10) was called as a witness. According to him, he had come out of his house at sunrise to make water when Jate came up to him with a balwa in his hand and said "Who are you? I will cut you". He makes no mention of Bhinsaria, and this latter person was not called as a witness. The first information report suggests that the two men were attacked together, but Manrakhan's version is that he was alone when he was attacked. Manrakhan stated that Jate did not appear to be drunk and he could not say what was the matter with him. Manrakhan says that some time afterwards there was an outcry from Bahura's house, and on going there he found that Bahura had a cut on his thigh. As I have stated the prosecution can offer no explanation whatsoever for this attack on Manrakhan and Bhinsaria if such ever took place.

inconvenient and unfair because the half of a house is not necessarily half as valuable to an auction-purchaser as the whole of it is. In Amulya Krishna v. Dilip Kunwar (6) in which the sale was not entirely set aside the facts and circumstances were different and the other judgment-debtors had previously put in applications which failed. In Chhaterbijai Singh v. Damodar Das (7) a good distinction was drawn between an irregularity and injury which could be allotted to one part only of the sale, in which case a Court may be justified in setting aside the sale of that part only, and an irregularity affecting the whole property and all the lots, where the sale should be set aside in toto. In the present case there is only one house, and the irregularity cannot be apportioned. Also, on the view that there has been illegality it is immaterial whether both judgment-debtors objected or not. The application is allowed with costs, and the order of the first Court setting aside the sale is restored. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

JATE URAON—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 304—Grave and sudden provocation—Accused seeing wife in compromising position with another and immediately killing her—Offence—Criminal trial—Confession—Admissibility in part.

If a person sees his wife in the arms of another and in the anger of the moment kills either his wife or her paramour, he is not guilty of murder. The provocation would be both grave and sudden and would reduce the crime to culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304, I. P. O. But a man who thinks over what he has seen for some hours might still act under grave provocation, but such could not be described as sudden. [p. 589, col. 2.]

[Conviction under s. 302 was set aside and the accused was convicted under s. 304 and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment.]

A Court is not bound in law to accept a confession as a whole. If the Court is satisfied that part of a confession is true and part is false, it can accept such portion as it finds to be true and reject the false portion. 175 Ind. Cas. 300 (1), relied on. [p. 590, col. 2.]

Cr. A. from the decision of the Judicial

dated January 24, 1940.

Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Harries, C. J.—This is a reference made by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur under s. 374, Criminal P. O., for confirmation of a death sentence passed upon one Jate Uraon. There is also an appeal by Jate Uraon against his conviction for murder and the sentence of death passed upon him. It will be convenient to dispose of the reference and the appeal in this judgment.

Jate Uraon is a man of about forty-four years of age and was tried by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur upon a charge of murdering his wife Teju on July 5, 1939. The learned Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion that the evidence established that Jate Uraon had murdered his wife, and as the learned Judge could find no extenuating circumstances he sentenced Jate Uraon to death.

The case, as presented in the Sessions Court, for the prosecution is a somewhat surprising and unusual one. It is said that in the early morning of July 5, 1939, the appellant Jate Uraon, for no apparent reason, attempted to assault two men named Bhinsaria Uraon and Manrakhan Oak. These men made good their escape, whereupon Jate is said to have attacked Bahura Uraon (P. W. No. 1). Again the prosecution can offer no explanation or reason for this attack. It is said that after chasing the two men who managed to escape Jate Uraon went to the house of Bahura Uraon and attacked the latter with an axe injuring him on the thigh. Bahura's wife came to her husband's rescue, and there was a scuffle and Jate was disarmed. Shortly afterwards Bahura together with a witness Manga Uraon (P. W. No. 2), who is said to have witnessed the assault, went to Sibhu chaukidar and reported that Jate had caused the injury on Bahura. A search was made for Jate who was found, and eventually Bahura, Sibhu chaukidar, Karma Uraon, a brother of Jate and Sania Uraon (P. W. No. 21) proceeded to the thana which was four miles away. On the way it is said that Jate refused to accompany the chaukidar and the others and went off; but it is surprising that no attempt whatsoever appears to have been made to detain Jate and to bring him to the thana. At 9 A. M.

injury had been caused to the judgment-debtors. The District Judge's order proceeds on the ground that this objection had not been raised by the judgment-debtors in their application and in fact not till some time later in February 1937. In his opinion this was too late, and the objection should not have been entertained at that stage. The application says that the price obtained is inadequate and that there has been a mistake in the proclamation. The real objection now put forward is not of course any mistake in the proclamation but in the holding of the sale at a time at variance with that given in the proclamation.

The applicants-judgment-debtors contend, however, that they should not be tied down to defective phraseology in their application, that the objection was taken when after renewal of the proceedings which had been stayed the matter was taken up for disposal, that issues were framed, evidence led and the irregularity clearly made out and so it is improper now to disallow the objection altogether. It is also contended that the holding of a sale before the hour fixed is not merely an irregularity but an illegality, which means that there was no sale at all and that the Court itself should set it aside, apart from any application under O. XXI, r. 90. The findings of the first Court about inadequacy of price and injury caused by reason of the irregularity have not been upset by the Appellate Court and so must stand good.

On the other hand it is contended that the objection was an afterthought which occurred to the judgment-debtors' legal advisers later on when they went through the auction papers. It is not made out that the holding of the sale at this time had any thing to do with the low price obtained. The matter must be decided under O. XXI, r. 90, and not on the wider ground of illegality. Finally it is said that as only one of the judgment-debtors took objection the sale could be set aside only so far as his interest is concerned.

There is no doubt authority for the view that the holding of a sale before the time fixed is not merely an irregularity but an illegality which in itself renders the sale void. It was so held in Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (1), which was followed in Mohendro Narain v. Gopal Mandul (2) see also Bakhshi Nand Kishore v. Malak

Chand (3). In Jayarama Ayyar v. Vridhagiri Aiyar (4) it was said that the difference between an irregularity and an illegality was one of degree, and that an irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords one main security for the fairness of public sales must be deemed to be an illegality. Now when sale is held two or three hours before the advertised time it is more than likely that intending bidders relying on the proclamation would not turn up until too late. It is said that in the present case there was beat of drum in the village just before the sale was actually held. Still that would not make any difference to intending bidders from outside, and even in the village, the beat of drum and its import may not have been appreciated by all. I, therefore, think that there was a good cause for the Court to set aside the sale on its own initiative.

In any case the matter can be dealt with under O. XXI, r. 90 Civil Procedure, as the illegality is at least a material irregularity. In Narhor v. G. M. Buti (5) the omission to state the time of sale was held to be a material irregularity. It was within the power of the Court to consider the objection even if not taken specifically in the application, and seeing that the irregularity was demonstrable from the record itself I do not think that the Court's dealing with it should have been questioned at a later stage on the ground of delay. There is a finding which has not been reversed that an inadequate price was obtained. The sale papers show that there were only two bidders, one of them being plaintiff's agent, and there were only three bids. There is a strong probability that there might have been more bidders if the advertised time had been adhered to, so that it is reasonable to conclude, as the first Court did, that substantial injury has been caused by reason of the irregularity. It is unfortunate that the execution proceedings should be so delayed, but the decree-holder himself might have noticed the wrong procedure and pointed it out to the sale Amin.

Although only one judgment-debtor has objected I do not think that the sale can be set aside in part. That would be most ratification in the absence of it being shown that they were authorised to settle land with tenants by defendant No. 4. Now these receipts bear the words tahsil khas malik indicating that they were receipts granted by the gomasta or patwari for money actually received by the landlord herself. The question of the authority of the gomasta and patwari, therefore, does not arise to be considered. If the money was received by the landlord herself that is evidence on which a finding of ratification of the contract could be based. In addition to the receipts for rent there is the fact that from 1929 onwards defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have been in possession of this land without any interference from the landlord. That is a circumstance from which it may not only be inferred that the landlord ratified the settlement by her mukhtar-am but it is also a circumstance from which it may be inferred that the mukhtar-am had authority to make the settlement. In my opinion, therefore, the finding of the Court below that the mukhtar-am had implied authority to make the settlement and also the finding that the settlement by the mukhtar-am was ratified by defendant No. 4 is based on evidence which supports the finding although the Court committed an error in relying also on the money order coupon.

It was strenuously argued that the Court of appeal below was wrong in placing on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the mukhtar-am had authority to make the settlement with defendants Nos. 1 to 3. In view of the evidence that I have already referred to, the question of onus is entirely immaterial. There was evidence, as I have already indicated, on which the finding with regard to ratification and implied authority could be based and those findings must, therefore, be accepted.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs to defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90
—Irregularity and illegality, difference—Sale held few hours before advertised time—If illegality rendering sale void—Sale—Setting aside of—Application by one of two judgment-debtors—Only one item sold—Irregularity not apportionable—Sale to be set aside as whole—Irregularity apparent on face of record—Objection based on it can be considered at any stage.

The difference between an irregularity and an illegality is one of degree, and an irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords one main security for the fairness of public sales must be deemed to be an illegality. When sale is held two or three hours before the advertised time there is an illegality, as it is more than likely that intending bidders relying on the proclamation would not turn up until too late. The mere fact that there was beat of drum in the village just before the sale was actually held would not make any difference to intending bidders from outside. There is therefore a good cause for the Court to set aside the sale on its own initiative. In any case the matter can be dealt with under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. O., as the illegality is at least a material irregularity. Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (1), Mohandro Narain v. Gopal Mandul (2), Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand (3), 59 Ind. Cas. 167 (4) and 51 Ind. Cas. 864 (5), relied on.

A distinction can be drawn between an irregularity and injury which can be allotted to one part only of the sale, in which case a Court may be justified in setting aside the sale of that part only, and an irregularity affecting the whole property and all the lots, where the sale should be set aside in toto. Where only one house is sold and the irregularity cannot be apportioned, the sale must be set aside as a whole and it is immaterial that one of the two judgment-debtors has not objected. 144 Ind. Cas. 62 (7), relied on. Amulya Krishna v. Dilip Kunwar (6), distinguished.

It is within the power of the Court to consider the objection even if not taken specifically in the application, when the irregularity is demonstrable from the record itself and the Court's dealing with it cannot be questioned at a later stage on the ground of delay.

App. for revision of an order of the Court of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated December 23, 1937.

Mr. N. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—On an objection preferred by one of the judgment-debtors Babulal under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. O. the First Court set aside the sale in execution of the judgment-debtors' house. This order was reversed by the District Judge in appeal and the judgment-debtors now come up in revision. The findings of the first Court are that the house was worth Rs. 1,500 and the price obtained in auction (Rs. 350) was inadequate, that there was an irregularity, as the sale was proclaimed for 12 midday but was held at 9 A. M. and that by reason of this irregularity substantial rightly decided the issue of defendant's adverse possession and held the plaintiff's claim as time-barred. It is, therefore, ordered that this appeal be rejected. The respondent is allowed no costs on account of her absence.

Evidence — Admissibility — Person in possession — If can rely on unregistered patta to explain nature of possession — Landlord and tenant — Rent receipts by agent of landlord — Continuance of possession by tenant — Presumption of authority to agent.

Where a person relying on the unregistered patta is admittedly in possession he is entitled to refer to the unregistered patta for the purpose of explaining the nature of his possession, that is to say, for the purpose of explaining that he was let into possession as a tenant. Ramautar Singh v. Juthi Tatma (1), distinguished, 79 Ind. Cas. 26 (2), relied on.

Where in addition to the receipts for rent granted by the mukhtar-am of the landlord there is the fact that defendants have been long in possession of land without any interference from the landlord, that is a circumstance from which it may not only be inferred that the landlord ratified the settlement by her mukhtar-am but it is also a circumstance from which it may be inferred that the mukhtar-am had authority to make the settlement. In such circumstances the question of onus regarding the proof of the fact whether the mukhtar-am had implied authority of the landlord, is immaterial.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated January 21, 1939.

Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, for the Appellant.

Rai G. S. Prasad and Mr. Girijanandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.— This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the District Judge of Saran reversing a decision of the Munsif of Chapra. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of 2 bighas and odd. The plaintiff claimed the land under a registered patta dated September 15, 1936, granted by defendant No. 4, the admitted landlord of the property. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 resisted the claim on the basis of an unregistered patta granted to them on May 1, 1929, by Kedar Prasad the mukhtar-am of defendant No. 4. The Court below has found that defendants

Nos. 1 to 3 were granted settlement by Kedar Prasad, that he had authority to make the settlement, that even if he had not such authority the settlement was ratified by defendant No. 4 and that defendants Nos. 1-3 are settled rai-yats of the village. The decision is challenged on various grounds. In the first place, it is contended that the unregistered patta on which the defendants relied was inadmissible for the purpose for which it has been used by the Court below, namely, for explaining the nature of the defendant's possession. Reliance was placed on the decision in Ramautar Singh v. Juthi Tatma (1). In that case a person who was not in possession sued to recover possession basing his title on an unregistered patta and on receipts granted by the landlord, it was held that the Courts below were not justified in admitting the unregistered patta or the receipts for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. The facts of the present case are quite different. A person relying on the unregistered patta is admittedly in possession and under the decision of this Court in Maharani Janki Kuer v. Brij Bhikhan Ojha (2) he is entitled to refer to the unregistered patta for the purpose of explaining the nature of his possession, that is to say, for the purpose of explaining that he was let into possession as a tenant. The first objection of the appellant is, therefore, overruled.

With regard to the finding that defendant No. 4 ratified the settlement made by her mukhtar-am, the Court relied on a money order coupon evidencing the receipt of money as rent of the disputed land by defendant No. 4 from defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and on receipts for rent granted by the gomasta and patwari of defendant No. 4. The learned Advocate referred to the proviso to s. 54 (2) of the Bihar Tenancy Act, which provides that where rent is paid by money order an entry in the money order shall not be evidence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the persons who are described as such in the money order form. To the extent to which the Court below relied on the coupon its finding with regard to ratification of the contract of defendant No. 4 is vitiated. It was also contended that the receipts granted by the gomasta and patwari of defendant No. 4 were insufficient to establish

M. A. Khan, C. J.—The plaintiff brought a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Goharganj (Bhopal State) for ejectment of the defendant with the allegations that the defendant was a tenant-at-will of a part of the plaintiff's house in dispute, while the defendant pleaded adverse possession. The learned Sub-Judge decided that the suit was time-barred and dismissed it with costs.

On appeal to the District Judge, Raisen Division, the plaintiff on February 7, 1938, applied under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil P. C., for permission to withdraw from his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the basis that he had forgotten to implead along with the defendant her son, Murlidhar also. The learned District Judge, disallowed plaintiff's application and rejected his appeal on merits.

The plaintiff filed a second appeal in the High Court, in which the same question of permission to withdraw from his suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit was again agitated but the learned Court confirmed the decision of the first Appellate Court. Now this special appeal has also been presented on the same ground.

Under order O. XXIII, r. 1 permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action may be granted to the plaintiff only in two cases. That is to say, when the Court is satisfied (i) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or (ii) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the same subject-matter. The facts as stated in the plaint restrict the suit wholly and solely to the present defendant who had already succeeded in defeating the plaintiff's claim on merits in the lower Court. Therefore, to permit the plaintiff to re-start the proceedings by adding a new defendant would mean to re-open the entire case against the successful defendant for no fault of hers. Addition of a new defendant in such cases virtually amounts to a complete alteration in the nature of the suit, which is not permitted in law, and in our opinion help of O. XXIII, r. (1) of the Civil P. C., cannot be invoked to attain this end. Failure to implead even a necessary party as defendant is neither such a formal defect as can be cured in appeal nor does it afford sufficient ground to withdraw from the suit with permission to institute the same afresh after it has once been heard and decided. In Ramcharan

Mandal v. Radha Raman Mandal (1) the Calcutta High Court has laid down that the plaintiff should not be allowed to withdraw after the suit has been decided on merits. There is a slight diversity of opinion among the High Courts on the point whether the expression "sufficient grounds" used in cl. (b) of sub-r. 2 means only such grounds as are analogous to a "formal defect." The trend of decisions is for holding that "other sufficient grounds" must be ejusdem generis with the expression "some formal defect," and this view seems to have found favour merely on account of the fact that practically every ground for withdrawal ultimately resolves into some mistake or other in the part of the plaintiff in framing or instituting the suit. Therefore in following the above view one is not really carried far from the intention of the Legislature. But cases may arise in which the form may be free from defect of any kind, yet ends of justice may demand that without depriving the defendant of any existing material right permission be accorded to the plaintiff to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. Two provisions of law occurring side by side cannot in a piece of good Legislature be identically one in meaning. Therefore to be on the safe side we are inclined to hold that the sphere of "other sufficient reasons" is wider than the sphere of "some formal defect." In the present suit the plaintiff has full right to sue the son of the present defendant for ejectment without withdrawing his present suit with leave of the Court, and without regard to the result of this suit. Thus it appears that the plaintiff's remedy against Murlidhar remains unaffected even if the present suit fails on merits. Therefore under these circumstances there exists no sufficient ground to allow a withdrawal under O. XXIII, r. 1.

As regards merits, the plaintiff had adduced in the lower Court sufficient evidence to prove that the defendant had been residing in the house in suit for the last eight to ten years as a tenant-at-will; while, on the other hand, the defendant had in that Court produced a notice dated June 16, 1923, served on her by plaintiff's father which proves beyond all doubt that she was in adverse possession of the house. The present suit was brought after thirteen years from the date of the said notice, on the basis of which the lower Court has that in the present case a decree for ejectment had already been passed by the lower Courts and it was duly executed and possession taken before the new s. 48-A came into force. To my mind, this makes no difference. The suit shall be deemed to be still pending in appeal before us and we must have to decide the appeal according to the law that is now in force with retrospective effect.

Here it may be useful to refer to certain decisions of this Court which are all based on the above cited Privy Council case K. C. Mukerjee v. Ram Ratan Kuer (1), and relate to s. 26-N of the Bihar Ten. Act. These are : Thakur Rai v. Issardyal Parshad (2), Mohammad Shafait v. Nithali Ram (3) and Chandrika Prasad Singh v. Ram Lal Sahu (Letters Patent Appeal No. 20 of 1938 decided on August 2, 1939*). In the first two cases their Lordships had to deal with the rights of unrecorded transferees of occupancy holdings who, having been dispossessed by landlord-purchasers under rent sales, sued them for recovery of possession. Their Lordships held that those transferees had a valid title by virtue of s. 26-N and were therefore entitled to recover possession. In the last case in which the position of the parties was the reverse, that is to say, the landlord-purchaser under rent-sale was the plaintiff and the un-recorded transferee the defendant their Lordships dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendant was protected under s. 26-N of the Bihar Ten. Act. The result of these decisions is that s. 26-N, on account of its retrospective operation, had the effect of reviving rights which had already been extinguished. To put it more clearly, the rent-sales had already extinguished the rights of the un-recorded transferees but s. 26-N revived those rights.

There is, therefore, no escape from the position that under the provisions of the new s. 48-A of the Bihar Ten. Act the defendants had occupancy rights in respect of the disputed land at the date of the suit and as such were protected from eviction.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal

Civil Procedure Code (Bhopal), O. XXIII, r. 1—“Other sufficient reasons,” scope—Suit decided on merits—Failure to implead as defendant necessary party, whether ground for withdrawal of suit with liberty to bring fresh one, in appeal—Suit for ejectment against sole defendant dismissed on merits—Application in appeal to withdraw suit with permission to bring fresh one on ground that plaintiff forgot to implead defendant's son also—Permission held could not be granted.

The sphere of “other sufficient reasons” in O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. O., (Bhopal) is wider than the sphere of “some formal defect.”

Failure to implead even a necessary party as defendant is neither such a formal defect as can be cured in appeal nor does it afford sufficient ground to withdraw from the suit with permission to institute the same afresh after it has once been heard and decided on merits. 113 Ind. Cas. 847 (1), relied on.

Where a suit for ejectment brought against a sole defendant is dismissed on merits and plaintiff in appeal applies under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. O., for permission to withdraw from his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the basis that he had forgotten to implead along with the defendant her son also, such permission cannot be granted as to do so would mean to re-open the entire case against the successful defendant for no fault of hers. Addition of a new defendant in such cases virtually amounts to a complete alteration in the nature of the suit, which is not permitted in law, and the help of O. XXIII, r. (1) cannot be invoked to attain this end. Moreover the plaintiff has full right to sue the son for ejectment without withdrawing his suit with leave of the Court, and without regard to the result of the suit. Thus the plaintiff's remedy against the son of the defendant remains unaffected even if his suit fails on merits. Therefore there exists no sufficient ground to allow a withdrawal under O. XXIII, r. 1.

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1934 as amended by Act XI of 1938), s. 48-A — Section if retrospective—Applicability to pending actions.

Section 48-A, Bihar Ten. Act, which was incorporated by Amending Act XI of 1938, by use of the words "shall be deemed to have acquired" is expressly made retrospective, and the section is applicable to pending actions. The suit shall be deemed to be still pending in appeal, even if a decree for ejectment had already been passed by the lower Courts and it was duly executed and possession taken before the new s. 48-A came into force. 160 Ind. Cas. 105 (2) (1), 179 Ind. Cas. 104 (2), 169 Ind. Cas. 1060 (3) and 187 Ind. Cas. 629 relied on.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated January 21, 1938.

Dr. P. K. Sen and Mr. N. K. Prasad II, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and K. K. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for ejectment sought on the ground that they are under-raiyats of the disputed land and refused to vacate it in spite of service of notice under s. 49 of the Bihar Ten. Act. The suit was contested on various grounds with which we are no longer concerned in this appeal. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit. The new point which has been raised in this appeal and must succeed is that under the provisions of the new s. 48-A of the Bihar Ten. Act, which was incorporated by the Amending Act XI of 1938 and came into force, during the pendency of this appeal, on December 10, 1938, the defendants must be deemed to have acquired occupancy right in the disputed land. The relevant portion of s. 48-A runs as follows:—

"Every person who, for a period of twelve years, whether wholly or partly before or after the commencement of the Bihar Ten. (Amendment) Act, 1938 has continuously held land as an under-raiyat in any village, whether under a lease or otherwise, shall be deemed to have acquired, on the expiration of that period, a right of occupancy in the land which he has so held for the said period."

It is not disputed that the defendants continuously held the disputed land as under-raiyats for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. Now s. 48-A by use of the words "shall be deemed to have acquired" is expressly made retrospective. Therefore by operation of this section the defendants shall be deemed to have acquired occupancy right in the disputed land before the institution of the suit.

The effect of the words "shall be deemed to have" when used in a new statutory enactment came up for consideration before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in K. C. Mukerjee v. Ram Ratan Kuer (1). In that case their Lordships had to deal with s. 26-N (since repealed and replaced by s. 26-B) of the Bihar Ten. Act which came into force when the appeal before the Judicial Committee was pending. Section 26-N was in these terms:—

"Every person claiming an interest as landlord in any holding or portion thereof shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer of such holding or portion by sale, exchange, gift or will made before January 1, 1923, and, in the case of the transfer of a portion of a holding, to have accepted the distribution of the rent of the holding as stated in the instrument of transfer, or if there is no such instrument, as settled between the transferor and the transferee."

Their Lordships held that the words "shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer of such holding" clearly indicated that the section was intended to be retrospective. Their Lordships further held that there being no saving clause the section would apply to pending actions; and accordingly their Lordships decided the rights of the parties before them on the basis of that new section. The same reasoning will apply with equal force in the present case. The only distinction which is sought to be made by Mr. Mullick on behalf of the respondents is other judgments, care must be taken to limit it to its own facts, and we think it is clear that considerations which attach to the question of the admissibility of a confession made under s. 162, Criminal P. O., are different from the consideration which attach to a confession made before a Magistrate. The protective provisions of s. 162, Criminal P. O., which apply, their Lordships now hold, to statements by accused persons to the Police, or at least to accused persons who are at first witnesses, have their origin in the infirmities which it is believed, may affect the evidence of the Police in India as to statements made by accused persons. Such considerations are obviously not applicable to statements made to Magistrates either under s. 164 or s. 342, Criminal P. O. On the other hand, it may be said that a confession, whether it be made to the Police or to a Magistrate, must be a confession of the crime or of the facts which constitute it. In the words of their Lordships (see p. 134*):

"Moreover, a confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact is not of itself a confession."

But their Lordships do not say that an admission of incriminating facts made by an accused person to a Magistrate under s. 164, Criminal P. O., or a statement made to the Court during the course of the trial is not admissible in evidence for what it is worth against the person who makes it under ss. 18 to 21, Evi. Act. In Nga Ba Kyaing v. Emperor (2), at p. 133, two men were convicted of murder. One Nga Win said that when Ba Kyaing stopped the Indians he pushed him back. Mosely, J., said with reference to Nga Win's statement:

"This statement, of course, amounts to an admission that Nga Win was at the scene of the crime and that he was accompanying the person who committed the crime; otherwise it is self-exculpatory and fixes the sole guilt on the other man. As evidence against Ba Kyaing, of course, it is entirely inadmissible. As an admission it is admissible, for what it is worth, against Nga Win, under s. 18; vide Illus. (c) and (d) to s. 21, Evi. Act." made not only in the statement under s. 164, Criminal P. O., but in the statement made in the Court of the committing Magistrate and in the Court of the trial Judge. It is difficult to see how or why this admission should be ruled out as inadmissible in evidence or not be admitted for what it is worth as an admission against the accused. It is not necessary now to consider whether s. 164, Criminal P. O., applies to exculpatory statements as well as to incriminating statements made by accused persons because the statement under s. 164 can be ignored and the statements made to the committing Magistrate and the trial Judge still stand. The appellant's admission that he was at the scene of the offence when Bhaikhan was killed cannot be excluded from the record or be ignored; but it in no way amounts to a confession on which the appellant can be convicted. It is an admission against himself for what it is worth, which must be read with the other evidence. The other evidence on the record shows that the appellant was present at the scene of the offence as a guilty party. His admission that he was present to that extent confirms the evidence of Iso, and his statement and Iso's evidence have this in common, that the appellant was there. But his statement cannot be read, as the Judge has read it, as a confession that the appellant was present and assisted Bachal to kill Bhaikhan and had the common intention to kill within the meaning of s. 34, I. P. O. The guilt of the appellant must be proved in the main from other evidence, and it is, in our opinion, so proved.

We do not find it necessary, for the reasons we have given, to decide here in all its aspects the question whether s. 162, Criminal P. O., applies generally to statements made by accused persons as well as to statements made by witnesses, but clearly in view of the above Privy Council judgment and their Lordships' approval of the Madras case, Emperor v. Syamo Mahapatro (4), as opposed to the Calcutta case, Emperor v. Azimuddy (5), the judgments of this Court in Adho v. Emperor (6), Hussain Bibi v. Emperor (7) and Muhammad Yusif v.

charge of the sub-jail then sent him to the Civil Hospital at Hyderabad. The post mortem revealed a fracture of the skull and an injury to the brain which resulted in his death. He had also an incised wound on his right forearm. He was 25 years of age. The appellant himself when examined by the medical officer at Tando Adam on November 22, had a slight injury on his right wrist, an incised wound $3/5" \times 1/10"$ caused by an axe.

There was to the actual fight one eye-witness Iso. He is a boy of some 15 years of age. He knew Bhaikhan, Hayat and Sain Bakhsh. He says he knew them for eight to ten years and that his village was one mile from their village and also one mile from the village of the accused. He says he was grazing his goats and Bhaikhan was grazing his goats. He (Iso) had gone to fetch his goats back from the canal where they had strayed when he heard cries of murder and looking behind saw Bhaikhan attacked by the accused and Bachal. Bhaikhan had a hatchet and the accused had a hatchet and Bachal a lorh. Bhaikhan struck Bachal in self-defence. Bhaikhan fell down. He did not see Sain Bakhsh or Hayat there. The appellant and Bachal then ran away. He (Iso) raised cries and then he went to Ismail who was grazing his goats a survey number away and told him what had happened and together they came and saw the body of Bhaikhan and at Ismail's instance he went and told Dino, Bhaikhan's relation. It is said that this boy's evidence is unworthy of belief, among other things because he is a relation of Bhaikhan. There seems no such relationship, and Iso's evidence is corroborated by that of Ismail. Ismail is a man of 40 years of age; he seems to have no interest in the matter one way or the other. Dino says Iso came and told him that the accused and Bachal had killed Bhaikhan and he (Dino) went and told Jumo. Jumo made the first report, Ex. 11, without delay. That there was enmity between the family of the appellant and Hayat's family on account of Hayat's affair with Changi there can be no doubt. It is no use saying that peace had been made when Changi was restored to her people because two quite respectable men Noorshah and Pairoon speak of the incident when Hayat was chased by Bachal armed with a hatchet and Hayat took refuge in the mosque where these two witnesses were.

Hayat speaking of this incident says that four days after Changi was returned Darya-khan, the appellant, and Bachal waited for him when he was returning from grazing his cattle with Sain Bakhsh. They had axes and chased him and he took refuge in the mosque. Sain Bakhsh corroborates Hayat in this. Hayat also says that after this his father warned him not to take the goats in the jungle and Bhaikhan took them himself. There is no reason at all to disbelieve this evidence of Hayat and Sain Bakhsh. It explains Bhaikhan's presence in the jungle that day. It explains also why he should be attacked by the appellant and Bachal. They could not get the son, so they would get the father. It was much the same to them. It is quite impossible to reject this evidence in favour of the statement of the appellant, improbable in itself and supported by no evidence, that Sain Bakhsh, Hayat and Bhaikhan would attempt to steal the appellant's camels in broad daylight. There was no evidence of the presence of those five camels, three of the appellant's and two of Bachal's that day in the jungle except the appellant's word. The whole story appears improbable and it does not appear that either the appellant or any of his relations would put this story into the form of a complaint. It is true that there is a discrepancy in the evidence of Iso in that the medical evidence shows no blow of a lorh upon Bhaikhan. Iso says that Bachal had a lorh and struck Bhaikhan with it and a lorh stained with human blood was found in Bachal's house by the Police. In all probability Bachal had a lorh and the fact that the boy Iso believed that he used it appears to us a matter of no importance in the circumstances.

Quite apart then from the so-called confession of the appellant, there is in our opinion, sufficient evidence to prove the appellant's guilt, but his learned Advocate argues that he has been convicted on his confession and that his statement is not a confession at all. He relies upon the recent Privy Council ruling in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (1). The learned Judge has distinguished this Privy Council case from the case before him on the ground that their Lordships were then considering not a judicial confession but a confession said to have been made to the Police. We think that in interpreting this judgment as goats when he heard cries, of "murder, murder" and saw the appellant and his cousin Bachal striking Bhaikhan with an axe and a lorh. Bhaikhan had a hatchet and struck Bachal in self-defence, but the appellant and Bachal killed Bhaikhan and ran away. One Ismail was also grazing his goats near by. Iso told Ismail of what had happened and they went together and saw the dead body of Bhaikhan. Ismail told Iso to inform Bhaikhan's relations. Iso told Dino who told Juman, Bhaikhan's son-in-law, and Juman went and reported the matter first to the Police outpost at Mulla Katiar and then to the thana at Tando Muhammad Khan at 4 p.m. The head constable came to the scene of the offence and next morning went to the village of the appellant, some two miles away, and arrested the appellant and Bachal who was seriously hurt. Bachal was unconscious and could make no statement. The appellant produced two blood-stained hatchets; his trousers were stained with blood; his footprints were picked out by a pagi in a test, and on November 21, 1938, (the offence having been committed on the 19th) the appellant was sent to a Magistrate for recording his confession, and what has been regarded in this case as a "confession" was recorded. The chemical analysis showed that the hatchets and a lorh, which the Police had also taken in the course of the investigation, and the trousers of the appellant, were stained with human blood. The appellant and Bachal were both challaned for the murder of Bhaikhan, but Bachal died in the hospital.

The case for the defence was put forward by the appellant in his statement made before the Magistrate on November 21, and adhered to by him at the trial. This statement is not and is not intended to be a confession of the murder of Bhaikhan. It is intended by the appellant to exculpate himself completely, and, if believed, the appellant would be entitled to be acquitted, for the appellant says he was with Bachal grazing camels in the jungle when Hayat and Sain Bakhsh, who were in the jungle while Bhaikhan stood near by, attempted to steal one of the appellant's camels. He and Bachal ran crying "thief, thief" when Sain Bakhsh and Hayat who had hatchets fought with Bachal while Bhaikhan fought with him. Bhaikhan struck him on the head and in consequence his turban was cut; his hand was also injured; he however grappled with Bhaikhan and they both fell on the ground Bhaikhan being uppermost, and it was while he was in this helpless position that he heard blows falling upon Bhaikhan; he got up and found Bhaikhan and Bachal on the ground; Bachal was injured in two places with a hatchet; one injury was on the head and one injury was on the arm; Bhaikhan was also injured but he did not notice his injuries minutely; Sain Bakhsh and Hayat were running away; he carried Bachal away who told him he had struck blows at Bhaikhan because he thought that Bhaikhan would kill him; he carried Bachal to his house and then Bachal's father came and then Daryakhan the appellant's father, came and Daryakhan asked Bachal's father to go and make a report; they set no guard on the body of Bhaikhan, but in the afternoon Jumo, Ali and Hayat came to his house armed with hatchets to do them harm but Bachal remonstrated with them and sent them away; he said he had no hatchet with himself; he said he had no enmity with anyone but that Changi, his sister, was criminally intimate with Bhaikhan's son Hayat.

If this statement be true, the appellant is entitled to be acquitted, but we cannot believe the statement to be true, and though the learned Judge has in some way, which is not clear to us, regarded this statement as a confession by the appellant that he with Bachal murdered Bhaikhan—and we do not think it can be so regarded—there appears to us sufficient other evidence on the record to prove the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. There can be no doubt that Bhaikhan was killed. The medical evidence shows that he had four incised wounds. The first injury was a dreadful injury cutting through the side of the face into the head and the cervical vertebra. One other wound cut away the left ear; one other cut through the nose and one other cut completely through the shoulder blade; all these injuries, as the learned Advocate for the appellant points out, were on the left side of the body. There can be no doubt that Bhaikhan died from axe blows. The accused in his statements admits this, though his case is that Bhaikhan was killed in self-defence. It is also clear that Bachal died of injuries inflicted on him in this same fight. He did not die till January 8, 1939, in the Hyderabad hospital whence he was sent from the sub-jail at Tando Muhammad Khan because though his injuries were not at first sight serious, he did not get better as he should have, and the medical officer in the refusal of the High Court to extend the time for receiving the deposit, and that, even if we had, we should be slow to interfere with the exercise by the High Court of its discretion in a matter of this kind. We also refused to entertain any application which did not specify the rules from the requirements of which the applicants desired to be excused; and Counsel then stated that he asked to be excused from compliance with the requirements of O. X, rr. 1, 2 and 3. By a regrettable error on the part of officers of the Court the amended petition served upon the respondents was made to appear as an application under O. XXXVII, rr. 1, 2 and 3, instead of an application to be excused compliance with O. X, rr. 1, 2 and 3. No point however was made of this at the subsequent hearing and neither Counsel for the respondents nor any one else was left in any doubt as to the precise nature of the application.

When the application was heard on February 14, the respondents were also represented. Counsel for the applicants gave an explanation of the delay in making the deposit which was not wholly consistent with the account apparently given to the High Court, and I think it right to remind litigants that, if they ask for the indulgence of this Court, it is necessary for them to show the utmost good faith, and to make a complete disclosure of all relevant facts. But whether the delay was due to want of means, or to negligence, or to some genuine mistake with regard to payment into Court during vacation, the consequences to the applicants are serious enough. It was admitted that the facts of the case did not differ in any material respect from those of other cases which have been before us recently from Patna and in which the Bihar Money-lenders (Regn. of Trans.) Act, 1939, became law after the judgment of the High Court had been pronounced; and it was urged on behalf of the applicants that, unless they are able to bring their appeal before this Court, they cannot claim the benefit of the Act of 1939 and are likely to suffer serious loss. But under the provisions of O. XLV of the Code, they cannot have their appeal admitted until the deposit is made; and until the appeal is admitted they cannot, under rr. 1, 2 and 3 of O. X of the Federal Court Rules, get the record transmitted to this Court or even printed; and the time for lodging their appeal in this Court cannot even begin to run. Counsel for the respondents was content to argue that, as the letter of the law had been broken, the applicants must take the consequences, and he contended that the circumstances were not such as to entitle the applicants to any indulgence at the hands of the Court.

I should be unwilling, if it can be avoided, to allow a not very serious default in a matter of procedure wholly to deprive the applicants of the benefits conferred by the new Bihar Act of 1939. I agree that rules of Court are framed to be kept and not to be broken; but they are framed for the purpose of assisting justice and not for the purpose of enabling it to be defeated. If therefore a strict adherence to the rules is likely to deprive a litigant of advantages which the Provincial Legislature clearly intended to give him then in my opinion the Court may properly exercise the dispensing power conferred by O. XXXVII, in order that substantial justice may be done. It is however necessary to examine carefully the provisions of the rules, in order to see what this Court has or has not power to do, premising that it can only excuse compliance with its own rules and cannot excuse compliance with rules of a High Court and still less with the provisions of a statute.

By s. 205 (1) of the Constitution Act, if a High Court certifies that a case before it involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act or any Order in Council made thereunder, an appeal lies to this Court—

(1) on the ground that the question has been wrongly decided.

(2) on any ground on which an appeal would have lain to the Judicial Committee without special leave if no certificate had been given, and

(3) with the leave of the Federal Court on any other ground. Of these, (2) clearly refers to ss. 109 and 110 of the Code, where the cases in which an appeal lies to the Judicial Committee without special leave are set out. When Parliament determined to give a right of appeal to the Federal Court on what may be described as constitutional questions, it would have been plainly impossible, if other issues arose in the case, to allow the case to be appealed in part to the Federal Court and in part to the Judicial Committee; and accordingly s. 205 provides that if a constitutional question has arisen in a case, the whole case becomes appeal-able to the Federal Court, even though other issues are also involved. By s. 214 (1) of the Act, the Federal Court is empowered to make rules for regulating generally its practice and procedure; and it might be thought from this that the Court would be in a position to control from first to last the conduct of appeals which may be brought before it. But, as I have said, O. XLV of the Code which regulates the procedure in appeals from a High Court to the Judicial Committee, has been extended with the necessary adaptations and modifications to appeals from High Courts to the Federal Court by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. It is for this reason that it has become necessary for litigants who desire to appeal to the Federal Court to go through the process of getting their appeals "admitted" in the High Court before they can lodge their petition of appeal; and they cannot get their appeal "admitted," until they have filed a petition in the High Court in the manner prescribed by O. XLV and have deposited a sum sufficient to cover the cost of having the record printed. It is difficult to say why it should have been thought necessary thus to fetter this Court; but the result is that a good part of the preliminary proceedings connected with an appeal are removed from its control and put under the control of the High Court. Whether the provisions of O. XLV, in their application to Federal Court appeals, can be amended by this Court as High Courts are able to amend them under s. 122 of the Code, it is not necessary now to determine. The Court clearly has no power to do so under s. 122, but a question may arise as to the effect of the opening words of s. 109, as extended by s. 111-A. It seems to have been forgotten that the Court does not possess any such overriding powers as are conferred on the Judicial Committee by s. 74 of the Judicial Committee Act, 1833, by s. 1 of the Judicial Committee Act, 1944, or by s. 112 of the Code.

There is nothing in Chap. I of Part IX of the Constitution Act to suggest that Parliament did not intend the Federal Court to have the amplest power over its own procedure and I do not know why the High Courts have been given power to prevent a litigant who has already been granted a certificate under s. 205 (1) of the Act from prosecuting his appeal to this Court. It ought surely to be the exclusive prerogative of this Court to decide whether a litigant has done anything which forfeits his right to prosecute his appeal. In saying this however I must not be taken as criticising in any way the law as they found it; and, as I have already said, this Court has no power or wish to excuse anyone from compliance with rules applicable to the High Court alone.

Order X, r. 1, of the Federal Court Rules, provides that an appellant shall, subject to the provisions of the Code and of any rules made by the High Court relating to appeals to the Federal Court, take all necessary steps to have the record prepared in the High Court and transmitted to the Federal Court; r. 2 of O. X is consequential on r. 1. Rule 3 provides that within sixty days of the admission of the appeal by the High Court, the appellant shall lodge in the Federal Court his petition of appeal, containing a concise statement of the facts of the case, of the grounds of appeal, and of the arguments and authorities upon which he proposes to rely at the hearing. If his appeal cannot be admitted, it would seem that the sixty days can never begin to run, and therefore that the appeal can never be lodged; and thus a would-be appellant can be deprived of a right which Parliament clearly intended that he should have. In these circumstances I am of opinion that, if the justice of the case requires it, we are entitled to excuse the applicants from compliance with so much of O. X as requires them (1) to have the record prepared and printed in the High Court, and (2) to lodge their petition of appeal in the Federal Court within sixty days of the admission of the appeal by the High Court, and I am of opinion that the applicants in the present case ought to be so excused. I do not think that the absence of any admission of the appeal by the High Court is a statutory bar to the prosecution of the appeal before this Court. The provisions of O. XLV of the Code are procedural provisions only, and I am not prepared to hold that non-compliance with them in the High Court necessarily ousts the jurisdiction of this Court, if a certificate under s. 205 (1) of the Constitution Act has once been given.

The effect of the order which I propose is that the applicants will be at liberty to lodge their petition of appeal in this Court within such time as this Court may consider reasonable, which I think should be fixed as twenty-eight days from the date of our order. Since they have come here to ask for an indulgence, and have no one but themselves to blame for having been compelled to do so, they must pay the costs of this application as between agent and client in any event.

Sulaiman, J.—This is an application for being excused from the compliance with the Rules of the Federal Court and for the enlargement of time. The date of the High Court's decree and the certificate was December 19, 1938, and yet it was not till September 1, 1939, that an attempt was made to offer (not tender) the amount involved, which was only Rs. 253-3. The learned Chief Justice, with whom Fazl Ali, J., agreed, held that the High Court has power to extend the time, but that there were no cogent reasons for the exercise of the discretion. Agarwala, J., has held that no such power exists. If the question were merely one of discretion, this Court even though a superior Court, would not disagree with the High Court's refusal to exercise it in favour of the applicants. There would be no revisional power for interference with the order. And even if there were an appeal we should not interfere with the non-exercise of a mere discretion by the High Court, unless some question of principle were involved. But unfortunately the difficulty is far more fundamental.

Power to 'adapt' the existing Indian Laws by Order in Council has been conferred by s. 293 of the Act, but is confined to bringing the provisions of those laws 'into accord' with those of the Act and in particular into accord with those which re-constitute under different names, governments and authorities and prescribe the distribution of certain powers. But the section gives no power to legislate afresh. The Federal Court was not a re-constituted Court at all, but an altogether new Court, and there were no previously existing laws relating to it which must necessarily be brought into accord with the Govt. of India Act. On the other hand, some adaptation was necessary when in cases fulfilling the requirements of s. 205 direct appeals to the Privy Council, with or without leave, were abolished. But there was no absolute necessity to make the whole of O. XLV, Civil P. O., applicable to Federal Court appeals, even where the only ground taken is a constitutional one. The Federal Court could under s. 214 of the Act and s. 109, Civil P. O., frame its own rules for regulating practice and procedure, and the High Courts also could under s. 122, Civil P. O., subject to the procedure prescribed in Part X, annul, alter or add to the rules in O. XLV, Civil P. O., so far as the procedure in their own Courts was concerned and so long as it was not in conflict with any rule framed by the Federal Court. To remove any possible doubt as to the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order, and indeed in deference to it, the Federal Court by O. IX, r. 1, made O. XL, Civil P. O., 'as modified and adapted' by that Order in Council, applicable to Federal Court appeals also, so that O. XLV may not be deemed to have been excluded by virtue of O. I, r. 5, F. O. R.

The difference of opinion in the High Court is caused by the circumstance that "Code" is defined in O. I, r. 2, F. O. R., as meaning 'the Civil P. O., 1908, as amended or modified by any Order in Council or by or under any Central Act', while O. IX, r. 1, applies the provisions of O. XLV of the Code, 'as modified and adapted by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. But all the definitions in r. 2 of the Federal Court are subject to the governing condition "unless the context otherwise requires". The term "Code", though defined, must be taken along with the context where it occurs, and cannot be taken out of it. Further, the Privy Council Rules do not profess to amend or modify the provisions of O. XLV of the Code, although it must be conceded that they can by implication amend or modify them if they indirectly do so. On the other hand, the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, professedly modifies them, and is admittedly the latest Order in Council for this purpose. Rule 17 has been actually added to O. XLV, and lays down in express terms that, with a few particular amendments introduced by it "the provisions of this Order shall apply in relation to appeals to the Federal Court as they apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council". This Order does not make the provisions of the Privy Council rules, which are professedly supplementary, but may in some cases conflict with O. XLV, applicable to Federal Court appeals. Nor does it even make O. XLV, as deemed to have been amended by the Privy Council Rules, applicable to such appeals.

That appears to be the reason why in O. IX of the Federal Court Rules the reference is only to the latest Order in Council embodying the Adaptation of Indian Laws, and not to any earlier Order in Council. It is to give effect to the mandatory provisions of the latest Order in Council that the reference to the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order was made in the Rule. Had there been a different intention, the Rule could have simply said "any Order in Council".

There can be no doubt that wherever in the Rules the word "Code" has been used by itself, without any qualifications, it must convey the meaning given to it by the definition. But in O. IX, r. 1, that word has not been used by itself, but is qualified by the expression "as modified by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937". The context indicates that it is intended to have a restricted meaning. If in this Rule also the word "Code" were to include all modifications and amendments by any Order in Council, the reference to the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order would be wholly superfluous and redundant. The definition of the term "Code," which occurs in other Orders as well, is undoubtedly wider, but in this particular context it is subject to the qualification attached to it. The applicant's duty (as distinct from the High Court's power) to have the record prepared in the High Court and transmitted to the Federal Court, which can take place only after the admission of the appeals (as the heading of the Order also indicates), is expressly made subject to the provisions of the Code and rules of the High Court under O. X, r. 1, F. C. R.

There are several considerations which show that the provisions in the Privy Council Rules were never intended to be applicable to appeals to the Federal Court. A comparison of the provisions relating to the appeals to the Federal Court with the provisions relating to the appeals to their Lordships of the Privy Council will show that, although the Federal Court Rules are to a great extent modelled on the Privy Council Rules, they contain parallel provisions intended to be sufficient in themselves and certainly independent of the provisions in the Privy Council Rules. They are obviously not wholly comprehensive; at the same time they cannot be regarded as supplemented by the provisions of the Privy Council Rules that exist for the purposes of Privy Council appeals. Had it been intended to incorporate all the provisions of the latter kind, one would have expected to find an express mention of it in O. IX. The intention appears to be to incorporate the provisions of the Civil P. O. as modified and adapted by the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order, and supplement them by the Rules framed by the Federal Court itself, irrespective of the Rules which had been framed for the appeals to their Lordships of the Privy Council. It would be easy to quote numerous provisions in the Federal Court Rules which do not correspond exactly to the Privy Council Rules. If O. XLV, as impliedly amended by the Privy Council Rules, were made applicable to the Federal Court appeals, there would inevitably be a considerable conflict in many matters. I, therefore, feel bound to hold that r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules dated February 9, 1920 has not impliedly been made applicable to Federal Court appeals on account of its being covered by the wider definition of "Code," though not included in the context of O. IX, r. 1.

Rule 17 added to by the Adaptation of Laws Order lays down that if only a constitutional question is raised in the grounds, the petition need not pray for the "certificate" mentioned in r. 3 and that "like proceedings shall be had thereon as if such a certificate had been given etc." An examination of the Rules in the Order makes it quite clear that the 'certificate' mentioned in rr. 6 and 7 is the certificate referred to in r. 3, and not the certificate contemplated by s. 205 of the Act. Thus the words "or within six weeks from the grant of the certificate, whichever is the later date" in r. 7, would be meaningless if no certificate is applied for under r. 3, and in that case all references to such 'certificate' and also security must be deemed to be omitted by necessary implication. Rule 17 does not, however, remove the incompleteness of the Order as it stood before the amendment. When Act XXVI of 1920 limited the extended period in r. 7 to one "not exceeding sixty days," it was overlooked that O. XLV itself did not confer any power on Courts to revoke the certificate if, before the admission of the appeal, the costs are not deposited. The words "such order" in r. 11 prima facie refer to that in r. 12. Order XLV, r. 17, does not improve matters in this respect. It is the Privy Council r. 9 which empowers the Court "to make such further or other order, as in the opinion of the Court, the justice of the case requires." But the Federal Court has not yet made any rule corresponding to r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules. The position would, therefore be one of a deadlock if there were no other way open.

The Federal Court was quite conscious of the fact that the First set of Rules framed by it could by no means be comprehensive or exhaustive. It was clearly anticipated that there would be many matters of detail, relating to practice and procedure, which may not be directly covered by any of the Rules. Powers were accordingly deliberately reserved to meet such a contingency. Order XXXVII, r. 1, provides :

"The Court may, for sufficient cause shown, excuse the parties from compliance with any of the requirements of these Rules, and may give such directions in matters of practice and procedure as it shall consider just and expedient."

The two parts of the Rule, although included in the same Rule, are really separate and distinct. The first deals with the exemption of the parties from compliance with any of the requirements which have been expressly laid down in the Federal Court Rules. The second reserves general power to give direction in matters of practice and procedure as considered just and expedient. It follows that in all cases where the Rules are silent this last provision can appropriately be resorted to. But, of course, that would not entitle us to excuse compliance with the Rules of the Code, made applicable by the Adaptation Order.

The present is stage where the certificate has been granted and an application for leave is still pending, but the High Court has refused to extend the time for depositing the printing costs and the appeal has not yet been declared to be admitted, nor can it be admitted so long as the High Court's order stands. There is no provision empowering the High Court to revoke the certificate or dismiss the application unless an inherent jurisdiction can be invoked. We have no power to make any order which would bind the High Court to act in any particular manner. All that we can do to help the applicants is to excuse them from compliance with O. X, r. 2, Federal Court Rules, and give necessary direction.

Varadachariar, J.—As we have not been asked to examine the correctness of the order of the High Court, we have not heard arguments on the question on which there was a difference of opinion in that Court, viz., the applicability of r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules to appeals to this Court. I therefore refrain from expressing any opinion on that question. I am in agreement with the observations of my Lord as to the probable intention of the Constitution Act with reference to the powers of this Court to regulate the procedure governing appeals to this Court as well as the difficulty caused by the language employed in r. 17 added to O. XXV of the Civil P. C., by the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order, 1937; but I express no opinion on the question mooted in his judgment as to whether the opening words of s. 109 of the Civil P. C., read with s. 111-A empower this Court suitably to modify the provisions of O. XLV of the Civil P. C. I agree with my learned brother that the literal application of the language of r. 7 of O. XLV of the Civil P. C., to appeals to this Court will lead to anomalous results, in cases in which the appeals are preferred on a certificate under s. 205 of the Constitution Act and not on a certificate under O. XLV, r. 3, of the Civil P. C.; and I do not feel sure that the provisions of O. XXXVII, r. 1, of the Federal Court Rules will be found sufficient to obviate anomaly or hardship in all cases. So far as the present application is concerned, it seems possible to grant the indulgence prayed for, without unduly stretching the scope of that rule. I accordingly concur in the order proposed by my Lord.

By the Court.—The Order of the Court is that the applicants are excused from compliance with so much of O. X, rr. 1, 2 and 3, of the Federal Court Rules as requires them (1) to have the record prepared and printed in the High Court, and (2) to lodge their petition of appeal in the Federal Court within sixty days of the admission of the appeal by the Court; and they will be at liberty to lodge their petition of appeal in this Court within twenty-eight days of the date of our Order. We propose to direct the Registrar to communicate with the High Court at Patna informing it of the Order which we have made, and it may be that in the circumstances the High Court will be willing to give the applicants facilities for getting the record printed and transmitted to this Court on payment of the proper charges. This however is a matter entirely for the High Court, and it would not be right for us to say anything further with regard to it. The applicants must furnish this Court within twenty-eight days with copies of the record, and if there are any difficulties with regard to the printing of it, there will be liberty to apply in chambers. The applicants must pay the costs in any event of this application as between agent and client.

D.

Order accordingly.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,

LAHORE—PETITIONER

KRISHAN KISHORE—RESPONDENT

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 55, 9—Impartible estate—Joint Hindu family of assessee and his sons—Assessee succeeding by rule of primogeniture—Income of estate in his hands, if chargeable in status of 'individual'—Incumbent; whether owner for purposes of s. 9—S. 9, construction—Owner of property, meaning of.

The income of the impartible estate, to which the assessee has succeeded by rule of primogeniture prevailing in his family governed by the Mitakshara, is not chargeable in his hand in the status of 'individual.' The income of the impartible estate cannot be said to be the income solely of the incumbent of the impartible estate there being vested in the junior members of the family a right to maintenance out of that income arising by reason of their right in the property and not imposed by custom upon one member of the joint Hindu family namely the incumbent of the impartible estate. The incumbent of an impartible estate cannot become for the purposes of s. 9, Income Tax Act, the owner of the property. As the corpus of the property belongs to the joint Hindu family, individual member of that family cannot be held to be the owner simply because by custom in that particular property the major portion of the income is used entirely for his benefit. 141 Ind. Cas. 415 (1), followed. 168 Ind. Cas. 168 (4), distinguished. 150 Ind. Cas. 545 (9), relied on. 82 Ind. Cas. 653 (3) and 138 Ind. Cas. 861 (3), not followed. 148 Ind. Cas. 855 (13), explained and distinguished. 182 Ind. Cas. 712 (12) and 64 Ind. Cas. 801 (14), followed.

On a plain construction of the words of s. 9, Income Tax Act, it necessarily follows that the assessee must be the owner of the property assessed. In construing this section the words 'owner of the property' cannot be construed as meaning owner of the annual value of the property. [p. 680, col. 2.]

O. Ref. by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, N.-W. F. and Delhi Provinces, Lahore, dated September 8, 1938.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Badri Das and Kirpa Ram Bajaj, for the Respondent.

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this reference under s. 66 (1), Income Tax Act, are stated at p. 2 of the printed paper book by the learned Commissioner of Income-tax and may, briefly, be recapitulated here. The assessee, Diwan Bahadur Krishan Kishore, is the present holder of an impartible estate to which he succeeded under the rule of primogeniture prevailing in his family. The income of that impartible estate consists mainly of rent of property and interest. This latter source is however small and the income consists mainly of rent from house property. It appears that up to 1923-24 the liability to super-tax of this income was determined as if it were the income of an individual. In a revision petition in that year however the assessee contended that he formed a joint Hindu family with his sons and that he should get exemption from super-tax up to the limit provided in the case of a Hindu undivided family and not as if the income were that of an individual. This contention was conceded. In 1929-30 the Commissioner however cancelled the assessment of the income from the impartible estate as being the income of a Hindu undivided family and directed that the income of the impartible estate and the personal income of the Diwan Bahadur should be assessed in a combined assessment as if the income of the impartible estate were the income of an individual. A reference was made to the High Court and the result is reported in Kishan Kishore v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1). One of the questions in that reference was:

"Whether in a view of the fact that the rule of primogeniture prevails in the petitioner's family and of the terms of the award of Mr. Atkins, the petitioner can be said to be the sole owner of the impartible estate the taxable income of which has been assessed on him as an individual?"

The learned Judges held that an impartible estate could belong to an undivided Hindu family and was not the sole property of the person who had succeeded to it by the rule of primogeniture. They therefore, answered the question referred to above in the negative. In other words, they allowed the assessee's claim to be assessed to super-tax on the income from the impartible estate as if the same were the income belonging to a joint Hindu family. Certain other disputes arose on the question of the income of the assessee but they do not concern us here, the question of law referred in this case for the decision of the Hon'ble High Court being:

"(1) Whether the income of the impartible estate, to which the assessee has succeeded by a rule of primogeniture prevailing in his family governed by the Mitakshara, is chargeable in his hand in the status of 'individual,' the assessee being the head of the family consisting of himself and his sons?"

The second question is unimportant, for the answer to the first question would, as (1) 61 T. C. 345; 141 Ind. Cas. 415; A I R 1933 Lah 284; 14 L. 255; 34 P. L. R. 560.

rightly pointed out by the learned Commissioner, determine the answer to the second question. The reason for the reference in the face of the Division Bench ruling reported in Kishen Kishore v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1) is given in the opinion of the Commissioner at pp. 4 and 5. The learned Commissioner there pointed out, relying on the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kalyanji Vitthal Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal (2) (at p. 95) that though certain property might be described as family property yet the income from the property might be regarded as the income of an individual and therefore chargeable to income-tax as the income of an individual. He also pointed that the Patna High Court in the case reported in Shiva Prasad Singh v. Emperor (3) at p. 389 had held that the income of an impartible estate was the income of the incumbent for the time being, nor did the fact that he is bound to maintain his sons entitle him to treat the income as that of the undivided family. Similarly, the Madras High Court in a case reported in Raja of Bobbili v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (4) held that the impartible estate though ancestral is clothed with the incidents of self-acquired and separate property. The corpus might belong to the undivided family and the assessee might be a member of a Hindu undivided family but nonetheless the income received was his absolute property and differed in no way from that gained by personal exertions or other self-acquisitions. He distinguished the Lahore case on the ground that in the Lahore case it was only held that the corpus of the property might belong to the undivided family. In the view of their Lordships of the Madras High Court the fact that the corpus belonged to the Hindu joint family did not affect the question of the income, and the income from an impartible estate not being joint family income was not the income of the joint Hindu family but clearly was the income of an individual. Similarly, the Patna

High Court had in another case followed the Madras judgment and its own earlier judgment and held that the income of the impartible Raj in the hands of the holder was to be assessed on the footing that the income was the income of the individual and not of an undivided family. The learned Commissioner contended that in view of these authorities the answer to the first question referred should be in the affirmative.

It would appear from the opinion of the Commissioner that the learned Commissioner conceded the point that the corpus of the property did belong to a Hindu joint family consisting of Diwan Krishan Kishore and his sons, but, according to the learned Commissioner, this fact did not affect the question of the ownership of the income. Before us however the learned Counsel for the Income-tax Commissioner has contested both the question of the ownership of the corpus and the ownership of the income. A number of rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council have been cited but the main reliance of the learned Counsel has been on a case reported in Shibaprasad Singh v. Prayag Kumari Debee (5) where their Lordships of the Privy Council reviewed a good many of the previous decisions of the Privy Council on the subject of impartible estates. In that case at p. 1413^a their Lordships summarized the discussion as follows:

"Impartibility is essentially a creature of custom. In the case of ordinary joint family property, the members of the family have (1) the right of partition, (2) the right to restrain alienations by the head of the family except for necessity, (3) the right of maintenance, and (4) the right of survivorship. The first of these rights cannot exist in the case of an impartible estate, though ancestral, from the very nature of the estate. The second is incompatible with the custom of impartibility as laid down in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (6) and the first Pittapur case (Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards) (7) and so also the third as held in the second Pittapur case (Venkata Mahipati Gangadara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur) (8)."

As regards (4) their Lordships remarked that they still maintained that the right of survivorship was inconsistent with the custom of impartibility. From the propositions laid down the learned Counsel contended that the income arising from the impartible estate must be held to be the absolute income of the incumbent for the time being and therefore assessable as the income of an individual. It should here be pointed out that the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to by the learned Commissioner, namely Kalyanji Vithal Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal (2) did not deal with the question of the income arising from an impartible estate at all. Their Lordships took special care to note that they were not dealing with the case of an impartible estate held by the senior of several male members of the family as to which there had been conflicting decisions in India, referring to the Patna case and the Lahore case mentioned above. The passage which is quoted by the learned Commissioner referred to their Lordships' decision that the words "Hindu undivided family" in the Income Tax Act were wider than the words "Hindu co-parcenary." A female might be a member of the Hindu undivided family though she might not be a member of the Hindu co-parcenary, and the question there being discussed by their Lordships was whether the existence of a wife or a wife and a daughter could be held to make the income which went to the sole male member of the family, the income of a Hindu undivided family and it was with reference to this question that their Lordships' remarks must be read. That matter, it appears to me, is perfectly distinct from the question whether, where admittedly a Hindu co-parcenary is existing, the income arising from the corpus of property owned by that co-parcenary can be said to be the absolute income of the head of the family. Normally speaking of course it could not be held to be the income of the individual head of the family but would be held to be the income of the Hindu joint family, but the contention of the learned Counsel for the Income-tax Commissioner is that in the case of an impartible estate the income must be treated as that of the incumbent of the impartible estate.

Speaking entirely for myself and with the greatest deference to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (6), and the first Pittapur case (7), I find it difficult to understand why the right to control alienation should be incompatible with the absence of the right to partition. As pointed out in the Lahore case, in the Punjab, Hindu Mitakshara Law has been modified by custom so that sons have no right to demand partition of ancestral property or joint family property as against their father. It has never however been doubted that the sons in the Punjab retain their right to control alienations made by the father except for necessity. Without in the least wishing to detract from the authority of the Privy Council ruling, for it is undoubtedly binding on any Court in this country, I merely state the difficulty that I find it difficult to understand why their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the right to restrain alienations was inextricably involved with the right to partition. Assuming however that this is so, the second Pittapur case (8), appears to have laid down that the right to maintenance was also incompatible with the existence of an impartible estate. There are certainly words in that case which would tend to show that this is so. It would appear as if that case had held that there was no right of maintenance held by the junior members of the Hindu joint family in an impartible estate except such as might have been imposed by custom. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have however themselves in a later case, as far as I can understand it, negated this view. That case is reported in Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal (9). Their Lordships were there dealing with the succession by survivorship to an impartible estate but in the course of that decision they examined a number of previous rulings of the Privy Council and summarized the result of that discussion of the previous rulings at p. 485* as follows :

"1. The decisions of the Board in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (6), and the first Pittapur case (7), appeared to be destructive of the doctrine that an impartible samindari could be in any sense joint family property.

2. This view apparently implied in these cases was definitely negated by Lord Dunedin when delivering the judgment of the Board in 1921, in Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (10).

3. One result is at length clearly shown to be that there is no reason why the earlier judgments of the Board should not be followed, such as for instance the Chellapalli case, Mallikarjuna v. Durga Prasad (11), which regarded their right to maintenance, however limited, out of an impartible estate as being based upon the joint ownership of the junior members of the family, with the result that these members holding samindari lands for maintenance could still be considered as joint in estate with the samindar in possession."

The right to maintenance therefore of the junior members of the family in an impartible estate was here referred not to custom but to the right arising out of the joint ownership of the estate by the junior members of the family with the present incumbent. Speaking again with the greatest deference and with all proper respect to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, I find it very difficult to reconcile the words quoted in the judgment of the Board with reference to maintenance in Shiba Prasad Singh v. Prayag Kumari Debee (5), with the latest judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal (9), at p. 485. In the circumstances it appears to me that the most recent judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reviewing the previous decisions must be held to be binding on this Court and the result of all the Privy Council decisions must be taken to be summarized by their Lordships of the Privy Council themselves in Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal (9). From that decision it seems to me that it would follow (1) that in an impartible estate a Hindu joint family does own the corpus of the property, (2) that the members of this joint family have no right to partition the estate, (3) that the members of the family have no right to control the alienations made by the incumbent of the impartible estate and (4) that the members of the joint family have the right to receive maintenance from the estate and this right arises because they are owners of the estate and is not a right to maintenance from the joint family, though not from the property, as is the case of female members of a joint family. The distinction is really quite clear; in the one case the female member has a right to maintenance from the joint Hindu family but this right does not confer any right in the estate or property of the joint family; in the other case the members of the co-parcenary have a right to maintenance arising from their right in the property of the joint Hindu family of which they are co-owners. It follows from this again that the income of the impartible estate cannot be said to be the income solely of the incumbent of the impartible estate there being vested in the junior members of the family a right to maintenance out of that income arising by reason of their right in the property and not imposed by custom upon one member of the joint Hindu family namely the incumbent of the impartible estate.

This would suffice to dispose of the reference, but in case the matter goes further I must refer also to another argument which was raised by the learned Counsel for the assessee Diwan Bahadur Krishan Kishore. The learned Counsel in this part of the argument conceded that it would not affect the question of the income arising as interest from security, if any, appertaining to the impartible estate but it did affect the income arising from property which, according to him, was the main source of income of the impartible estate. The contention was that under s. 9, Income Tax Act, the income arising from property could only be assessed on an assessee who was the owner of the property. Therefore according to the learned Counsel as the Commissioner for Income-tax conceded that the corpus of the property belonged not to the incumbent but to the joint Hindu family, it followed that qua the property the owner was the Hindu undivided joint family and not the incumbent. On a plain construction of the words of s. 9, which runs,

"the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'property' in respect of the bona fide annual value of property consisting of any buildings or lands appurtenant thereto of which he is the owner..."

it necessarily follows that the assessee must be the owner of the property assessed. In reply to this contention however the learned Counsel for the Commissioner cited Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Abubakar Abdul Rahman (12), a Bombay ruling of 1939. In construing this section the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court held that the words 'owner of the property' must be construed as meaning owner of the annual value of the property. The judgment of one of the learned Judges concedes that this interpretation does violence to the plain grammatical meaning of the words of the section, but the learned Judges felt that this was the only construction which was reconcilable with the general scheme of the Act. The judgment of the Chief Justice in that case was based upon the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy

Council reported in Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (13), at p. 324. With all deference again to the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court I must admit that I am unable to follow how the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (13), supports this construction. I do not think I need analyze the matter in any great detail. It is sufficient to say that I am quite unable to see that the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council had anything to do with any such forced construction. All that their Lordships of the Privy Council were there concerned with was the question whether in a particular case the word 'owner' should mean the legal owner or the beneficial owner and whether a particular beneficiary could be said to be the owner. Another ruling relied on was Burma Railways Co. v. Secretary of State (14), a Burma ruling, but again with all deference to the learned Judges of the Burma Court I am unable to follow why a person in the control and management of certain property should for the purposes of the Income Tax Act be regarded as the owner of the property. The very illustration given in the case of a man handing over property to his sons would appear to me not to be a very happy illustration for I do not know if the Income-tax Authorities would welcome a man with several sons handing over the control of different parts of his property to different sons, thereby escaping assessment himself for the income with the possible result that the sons might not be assessable to income at all, for their divided shares might be less than the taxable minimum.

Be that as it may however I am unable to see that any such forced construction is called for in the circumstances of this case. I agree that the word 'owner' is not defined in the Income Tax Act and that the word 'owner' might very well cover the legal owner, the equitable owner or even the owner of a limited estate carved out of a larger estate. But from all this it would not follow that the incumbent of an impartible estate becomes for the purposes of s. 9 the owner of the property. If, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council and (13) 58 B 317 (324); 148 Ind. Cas. 855; A I R 1934 P O 116; 61 I A 209; 6 R P O 145; 39 L W 771; (1934) A L J 429; 38 O W N 618; 36 Bom. conceded by the learned Commissioner, the corpus of the property belongs to the joint Hindu family, I am unable to see that the individual member of that family can be held to be the owner simply because by custom in that particular property the major portion of the income is used entirely for his benefit. In the circumstances therefore I would uphold the contention of the learned Counsel for the assessee on this point also. The result is that I would answer the first question referred by the learned Commissioner in the negative and as a corollary thereto I would also answer the second question in the negative. As regards costs I consider that the assessee is entitled to his costs which are assessed at Rs. 300.

Landlord and tenant—Assignee of lease, if liable by privity of estate to payment of rent to lessor.

In India an assignee of a lease is liable on the covenants by privity of estate to the payment of rent to the lessor. The manner in which the interest of the lessee becomes vested in the assignee is immaterial, provided the method is such as in law vests the whole interest of the lessee in the assignee. The doctrine, therefore, applies even where the title of the assignee is derived under a Court sale. 179 Ind. Cas 328 (2), relied on.

But the liability to interest arises purely under the contract contained in the lease. It is not a liability which runs with the land or is attached in law to the interest of the lessee, and it is not a liability which affects an assignee of the lease.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 119 of 1937.

Messrs. G. P. Murdeshwar, and R. A. Mundkur, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Dharwar, and it raises a question whether the assignee of a lease in this country is liable by privity of estate to the payment of rent to the lessor. The lease in question was granted on January 6, 1926, by the plaintiff to defendant No. 1, the term being 40 years. On April 1, 1931, the interest of defendant No. 1 under the lease was sold in execution proceedings to defendant No. 2, who is the present appellant. The sale was confirmed on April 9, 1934, and the certificate was granted on April 14, 1934. This suit was started on December 22, 1936, and in it rent is claimed for six years against both the lessee and the appellant as assignee of the lease. The appellant contends, in the first place, that the doctrine of liability of an assignee of a lease by virtue of privity of estate has no application in this country. The question was discussed by a Full Bench of this Court in Keshavlal Tribhovan v. Maganlal Shivram (1), and in giving judgment I did myself express a doubt as to whether the doctrine could have any application in India, particularly having regard to the definition of "lease" in s. 105, T. P. Act, which seemed to me to show that a lessee has no estate in the land. I still feel that technical difficulty, but since that case was decided, the subject has been before the Privy Council in Ram Kinkar Banerjee v. Satya Charan (2). In that case their Lordships were considering whether a mortgagee of a leasehold interest was liable on a covenant in the lease by privity of estate, and the actual decision was that under an Indian mortgage, in whatever form, the mortgagor does not part with the whole of his interest in the property and therefore the mortgagee, who does not acquire the whole interest of the mortgagor, is not liable by privity of estate under the covenants of the lease. But Lord Porter in giving the judgment of the Board makes these observations (p. 58*):

"By English law and by Indian law an assignee of a lease is liable by privity of estate for all the burdens of the lease, burdens which are imposed upon him by the mere assignment, whether he enters into possession or not,"

and he then referred with approval to two Madras cases in which the point had been decided. In view of that clear expression of the view of the Privy Council, it seems to me that it is not open to any Court in this country to question the doctrine that an assignee of a lease is liable on the covenants by privity of estate. A second point taken by the appellant is that although that may be the position under an assignment inter partes the doctrine does not apply where, as in the present case, the title of the assignee is derived under a court-sale which is not followed by an assignment. But the answer to that contention is to be found in s. 65, Civil P. C., which provides that where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. So that the statute operates to vest the property purchased in the purchaser, and no assignment is necessary, nor is it the practice in this country to take an assignment on a court-sale. In my opinion, the manner in which the interest of the lessee becomes vested in the assignee is immaterial, provided the method is such as in law vests the whole interest of the lessee in the assignee. In my opinion in this case the assignee did as from the date of the sale acquire the whole interest of the lessee, and as from that date he is liable on the covenants of the lease which run with the land. That was the decision of the learned District Judge, who modified the order of the trial Court by limiting the liability of the appellant to the period from the date of the sale, which is rather less than six years. The cross-objections, in which the lessor asks for interest on the arrears of rent because under the lease interest is made payable on arrears of rent, are clearly not well founded. The liability to interest arises purely under the contract contained in the lease. It is not a liability which runs with the land or is attached in law to the interest of the lessee, and it is not a liability which affects an assignee of the lease. The appeal is dismissed with costs, and the cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Sen, J.—I agree.

Appeal and cross-objections dismissed.

EMPEROR THROUGH RAM GOPAL
AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 75 (2), 205, 540-A—Magistrate writing to another Magistrate to return warrant unexecuted—Effect—Warrant issued subsequently recalled—Accused before Magistrate—Accused, if can be allowed to appear by Pleader—S. 540-A, scope and applicability.

A warrant is an order addressed to a certain person directing him to arrest the accused and to produce the accused before the Court. The warrant may have a further provision for admitting the accused to bail. But in each case the warrant is an order directed to someone to arrest a certain accused and bring him before the Court, and the person to whom it is addressed may if he is a Magistrate or Police Officer endorse the warrant to some one serving under him. When the Magistrate writes to the District Magistrate in another province asking him to return the warrants unexecuted then it is clear that the warrants are cancelled. Section 75 (2), Criminal P. C., does not require that there should be any formal order on the record, of cancellation.

The word "ever" in "whenever" in s. 205 (1), Criminal P. C., implies different occasions and is in contrast to the words used in the previous s. 204 about issuing a summons in the first instance. In the case where a warrant had been issued and recalled and a summons then has been issued s. 205 will apply by virtue of this word "whenever." The same result follows when the accused being before the Magistrate he does not think it necessary for him to issue summons for his appearance. In such a case he can allow the accused to appear by Pleader.

Section 540-A, Criminal P. C., is a general section which will apply to cases of all kinds whether the accused is in jail custody or whether he is on bail or whether he is appearing in obedience to a summons. 129 Ind. Cas. 360 (1), explained.

Cr. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge, Benares, dated September 30, 1939.

Mr. K. D. Majaviya, for the Applicant.

Order.—These are two criminal references by the learned Sessions Judge of Benares at the instance of a complainant Jagdish Narain, a resident of Benares. Jagdish Narain made a complaint under ss. 420-109 and 120-B, I. P. C. against four persons, (1) Babu Ram Gupta of Lucknow; (2) Ramgopal, (3) E. Jones and (4) Balram Gupta, all of Bombay. The complaint alleged that the complainant had accepted an agency for selling cloth supplied by the firm of accused called the Swadeshi Cloth Mills, Bombay, and that the gist of the offence was in para. 11 :

"they dishonestly and with a view to defraud the complainant and the public all along assured the complainant that the accused were sending the complainant only Swadeshi goods, which the complainant believed," but that actually some foreign goods were sent. The complainant filed two letters from the accused's firm but he did not file the alleged written agreement which he had with the accused and of which he complains the accused have committed a breach which amounts to a criminal offence. There is therefore nothing before the Court at this stage to show that there was any such agreement with the accused except the mere allegation of the complainant. The case was sent to a Special Magistrate in Benares and he issued bailable warrants for the four accused. The first accused Babu Ram Gupta appeared in Court on August 11, 1939 and he was directed to execute a personal bond of Rs. 500 with one surety of Rs. 100. He in his petition alleged that the other accused were respectable persons in Bombay and that the accused or some of them had filed a case in Lucknow against Moti Lal and Sri Ram for taking away their property on July 14, 1939. This prior case in Lucknow was also mentioned in para. 16 of the complaint of Jagdish Narain and his complaint on July 26, 1939 was subsequent. The application of Babu Ram Gupta further said that the present case of Jagdish Narain had been filed to harass the accused who were in Bombay and that they would attend on the date fixed. The Magistrate ordered on August 11, 1939 :

"The warrant against other accused may be cancelled if he undertakes to bring them on the next hearing, i. e., August 31, 1939."

Such an undertaking did actually appear in the application of Babu Ram Gupta: "They will appear on the date fixed." The Magistrate then wrote a letter to Bombay of which he did not retain a copy, but he received a reply from the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, dated September 2, 1939 (paper No. 26-B) stating :

"With reference to your letter dated August 11, 1939, to the address of the District Magistrate, Bombay, I have the honour to return the accompanying three arrest warrants unexecuted as desired."

In quoting this letter the Sessions Judge has forgotten to enter the date August 11, and has only entered the month. It is clear therefore that on the very date on which the application was made by accused

No. 1 Babu Ram Gupta, the Magistrate issued a letter to the District Magistrate, Bombay, asking him to return the three warrants unexecuted. Learned Counsel argues that this does not amount to the cancellation of the warrants under s. 75, Criminal P. C. Section 75 (2) states :

"Every such warrant shall remain in force until it is cancelled by the Court which issued it or until it is executed."

Now the Code does not define a warrant but in Sch. V, Form No. 2, the form of a warrant is given under s. 75 as follows :

"To (name and designation of the person or persons who is or are to execute the warrant.)

Whereas of stands charged with the offence of (state the offence), you are hereby directed to arrest the said , and to produce him before me. Herein fail not.

Dated this day of 19."

This form shows clearly that a warrant is an order addressed to a certain person directing him to arrest the accused and to produce the accused before the Court. The warrant may have a further provision for admitting the accused to bail. But in each case the warrant is an order directed to someone to arrest a certain accused and bring him before the Court and the person to whom it is addressed may if he is a Magistrate or Police Officer endorse the warrant to some one serving under him. When the Magistrate in Benares wrote to the District Magistrate in Bombay asking him to return the warrants unexecuted then it is clear that the warrants were cancelled. The essence of the warrant being an order directed to the District Magistrate in Bombay the letter to the District Magistrate telling him to return that written order is a cancellation of that order. When an order is revoked in this manner the order no longer exists. This is perfectly clear in the case of an oral order. If any one said to a Police Officer "arrest that man" and then said "do not arrest him" the order would no longer stand. Section 75 (2) does not require that there should be any formal order on the record of cancellation. The Magistrate has discretion at any time to withdraw his warrant. The Magistrate withdrew his warrant and therefore the warrant was cancelled. It is clear therefore that after this letter had been received and acted upon by the Commissioner of Police in Bombay there was no longer any warrant outstanding for the Commissioner of Police to arrest these accused and the Commissioner of Police could not have legally arrested these accused. Some argument was made that the Magistrate in Benares might have again sent the warrant to the Commissioner of Police. If he had done so, that would have been again issuing a warrant and the mere fact that he may not have written the warrant again would not make the matter nonetheless the issue of a fresh order. It is probable however that if he had desired to issue a fresh warrant he would not have used the old form because that would have led to confusion and if he had used the old form he would probably have explained in his new letter that he was doing so merely for the sake of convenience. The next proceeding in the case is a written application purporting to be made by the three accused from Bombay identified by Mr. Jagdish Prasad, Advocate, who signs the application as identifying them with the date August 28, 1939. This application sets out as follows :

"That the applicants are respectable persons and are being maliciously prosecuted with absolutely false allegations.

That the applicants are incapable of remaining before the Court and the applicants will be put to serious loss by their appearance in person in your honour's Court.

That the applicants would have to travel from Bombay where they reside for every hearing in the case.

It is therefore humbly prayed that the personal attendance of the applicants may kindly be excused and they may be allowed to appear through their Advocate Mr. Jagdish Prasad

On this the Magistrate wrote the order "Allowed Sd. A. Bari, August 29, 1939." The Magistrate therefore permitted these three accused to appear by their Advocate. One of the criticisms that has been made of this application was made to the Sessions Judge who was told that the three persons did not actually appear before the Magistrate. The Sessions Judge states :

"But the application in itself does not show that these three persons were present in Court that day."

The Sessions Judge failed to read and understand the sentence in the application which states : "That the applicants are incapable of remaining before the Court." This sentence implies that the three applicants were before the Court on the day in question. This is further confirmed by the fact that the Advocate Mr. Jagdish Prasad above his signature and below the signatures of the three accused wrote the words "Id." This is clearly an abbreviation for "Identified" and means that he identified these three persons before the Court. The story now suggested by the learned Sessions Judge that these people did not appear in Benares would involve either the theory that the Advocate went to Bombay to identify them or that the Advocate told a lie when he wrote on the paper "Identified" below their signatures. Neither theory seems to me at all probable and there is nothing whatever to support these suggestions made by the complainant. If the complainant had any doubts whatever on the question of the presence of these three accused before the Magistrate it was open to the Counsel for the complainant to make an application in writing to the Magistrate asking the Magistrate whether these three persons did or did not appear before him. No such application was made.

The next question argued is the legality of this order. Now the argument addressed to me is that s. 204, Criminal P. C., uses the words "a summons should issue in the first instance" and the suggestion is made that these words should be imported into s. 205 (1). This sub-section does not use these words at all and it uses quite different language and it states as follows:

"Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may if he sees reason so to do, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his Pleader."

The language used in this sub-section begins with the word "whenever." The learned Sessions Judge does not seem to have appreciated the meaning of this English word. The word "ever" implies different occasions and is in my opinion in contrast to the words used in the previous s. 204 about issuing a summons in the first instance. In the case of a warrant having been issued and recalled and a summons then having been issued it would appear to me that s. 205 will apply by virtue of this word "whenever." In the present case as the accused appeared before the Magistrate it was not necessary for him to issue a summons for their appearance. He had them before him, but he had exactly the same powers as if they had appeared before him in obedience to a summons. The point about the reference to a summons in s. 205 appears to me to be shown by the form for a summons in Sch. V, Form No. 1, which is as follows:

"To of whereas your attendance is necessary to answer to a charge of (state shortly the offence charged; you are hereby required to appear in person (or by Pleader, as the case may be) before the (Magistrate) of on the of . Herein fail not:

Dated this day of 19 ."

This shows that in sending a summons the Magistrate might either require appearance in person or appearance by Pleader and he strikes out whatever words he does not desire to appear in the summons. All that is required in s. 205 (1) is that the Magistrate should consider that a summons is sufficient for the appearance of the accused in the case and if he is of that opinion he may then permit the accused to appear by Pleader. If, on the other hand, a Magistrate considers that a warrant is necessary, then the Magistrate considers that there should be an order for someone to arrest the accused and bring the accused before him or admit the accused to bail to appear before him. If that is the opinion of the Magistrate, it is obvious that he will not at the same time dispense with the personal attendance of the accused. No one would hold those two contrary views at the same time. This is all that is implied by the reference to a summons in s. 205. It appears to me that it was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court when the accused were before the Court and the warrants had been recalled from Bombay to make the order which the Court did make allowing the accused to appear by Pleader. As to the propriety of this order, I take into account the fact that this is a case filed apparently after the complaint filed in Lucknow, and that the complainant in this case has not yet filed in Court his agreement the breach of which he says amounts not only to be a breach of contract but also constitutes a criminal offence. There is therefore practically no material before the Court at present to indicate that there was any offence committed by the accused and there is nothing in the nature of a prima facie case. This is the matter which in my opinion should always be taken into account in considering the propriety of an order under s. 205 (1), Criminal P. C.

Some reference has also been made to s. 540-A, Criminal P. C. That is a general section which will apply to cases of all kinds whether the accused is in jail custody or whether he is on bail or whether he is appearing in obedience to a summons. In that section the words used are "incapable of remaining before the Court." The only ruling which has been shown to me is Emperor v. Radha Raman (1). In the case one of the accused in the Meerut Conspiracy case under s. 121-A, Penal Code—a non-bailable offence—was in custody and he had been permitted by the Sessions Judge to go to Calcutta to see his sister who was ill. There is nothing in the ruling which indicates that he was allowed to proceed on bail. So the presumption is that he was sent to Calcutta in custody. It was then held by a learned Single Judge of this Court that s. 540-A of the Code would not apply, as in that case it could not be said that the accused was incapable of remaining before the Court and that these words should be used in their plain and ordinary meaning. The Judge however did not proceed to define what he considered would be the plain and ordinary meaning of these words and the ruling therefore does not throw any light on the possible meaning to be assigned to these words. I do not think that this section is relevant to the present case and therefore I need not discuss the meaning of these words and whether they would or would not apply to the present case. In the present case the trial had not begun when the Magistrate passed his order and therefore the stage of s. 205 (1), Criminal P.C., was still existing. For these reasons I consider that no case has been made out for the Criminal Reference No. 843 of 1939.

I now come to Criminal Reference No. 844 of 1939. The date fixed for this trial of these four accused persons was August 31, 1939 and on that date the accused No. 1, Babu Ram Gupta, attended from Lucknow and the other accused were represented by Mr. Jagdish Prasad their Advocate. The complainant failed to attend and he tendered a medical certificate in the following terms:

"Jagdish Narain Bajpai is suffering from fever with dysentery and would take about a week for his recovery. (Sd.) G. R. Mullick, M. B., B. S."

On this there was an application made on behalf of the accused that the fees of the Civil Surgeon would be supplied by them if the Court would direct the Civil Surgeon of Benares to visit the complainant in Benares and see whether he was fit to attend Court. The Civil Surgeon Lt. Col. Vaidya did visit the complainant and sent a long report to the Court. In that report he states that the complainant whom he saw at 1-55 P. M. that day complained of pain in his stomach and fever and said that the pain was very severe and was still continuing and that he was having five or six loose stools a day since August 25, and from August 29, nine or ten loose stools a day. The Civil Surgeon then applied the usual method of examination of the abdomen and stated:

"The abdomen is soft. There is no rigidity or tenderness. Deep pressure was applied when the patient was talking and he did not wince with pain."

It is perfectly clear from this report on this point that there was no pain in the abdomen such as the complainant alleged. As regards the fever the Civil Surgeon reported:

"The body does not feel warm to show that there is anything like fever. He says he had fever till 10 A. M."

That is, the alleged fever which was preventing him from attending Court that day miraculously stopped before the Civil Surgeon arrived. The report further proceeds that:

"He says he was being treated by Dr. Malik since 29th morning. He gave him some medicine He cannot show the prescription nor the bottle of medicine prescribed by Dr. Malik."

It is clear therefore that the evidence of treatment by Dr. Malik was not forthcoming. In spite of the fact that the complainant said he was passing eight or ten loose stools a day the Civil Surgeon states: "He says he will not be able to pass any stools." It was the passing of these loose stools which was the reason alleged why he did not come to Court, but when the Civil Surgeon examined him he said that no stools were available or would be available. The first question asked by the Court was "How long has he been ill?" and the reply of the Civil Surgeon is: "I am unable to say how long has he been ill or if he has been ill at all." The second question was: "Is the patient able to come to Court?" and the answer was: "The patient did not look seriously ill," and the third reply was: "The present condition did not appear to me to be serious." It appears clear to me that the complainant was not at all ill and that he had other reasons for not desiring to attend Court. In any case no explanation is given as to why the complainant did not produce any other witnesses. Even if he himself had been unable to attend there was no reason why witnesses should not have been produced and why he desired the case to be postponed without any evidence being recorded. On this report of the Civil Surgeon the Magistrate passed the following order:

"From the report of the Civil Surgeon it appears that complainant's condition is not serious. He had no fever at the time he was examined. Besides he had no colic pain in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon. To me it appears that the application is calculated to harass the accused who have to come to Benares from Bombay after incurring heavy expenditure on each hearing, I order the complainant to pay Rs 100 as cost to the accused. The next date is fixed October 15, 1939. The complainant is ordered to bring all his witnesses and the documents upon which he relies."

(Sd.) Abdul Bari, August 31, 1939.

This is the order which is the subject of the criminal reference in question. Even the Sessions Judge who refers this case states:

"On a careful consideration of the Civil Surgeon's report it does appear to me that Jagdish Narain Bajpai was not so ill as not to be able to come to Court. ... He sent this certificate merely to avoid the production of evidence on that day."

The reason why this matter was referred by the Sessions Judge is because he thought that the order for the accused to appear by Pleader was not legal otherwise he says he would not have referred this matter of costs. Some argument was made that the costs of Rs. 100 was excessive. But these costs had to cover several matters. One was the fee of the Civil Surgeon, another was the fee of the Advocate for the accused, the third was the cost of Babu Ram Gupta coming on that day from Lucknow. In view of these matters I do not think that the Rs. 100 was excessive. For these reasons I refuse both these references of the learned Sessions Judge and I direct that the record be returned to the Magistrate through the Sessions Judge.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, JAGRAON—
DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 169 (g), Proviso—Disposal of part of public street proposed by Municipality—Damage likely to be caused to vested interests of public—Burden to prove that part proposed to be disposed of is no longer required as public street, lies heavily on Municipality—Highway—Rights of public, interference with—Injunction, suit for—Municipality proposing to sell part of public street in front of person's shop—Person's frontage of unusual value likely to be affected—If cause Municipality for injunction—Damages, whether can be assessed in such case—Injunction, if can be granted.

The Municipal Committee cannot act arbitrarily and prejudice the rights of the public in disposing of a part of the public street on the mere pretext, without any substance behind it, that it is no longer wanted as a public street. Where by doing so they will cause damage to the vested interests of members of the public, the burden lies heavily upon the Municipality to prove that in fact the portion of land they propose to dispose of is no longer required as a public street.

For owners of houses abutting on a public highway, the question of frontage means a great deal, and if anything is done by those in whom the highway vests, which interferes with the rights of the owners with regard to the highway, and which tends to diminish the comforts of the occupants of the houses, the owners have an actionable claim against them.

Hence where a Municipal Committee proposes to sell a portion of a street in front of a person's shop for the purpose of building shops and the person has not merely a frontage but it is a frontage of more than usual value because his is the first shop in the mandi which persons coming from the station towards the main gate of the mandi would have to pass and his shop would be shut out by the buildings proposed to be erected he is entitled to sue the Municipality for an injunction restraining them from selling the proposed land. 152 Ind. Cas. 850 (1), relied on.

In such a suit the damages likely to be suffered by the plaintiff are not in the nature of things, capable of accurate assessment and a mere general statement made by the plaintiff in his evidence that the value of his houses has been reduced by Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 3,000 cannot be taken as being equivalent to an accurate estimate by him of the damages which he would suffer.

The public have right to use every part of the public street, not merely the metalled portion in the centre. 152 Ind. Cas. 850 (1), relied on.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated July 15, 1938.

Mr. Mela Ram Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Vishnu Dutt, for the Respondent.

Judgment—There is within the jurisdiction of the Municipality of Jagraon a mandi known as Andersongunj. It appears to be rectangular in shape and the plaintiff-appellant has a shop in the north-eastern corner of it. On the eastern side of the Gunj, there is a strip of land 66 feet wide which is shown in the revenue papers as a public thoroughfare. Running down the length of this there is a strip of metalled road eight feet wide. It is not in the exact centre but 20 feet from the buildings on the west and 38 feet from the building on the east, that is the plaintiff's shop. The defendants, the Municipal Committee of Jagraon, proposed to sell a portion of this street immediately opposite the plaintiff's shop and 14 feet away from it extending up to the metalled road for the purpose of building shops. The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining them from doing so. His suit was decreed by the learned trial Judge but dismissed on appeal by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff has appealed against that decision. It is contended for the defendants-respondents that the Municipal Committee being the owners of this site have every right to sell it. It is further contended that even if the site only vests in them as a public street under the Municipal Act, they still have the power to sell any portion of it under s. 169 (g) of the Act as now amended.

A good deal of stress was laid by the plaintiff on a judgment reported in Municipal Committee, Delhi v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1), in which in a similar case, the rights of the Municipal Committee were clearly defined. It was there laid down, amongst other principles, that the right to close a street under s. 169 (d) did not include a right to dispose of a part of that street for a purpose such as the present. The subsequent amendment however of the section embodied in cl. (g) has altered the law as far as this finding of the Judges in Municipal Committee, Delhi v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1), was concerned. But there is still a very important proviso left which limits the power of the Municipality to sell part of an existing street and that is the proviso that it must no longer be required as a public street. This is a proviso of considerable importance. The Municipal Committee cannot act arbitrarily and prejudice the rights of the public in disposing of a part of the public street on the mere pretext, without any substance behind it, that it is no longer wanted as a public street. Where by doing so they will cause damage to the vested interests of members of the public, the burden lies heavily upon the Municipality to prove that in fact the portion of land they purpose to dispose of is no longer required as a public street. This burden is not made any lighter when the facts are as in the present case, that the whole area has been used for years as an important public thoroughfare leading from the direction of the Railway Station to one of the main gates of the mandi situate on the eastern side of the mandi and the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-interest have had a frontage on that wide street for a considerable period. It was laid down in Municipal Committee, Delhi v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1) that

"for owners of houses abutting on a public highway, the question of frontage means a great deal, and if anything is done by those in whom the highway vests, which interferes with the rights of the owners with regard to the highway, and which tends to diminish the comforts of the occupants of the houses, the owners have an actionable claim against them."

This principle is not affected by the subsequent amendment of the Act, and in the present case not merely has the plaintiff got a frontage but it is a frontage of more than usual value because his is the first shop in the mandi which persons coming from the station towards the main gate of the mandi would have to pass. As he uses that frontage for the purpose of retail-sale of goods, it is naturally of very great importance to him that the site of his shop by persons coming to the mandi from the station should not be shut out by the buildings which are proposed to be erected immediately in front of his shop. It seems to me therefore that in this case the Municipal Committee had a very heavy burden to discharge in order to prove that they were justified by the language of the section in taking a part of this public thoroughfare and selling it to private persons for building shops. They had to prove clearly that it was no longer required as a public street. Prima facie, it would not be easy for them to prove this as it was clearly not only a public highway, but an important public highway. The only way they could show it would be by proving that the street as it existed was too wide. This is a very difficult proposition for them to establish when persons having shops abutting on the street, as it was originally laid out, have acquired a right of easement thereto.

Counsel for the defendants had relied upon another Division Bench judgment of this Court reported in Jai Narain v. Municipal Committee, Delhi (2). In that case the facts were somewhat different as it was not a question of the erection of new buildings but the leasing out of a platform which had been in the street for a number of years. In view of the facts that the platform had been there for many years and that there were other platforms of a similar nature in that street, it is to be presumed that that was sufficient evidence that portion of the street which was covered by the platform proposed to be leased out was no longer required as a public street.

Counsel for the defendant in this case has placed some reliance on what he considers to be admissions by the plaintiff. One is Ex. D-10 which refers to the sale of similar land to the north of the mandi. But here Counsel has not been able to show any evidence that the land which was sold was actually a part of a public highway and was not in the private ownership of the District Board. The other is a statement made by the body of sahukars of the mandi generally in which they admitted that the width of 14 feet was sufficient for the phirni or circular road which was to be made round the mandi outside it. Counsel contends that the learned District Judge has come to a finding of fact that in view of this admission a width of 14 feet in front of the plaintiff's shop has been proved to be sufficient for his comfort and that this is a question of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. Unfortunately, it is impossible to find out from the language used by the learned District Judge exactly what his finding is. The sentence runs:

"It follows that a width of 14 feet was not considered adequate for a road, but that it was understood that this width which is now called a phirni was to be used as a street or road."

I must frankly confess that this sentence is unintelligible to me as it stands. Counsel for the defendants has suggested that the word "adequate" should have been "inadequate." There is a certain amount of force in this contention because that would seem to follow from the previous discussion. But on the other hand, if the learned District Judge had meant to say "inadequate" the conjunction following the word

"road" would have been "and" and not "but." It is very difficult therefore to try and guess what question of fact the learned District Judge was arriving at. But in any case it appears to me that even if he had arrived at a finding of fact that 14 feet had been admitted by the sahukars as sufficient for a circular road, that finding was irrelevant for the decision of the case. There is no similarity between the eastern side of the mandi where there was already a thoroughfare and the other three sides where this 14 feet phirni was to be carved out of land which was not at that time a public thoroughfare. The admission of the sahukars could only be taken to mean that 14 feet was sufficient as a minimum; it could not be taken to mean that on that side of the mandi where the street was already more than 14 feet wide it had to be cut down to 14 feet.

I am of opinion that in this case the defendants have not discharged the burden of proving that the land proposed to be sold was in fact no longer required as a public street. Prima facie, it was a part of the public street and as pointed out in Municipal Committee, Delhi v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1), the public have a right to use every part of the public street, not merely the metalled portion in the centre. That being so, it seems to me that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against the Municipal Committee, and has established his case. It has also been contended by the Counsel for the defendants that an injunction should not be granted because this is a case in which damages can be assessed. I find myself unable to accept this contention. It is true that the plaintiff in his evidence made a general statement that the value of his houses has been reduced by Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 3,000, but this cannot be taken as being equivalent to an accurate estimate by him of the damage which he would suffer which in the nature of things would not be capable of accurate assessment. I therefore accept the appeal against the decision of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the learned trial Judge granting the injunction sued for with costs against the defendants.

FAYAZ MOHAMMAD—PLAINTIFF—

versus

SARDAR KHAN—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT

Tort—Malicious prosecution—Damages, suit for—Defendant making report to Police about rioting—Police after investigation prosecuting plaintiff—Subsequent acquittal—No proof that report was false and based on enmity—Defendant held not liable for damages.

Where, in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution it is found that the defendant himself had filed no complaint in Court against the plaintiff, but had merely entered a report with the Police for rioting etc., and the Police, after due investigation and making sure that the report of the defendant was correct, had filed the chalan against the plaintiff, who, after judicial inquiry, was acquitted and the plaintiff has not proved that the report of the defendant was false and based on enmity, and to cause injury to the plaintiff no responsibility for damages lies on the defendant. 125 Ind. Cas. 667 (1), relied on.

A. against the judgment of the Sub-Judge, Bhopal.

Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Nasiruddin, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This first appeal is filed by Fayaz Mohammad plaintiff-appellant against the judgment of the Sub-Judge, Bhopal. The said plaintiff filed a suit in the lower Court, against Sardar Khan defendant, for the recovery of Rs. 700 as damages for malicious prosecution, and declared that on January 3, 1934 the defendant entered a report at the Kotwali, Bhopal, accusing Kareemullah, Yaqoob Ali etc., of rioting, causing grievous hurt etc., and out of enmity, and without reasonable cause, quite falsely, and contrary to facts, added the plaintiff's name also to the names of the accused, and later the plaintiff was produced in the Court as an accused, and the defendant attempted to have the plaintiff convicted. On February 5, 1934 the defendant got the Police to present a chalan against the plaintiff on the same groundless report, which was based on enmity, under ss. 139 and 318, Bhopal Penal Code, in the Court of the District Magistrate, Bhopal which was transferred to the Court of the Special Magistrate, and after over one and a half year's continuous struggle and worry, the said charge was adjudged false and groundless and the plaintiff was declared innocent and acquitted on September 30, 1935. A warrant of arrest was issued against the plaintiff, who had to remain in custody till some arrangement could be made about furnishing security, and after that he had to be present in Court for 56 hearings, owing to which the plaintiff received much physical and spiritual injury, and suffered great indignity, and had to bear a lot of expenses to get himself acquitted. Keeping in view the status of the defendant, a suit for the recovery of only Rs. 700 as damages is being filed, and it is prayed that a decree for the said amount be passed after inquiry.

The defendant, in his written statement declared that the criminal complaint, which the defendant had filed against the plaintiff, and on which the Police had presented a chalan, was quite true, but the plaintiff was acquitted through sheer good luck. The defendant had no grudge or enmity against the plaintiff, nor did the defendant file the complaint with the Police to cause injury to the plaintiff; the defendant had reported the true incident which had occurred. The plaintiff has now filed owing to enmity this suit which deserves to be dismissed.

The lower Court framed two issues, and after enquiry, dismissed the plaintiff's suit, against which the appeal is filed.

The arguments of the Vakils for the parties were heard, and the record was inspected. It is apparent that the defendant himself had filed no complaint in Court against the plaintiff, he had rather entered a report with the Police for rioting etc., and the Police, after due investigation and making sure that the report of the defendant was correct, had filed the chalan against the plaintiff, who, after judicial inquiry, was acquitted. Under the circumstances, no responsibility for damages lies on the defendant.

In Nagendra Nath Ray v. Basanta Das (1) it was decided as follows :

"If defendant gives correct information to Police, and the Police, without further interference, think fit to prosecute plaintiff, defendant is not responsible in damages."

The plaintiff-appellant could not prove at all that the defendant-respondent had entered the report in Police, which was false and based on enmity, and to cause injury to the plaintiff-appellant. Under these circumstances, this appeal, in my opinion, cannot be entertained, and is, therefore, rejected and the judgment of the lower Court is upheld. The plaintiff-appellant shall bear the costs of the defendant-respondent.

Criminal Revision No. 747 of 1939

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 366, 376, 498—Offence under ss. 366 and 376 not established—Conviction under s. 498, propriety of.

A person who is prosecuted under ss. 366 and 376, I. P. O., cannot be held to be guilty of having committed an offence under s. 498, I. P. O., if the offences with which he was charged are not established. Empress of India v. Kallu (1), Tara Prasad Laha v. Emperor (2), Chemon Garo v. Emperor (3), 145 Ind. Cas. 922 (4) and Bangaru Asari v. Emperor (5), relied on.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Pilibhit, dated June 27, 1939.

Mr. Waheed Ahmad Khan, for the Applicant.

The Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is a revision application by one Haider Ali against his conviction under s. 498, I. P. O. The prosecution story was that one Mst. Kundania was the wife of Lachhman and she had been abducted by the accused with the intention of committing rape on her. The prosecution of the accused was started under s. 366 and 376, I. P. O. The learned trial Magistrate came to the conclusion that these charges were not established. He however held that the accused had committed an offence under s. 498, I. P. O., and therefore convicted him of the same and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year. The accused preferred an appeal against his conviction and sentence which was unsuccessful. He has now come up in revision to this Court. The question taken up by learned Counsel appearing for the applicant is purely legal. It has been contended that a person who is prosecuted under ss. 366 and 376, I. P. O., cannot be held to be guilty of having committed an offence under s. 498, I. P. O., if the offences with which he was charged are not established. On a consideration of this question I am of opinion that the contention of learned Counsel for the applicant is correct and must therefore prevail.

There is a string of authorities which are in favour of the applicant's contention. The first case on the point is Empress of India v. Kallu (1). The next case on the point is a Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court: Tara Prasad Laha v. Emperor (2). Their Lordships held that the word "complaint" referred to in s. 199, Criminal P. O., means a "complaint" as defined by s. 4 cl. (h) of the Code. In the case before me there was no complaint by the complainant as defined in the Criminal P. O. In Chemon Garo v. Emperor (3), it was held that where an accused person was sent up for trial under s. 376, I. P. O., he could not be convicted for adultery because there was no complaint of an offence of adultery against the accused and the mere fact that the husband had appeared as a witness for the prosecution did not alter the matter. The next case to which I wish to refer is Emperor v. Jagdamba Prasad (4). In this case the learned Judge who decided it has referred to various rulings on the subject and after a consideration he came to the conclusion that where an accused was tried on a charge under s. 366, I. P. O., he could not be convicted of an offence under s. 498 of the Code in the absence of a complaint made by the husband under that section and that the fact that the husband appeared and gave evidence for the prosecution at the trial under s. 366-A could not take the place of a complaint by the husband which is necessary. The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in Bangaru Asari v. Emperor (5). My view therefore is that the conviction of the accused applicant is bad. The result therefore is that this revision application is allowed, the conviction and sentence of the accused are set aside and he is acquitted. He is on bail. He need not surrender and his bail bonds stand discharged.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 41 of 1936

FAZL ALI AND MANOHAR LALL, JJ.
COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA

versus

Maharajadhiraj Kumar VISHESHWAR
SINGH—ASSEESSEE

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 4, 66—Permanent lease granted—Salami received by lessor once for all, whether capital receipt or income—Case sent back to Commissioner—Duty of Commissioner and procedure to be followed—Lease—Construction—Lease held permanent one.

Per Fazl Ali, J.—Income in the Income Tax Act connotes a periodical monetary return, coming in with some sort of regularity or expected regularity from definite sources. The premium or salami which is paid once for all and is not recurring payment, hardly satisfies this test. If the premium represents the whole or part of the price of the land it cannot be income. [p. 693, col. 2.]

Per Manohar Lall, J.—It would be impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami can in no case be taxable but the question would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. 126 Ind. Cas. 193 (21), relied on. [p. 697, col. 1.]

Where a certain amount was received by a lessor as salami once for all at the time of granting a permanent lease:

Held, that the salami must be treated as capital receipt and not as income.

[Case-law reviewed.]

When the case went back to the Commissioner he sent up a re-statement of the case, but without hearing the assessee. The High Court was compelled to send the case back to the Commissioner once again in order that the case might be re-stated with such further finding of fact as the Commissioner may consider necessary after hearing the assessee. The matter then went back to another Commissioner, who instead of re-stating the case, as he was ordered to do, stated that he had no power within s. 66 (4), Income Tax Act to vary an opinion given under s. 66 (2) if no new facts were admitted.

Held, that the Commissioner was in duty bound to carry out the order of the High Court. He should have re-heard the parties, admitted such further evidence as he considered relevant on the point at issue and re-stated the case with his opinion thereon. It was also open to the Commissioner to make a submission that the High Court should decide the case not upon the case which he was re-stating (as ordered) but upon the finding of fact already arrived at by the previous Commissioner. [p. 698, col. 2.]

A lease stated that the lands had been settled with the lessee to enable him to build a gola house and a platform for rice mill. The settlement was made for an indefinite (bemeyadi) period and it provided that neither the lessee nor his heirs and representatives would put forward any plea or objection with regard to the payment of rent. It was further provided that in the event of default of two consecutive instalments, the lessor or his heirs and representatives, would have the power to realize the arrear rent with interest thereon and dispossess the lessee. The lessee bound himself not to sell the residential right to anyone without a reference to the landlord or his heirs and representatives and without obtaining his or their permission in writing:

Held, that the lease was intended to be a permanent one. 39 Ind. Cas. 658 (1), explained, 77 Ind. Cas. 32 (3) and 133 Ind. Cas. 732 (4), relied on. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Misc. Judi. Case reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, dated July 14, 1936.

Mr. S. M. Gupta, for the Income-tax Department.

Dr. Sir Sultan Ahmad, Messrs. Murari Prasad, S. P. Srivastava, G. Misir and Prem Lall, for the Assessee.

Fazl Ali, J.—The question to be decided in this reference is whether a sum of Rs. 1,800 received by the assessee as salami for the settlement of certain lands during the years of assessment is taxable. The lands settled are $4\frac{1}{2}$ bighas in area, and the terms of the settlement are to be found in a kabuliyat which is printed at p. 16 of the paper book. Under this kabuliyat the settlement was made for an indefinite (bemeyadi) period with effect from the beginning of 1340 F. S. and it was provided that rent was payable by the lessee year after year, and "neither the lessee nor his heirs and representatives shall put forward any plea or objection with regard to the payment thereof."

It was further provided that in the event of default of two consecutive instalments, "the lessor or his heirs and representatives, shall have the power to realize the arrear rent with interest thereon and dispossess the lessee by taking proceedings in Court," and that "the landlord or his heirs and representatives shall have the power to enhance the rent if at any time the area of the land, as specified in the lease, is on measurement found increased."

Lastly the lessee bound himself not to sell the residential right to anyone without a reference to the landlord or his heirs and representatives and without obtaining his or their permission in writing. The lease clearly stated that the lands had been settled with the lessee to enable him to build a gola house and a platform for rice mill. The first question which arose upon the terms of this lease was whether the lease was a permanent one or it created a mere tenancy-at-will or a tenancy from year to year. The learned Commissioner of Income-tax relying upon the decision of this Court in Parshan Kuer v. Tulsi Kuer (1), held that the lease was not a permanent one. That case however, is no authority for the proposition that a bemeyadi patta can in no circumstances be regarded as a permanent lease and it has been fully explained in two subsequent cases, viz. Kangali Charan v. Surja Narain (2) and Forbes v. Hanuman Bhagat (3). In the last-mentioned case where the lessee had obtained settlement of a parcel of land under a bemeyadi lease for the purpose of erecting a gola on the demised land, it was held that the lease was intended to be a permanent one and not from year to year. In Janki Nath Roy v. Dina Nath Kundu (4), the Privy Council held a bemeyadi patta to be a permanent lease in the following circumstances: the lease recited that the executant was already in possession of the premises (a hat, bazar bandar and ghat) under a meadi settlement, that his request for a bemeyadi settlement had been granted by the executee on receipt of a premium and on an annual rent being fixed, (such premium being a substantial sum and higher than previously), that the executant had been called upon to execute a kabuliyat whereupon he was executing the present bemeyadi kabuliyat and promising to abide by the terms as set forth therein. Among the terms was one for an enhancement of rent in specified circumstances and another forbidding bemeyadi settlements by the lessee whereas other imposed restrictions on the powers of the lessee to dig tanks and erect masonry structures and also provided for the lessor assuming khas possession in certain circumstances.

In my opinion the fact that the lands in the present case were let out for the purpose of enabling the lessee to build a gola and a platform for a rice mill strongly suggests that the lease was intended to be a permanent one. This inference is supported by two other facts, viz., (1) that no term was fixed in the lease and (2) provision was made for certain rights being exercised not only by the lessor and the lessee but by their heirs and legal representatives. It is abundantly clear on reading the lease that it was to continue as long as the terms settled between the parties were carried out by the lessee and his heirs or legal representatives, and this shows that the lease was intended to be a permanent one. Besides, the settlement was described as a mukarrari settlement in the landlord's own chalan, a contemporaneous document, to which reference has been made by the Commissioner of Income-tax as evidencing the payment of the salami of Rs. 1,800.

The next question to be determined is whether this salami is to be treated as capital receipt or as income. It may be stated here that this is not the first time that this case has come up before this Court. There was an earlier reference to this Court by another learned Commissioner of Income-tax, and in that reference the main argument advanced by him in favour of the view that the salami was taxable, was that the lease was not a permanent one but for a period of three years only. It was subsequently discovered that the learned Commissioner of Income-tax had by mistake overlooked the lease under which the salami was received and had proceeded to refer to another lease with which we are not at all concerned in this case. The case was then sent back to the Commissioner and in the second reference also the learned Commissioner justified the taxation of salami on the ground that the lease was not a permanent one. The implication of the argument clearly was that if the lease was a permanent one, there was room for holding that the salami was a capital receipt and not income. Before us however learned Counsel for the Income-tax Department has adopted a bolder line of argument and contends that even if the lease is held to be permanent, the sum of Rs. 1,800 received as salami must be treated as income and not as capital receipt and he relies, in support of this contention, on the following observations made by Mookerjee, Ag. C. J. in Birendra Kishor v. Secretary of State (5), at p. 780 :

"When a new tenancy is created in respect of unoccupied wasteland or lands which had been abandoned by a previous tenant, the premium represents essentially the capitalized value of a portion of the rent. We are not unmindful that in Dinanath Mookerjee v. Debnath Mullick (6), it was ruled that the money payable by a lessee in consideration of a lease granted, whether called nazar or salami, cannot be looked upon as rent, but is simply a debt due upon a contract and is recoverable by a suit in a Small Cause Court on the money bond executed in that behalf by the tenant in favour of his landlord. It is not necessary to hold that such salami is rent within the meaning of the definition given in the Beng. Ten. Act or the T. P. Act. The expression used in the Income-Tax Act, is 'rent or revenue,' and this is obviously wider than rent as defined in the Beng. Ten. Act or the T. P. Act. There can be little doubt that when a lease is granted, the amount fixed for periodical payment is not independent of the amount paid in a lump sum as premium. The capitalized value of the sum periodically payable taken along with the premium constitutes in the aggregate the consideration for the grant..... From this point of view, we must hold that the premium paid for the settlement of waste lands or abandoned holdings may reasonably be regarded as 'rent or revenue' derived from land, within the meaning of that expression as used in the definition of 'agricultural income' in s. 2 (1)(a)."

The view put forward by Mookerjee, Ag. C. J., was however, not accepted by this Court in Raja Shiva Prasad Singh v. Emperor (7). In that case the question was, whether a sum of money received by the assessee by way of salami or premium for granting a mining lease was taxable. Sir Dawson Miller who delivered the judgment in the case dealt with the question as follows:

"There is a vast difference between a sum paid once for all for the lease of mineral rights and a rent or royalty paid annually to the lessor. The lessor in this case who holds an unfettered right of disposal would appear, in granting these leases, to have had two objects in view which are distinguishable. In so far as rent and royalty are reserved, he is founding an annual increment to the income of the Raj for himself and his successors, but with regard to salami it is the price he demands for parting with his direct enjoyment of the property by himself and his successors for a period of 999 years. He is parting with the capital to persons who, whilst not purchasers of the fee simple, are undoubtedly purchasers of a large interest therein. The purchase price is presumably not based upon the estimated outturn but in exchange for the long term transferred. Possibly it may be objected that the distinction is one of degree rather than of kind, recurring payments at short periods being treated as income and a single payment of a similar kind covering a long period being treated as capital, but after all this is a distinction acknowledged in s. 4 of the Act itself, and, as has been observed, the Income Tax Acts are not cast upon absolutely logical lines. Nor does there appear to be any reason why we should extend the exception made in the case of rent and royalty to the case of a non-recurring payment made to cover a long period."

In my opinion, these observations fully apply to the present case. If the document with which we are concerned in the present case is a permanent lease, then there can be no doubt that the lessor has by this document permanently parted "with the direct enjoyment of the property by himself and his successors," and the lessee though he is not a purchaser out and out of the entire interest in the land was undoubtedly purchaser of a large interest therein. In my opinion, there is no difference in principle between the salami realized under the present lease and the salami realized on a lease for 999 years in regard to mineral rights. In both cases the real question is whether the salami or premium represents the price for parting with the land, or it is only advance rent. If it can be argued that the salami is in fact advance rent, I think that it will be equally plausible to say that rent is to be regarded as "deferred price" of the land. In my opinion there is vital distinction between a single payment made at the time of the settlement of the land and recurring payments made during the period of its enjoyment by the lessee. The distinction is clearly recognized in s. 105, T. P. Act, which defines both premium and rent. In this section, a lease of immovable property is defined as "a transfer of a right to enjoy such property" and it is clearly stated that "the price is called the premium and the money, share, service or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent." It is obvious that if the premium represents the whole or part of the price of the land it cannot be income. As pointed out by Sir George Lowndes in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Messrs. Shaw, Wallace and Co. (8) income in the Income Tax Act connotes a periodical monetary return, coming in with some sort of regularity or expected regularity from definite sources. The premium or salami which is paid once for all and is not recurring payment, hardly satisfies this test. I concede that in some cases where the rent is ridiculously low and the premium abnormally high, it may be possible to argue that the premium includes advance rent, but it has not been suggested anywhere that this is one of such cases. In my opinion, upon the facts stated by the learned Commissioner of Income-tax the sum of Rs. 1,800 received in this case must be treated as capital receipt and not as income. I would therefore answer the question pronounced by the learned Commissioner in the negative. The assessee will be entitled to a hearing fee of ten gold mohurs.

Manohar Lall, J.—I have come to the same conclusion. I have no difficulty whatsoever in construing the kabuliyats printed at pp. 16 and 18 of the paper-book. The terms of these kabuliyats have a close resemblance to the kabuliyat construed in Forbes v. Hanuman Bhagat (3). By these kabuliyats a settlement was made for erecting a gola house and for putting a platform for the rice mill given in lease to the lessee by the assessee by another document. The settlement was for an indefinite period and was expressly made descendible to the heirs and representatives of the lessee. The usual covenant against alienation is also to be found obviously in the interest of the lessor so that he may not be compelled to recognize an undesirable tenant. In such circumstances the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Janki Nath Roy v. Dina Nath Kundu (4) assists in coming to a decision. I hold in agreement with my learned brother that the terms of these kabuliyats coupled with the description thereof given in the contemporaneous document, namely the chalan of September 14, 1932, point to the clear conclusion that the settlement was in perpetuity. By the settlement evidenced by these kabuliyats the assessee admittedly received a sum of Rs. 1,800 by way of salami or premium and also secured to himself a fixed annual income calculated at the rate of Rs. 100 a bigha. The question which arises for consideration is whether the amount of Rs. 1,800 received by the assessee as the result of these transactions for a permanent settlement attracts income-tax. I propose in the first instance to examine some cases which are of assistance in order to decide how this question is to be approached, bearing in mind that income-tax, as has been stated over and over again, is a tax on income, it does not tax capital: see Attorney General v. London County Council (9) at p. 293. In the very recent case reported in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. British Salmson Aero Engines, Ltd. (10) the Master of the Rolls pointed out the difficulty which arises in a large number of cases like the present, which fall upon the borderline. At p. 43* he makes this observation:

"Indeed, in many cases it is almost true to say that the spin of a coin would decide the matter almost as satisfactorily as an attempt to find reasons, but that class of question is a notorious one, and has been so for many years."

As I stated before the only question which has to be decided in the present case is whether the amount of Rs. 1,800 which was admittedly received by the assessee is an income for the purpose of the Income Tax Act. The term income, as has been often pointed out, has not been defined in the Indian Act. It is always a matter of difficulty and embarrassment to draw a line between what is a capital receipt and what is a revenue receipt, but there is well known distinction and a line must be drawn clearly and firmly.

The case already referred to Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. British Salmson Aero Engines, Ltd. (10), is useful and will be of assistance in deciding the present case. In that case the assessee by a certain agreement granted to the licensees an exclusive right for a period of ten years to construct, use and sell in a certain territory Salmson aero engines. The consideration for the licence was that the licensees were to pay a fixed sum of £25,000 payable in three instalments and in addition to these payments and as royalty a sum of £2,500 and a like sum each twelve months during the following nine years. The question which required consideration was whether any of these sums, namely the fixed amount paid in a lump sum in three instalments and the fixed sum to be paid annually for nine years, were assessable to income-tax—the Crown contending that all these payments were income and the assessee insisting, on the contrary that all these payments were in the nature of capital receipts. The Master of the Rolls approached the subject in this way. He pointed out that in the agreement there was "a fundamental difference in the nature of the two classes of sums in this sense, that the former class starts off by being a lump sum payment, definite and fixed, which is then to be payable by instalments. The other class is not of that description; no lump sum payment is referred to; it is on the face of it, nothing but an undertaking to pay yearly sums as royalty. Speaking quite apart from any close examination of authority, and simply regarding the distinction between those two things, it would appear upon the face of it that, with regard to the latter class, the parties are creating an obligation as between themselves which they choose to describe as a royalty payable each year at a fixed rate."

He then considers the argument that it is illegitimate to look outside the terms of the contract under which the licence was granted and observes:

"I do not wish to lay down any such proposition. What has to be ascertained in these cases is the true nature of a payment, that is to say, the true nature from an accountancy point of view, and that is a question of fact. I do not wish to say anything which will have the effect of circumscribing the matters which may properly be looked into in answering that question of fact."

I now give another quotation from p. 43*: "It seems to me that in the case of patents, as in the case of any other matters, the fundamental question remains in respect to any particular payment: is it capital or is it income? and that question has to be decided, as it has to be decided in reference to other subject-matters, upon the particular facts of each case, including in those facts the contractual relationship between the parties. It has been said that the question is one of fact and it is when one gets to the bottom of it, an accountancy question. In saying that it is a question of fact, one does not mean that, in deciding it, questions of law may not have to be discussed and decided. For example, the construction of a contract may be one of the elements which must be taken into consideration in deciding that question; there may be cases where the construction of the contract is of itself the really decisive matter in answering the question. In this case the question of the contract and the terms of the contract is of cardinal importance. . . .

Gillat and Watts v. Colquhoun (11) was a converse case but some observations of Grove, J., are relevant. In that case the question was as to the annual expenditure which should be allowed to an assessee who had taken a lease after paying £34,000 as a premium with a liability to pay a ground rent of £250 a year, the lease being for 20 years. Grove, J., makes this observation at p. 79* :

"But in this case the lessee pays a ground rent of £250 a year and he paid £34,000 as a premium for the lease. The lease has virtually put him almost in the position of a free holder with a quit rent, though not quite that, because it is terminable at a certain time, but the rent is swallowed up, or what we may call the rent is swallowed up in the premium, leaving really a very small rent, much less than what would be real rent of the premises if they were let from year to year."

At the bottom of that page he states :

"I thought the fair mode would be taking the premium into consideration and the ground rent to take what an actuary would put as the fair rent for that lease for the time over which that lease extended; that is supposing a party had taken the lease upon an annual rent, and had paid no premium, and the ground rent was, so to speak, absorbed in the rack-rent or the annual rent of the premises. I still adhere to that idea as the fair mode of compensation."

He puts the question to be decided at p. 80* thus :

"Therefore we have virtually got to this question. Is that the proper sum to be deducted from the income-tax, or is whatever fancy price the party pays for a speculative purchase to be deducted? I think the former of these two is the proper alternative, that is to say, the one insisted upon by the Crown in this case. The other would lead to extreme difficulty, and it would lead possibly to a great deal of fraud because fictitious prices would be given; £50,000 would be handed over for a lease, and £20,000 out of that would be returned the next day, or some arrangement of that sort would be made, and the price paid would afford no reasonable criterion for saying what annual deduction ought to be made from the annual profits or gains."

He finally adopts the test at p. 82* that "the real and proper basis of calculation is the trade value or rent of these premises paid by persons who would take these premises as they would take any other premises which are in the market or for sale, a willing lessee and a willing lessor, the one anxious to make the most of his premises, and the other anxious to get the lease, who would settle the bargain upon fair terms, that is the proper criterion."

I take this case as deciding that such questions are really questions of fact which have to be determined by taking into consideration all the circumstances. Smith, J., at the end of his observations states :

"It also seems to me that this case, as my brother Grove says, resolves itself into a question of fact and not of law."

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Adam (12), dealt with a situation where the assessee had obtained a right to deposit soil on a definite area of land at a certain rate for a period of eight years by agreeing to pay to the owner a sum of £3,200 payable in two instalments of £200 each at the end of every six months each year. The question was whether the assessee was entitled to deduct from his assessable income of a sum of £400 which he had paid in the year under consideration. The Lord President pointed out that in a question of this sort both form and substance must be considered and he pointedly referred to the fact that £3,200 and the instalments of £200 were payable whether the quantities referred to in the contract were actually deposited or not and came to the conclusion that in considering this difficult question, which was on the border line, his opinion on the whole was that the price of £3,200 whether paid in instalments or in a lump sum did not alter the character of the price as a capital outlay and that the assessee could not be entitled to say that the instalments were paid out in each year for the purpose of earning the profits of that year, in any other sense than it would be true to say that any capital outlay is made for the purpose of earning profits of the years which follow its expenditure. Lord Sands took the same view and agreed that in a matter of this kind one cannot altogether ignore the form because

"when parties contract in certain forms different results may flow according to the form of the contract however little difference there may be in substance."

Lord Blackburn took a different view and gave a dissenting opinion. He makes some pertinent observations at p. 43* :

"If the site has been depreciated in value by the deposits laid upon it, it may very well be that the landowner was fully justified in attributing each and all of the payments to be made to him as capital payments. But if the converse is the case and the value of the land remains unaltered, or possibly has appreciated for building purposes, it would hardly appear to be a good answer to a claim against him for income-tax on the sums of £400 received annually, to refer to the agreement as evidence that he had received them as capital payments and not as fruits of his land."

This case was recently considered in Race Horse Betting Control Board v. Wild (1927) 11 Tax Cas. 723 (13), is the well-known case of Codstantinesco v. Rex (14). The question there was as to the assessability of certain sums received by the patentee as the result of an award made in his favour by the Royal Commission on Awards to Inventors. The award was made after the user of the patent had taken place and the claim which had been settled was a claim by the assessee for successive uses of the invention. Lord Cave in giving his opinion in the House of Lords stated as one of the facts in the case that the corpus of the patent was not taken away from the assessee and having regard to a number of facts he stated:

"In view of all the facts I am satisfied that the sum awarded is to be treated as profits or gains, and annual profits or gains, within the meaning of the Income Tax Act."

Rowlatt, J., who decided the case in the first instance and whose view was upheld by the Appellate Court and House of Lords gives an apposite illustration at p. 740*. Suppose a patentee demands £25,000 as a sum down and tells the licensee "use it as much as you like for a definite time or for the whole length of the patent." In such a case the decision was:

"That will clearly be a lump sum. I would not be parting with the patent...but it would be clearly a capital sum in my judgment."

The Master of the Rolls at p. 743* notices one or two cases where a capital sum is reached by an estimate derived from income, e. g., so many years' purchase for a piece of land. I will make reference to only one more case; it is needless to refer to the very large number of cases which are to be found in the English Reports in deciding whether the annual payment concerned in this case was in the nature of a capital payment or a capital receipt or was in the nature of revenue payment or revenue receipt. For instances see the Annuity cases beginning from Foley v. Fletcher (15), the Tikari case which went up to the Privy Council from this Court Commissioner of Income- tax v. Gopal Saran Narain Singh (16), and Gopaal Saran Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. (17) the Railway cases of which the leading type is Scoble's case (18) and lastly Minister of National Revenue v. Catherine Spooner (19) sale of land for cash and 10 per cent. mineral oil was decided as a question of fact.

The case which I wanted to refer was the case in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Thomas and Sons, Ltd. (20) a case decided in July 1938, by the Court of Sessions Scotland. The facts of the case were that the assessee company lent a sum of money to an Indian company under an agreement which provided that interest was to be paid at 3 per cent. per annum and that on repayment of the principal sum or any part thereof there should also be paid a premium varying with the date of re-payment. The premiums prescribed by the agreement for each of the ten years of the currency of the loan are set out in the agreement, the first of them is at the rate of 2 per cent.; the second is at 4 per cent.; in each of the next five years there is an increase of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in arithmetical progression and for the last three years of the ten the rate of increase per annum is 3 per cent. The full amount of the loan was ultimately repaid to the assessee together with the accrued interest and the premiums payable under the agreement. The contention raised by the assessee was that the premiums were part of the principal sums repaid and were capital payments. The Lord President decided the question as a question posed on the particular terms of the contract. In his opinion the premiums were in the nature of annual profits or gains being part of the consideration given by the borrowers for the use of the capital lent to them, and part of the creditor's share of the profit which the borrower is presumed to make from the use of the money and observed:

provides for a payment by way of premium which may be made in each year of the currency of the loan, and that, taken along with the stipulated interest, the effect of this provision is to give the lenders a return on their capital varying between 5 per cent. in the earlier years and something over 5½ per cent. in later years, a rate which can only be regarded as a reasonable return for the use of their capital and not as to any extent an accretion to it."

It was however pointed out that "the fact that the borrowers would, under the contract pay a premium only when they chose to make a capital payment does not necessarily have the effect of making the premium a capital payment any more than the lenders' waiver of their right to exact payment of interest each year as the effect of converting the payment of arrears of interest into a capital payment."

This case therefore may also be taken as deciding that each case ought to be decided by the facts and circumstances of that case. I respectfully agree with the observations made by Sir George Rankin in Gooptu Estates, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal (21) where that learned and distinguished Chief Justice pointed out that it would be impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami can in no case be taxable but that the question would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. I think that the above review of some leading cases suggests this as the proper way of approach while deciding a question like the present before us. But the learned Standing Counsel wanted to rely, in support of his argument that a salami like the present is always taxable as an income upon the observation to be found in Birendra Kishore v. Secretary of State (5) where it was stated that a salami is a capitalised rent. But this decision was expressly overruled by a later Full Bench decision of that very Court in Nawabzadi Meher Bano Khanum v. Secretary of State (22). Walmsley, J., who was one of the learned Judges in the case reported in Birendra Kishore v. Secretary of State (5) adhered to the opinion which he expressed in that case, but he was overruled by his other learned colleagues. In a case of this Court in Raja Shiva Prasad Singh v. Emperor (7) this decision of the Calcutta High Court was disapproved. The Patna case dealt with a lease of a coal field for 999 years for a fixed premium at an annual rent. The learned Chief Justice pointed out that the essence of the transaction was (1) that the salami was really in the nature of a premium paid for granting a lease, in other words it was the purchase price of a leasehold interest, and (2) that

"in so far as rent and royalty are reserved he the assessee is founding an annual increment to the income of the Raj for himself and his successors but with regard to salami it is the price he demands for parting with his direct enjoyment of the property by himself and his successors for a period of 999 years. He is parting with the capital to persons who, whilst not purchasers of the fee simple, are undoubtedly purchasers of a large interest therein. The purchase price is presumably not based upon the estimated outturn but is paid in exchange for long term transferred."

With respect I agree with these observations and would hold that this applies in proprio vigore to the salami obtained by the permanent settlement in the present case. I notice that the Commissioner, Mr. H. D. Chatterji, was inclined to take the same view in his order of reference to this Court which is to be found at pp. 9-10 of the original paper book dated July 24, 1936, but as he thought that the period of the settlement in the document which he was considering was for three years only he came to the conclusion that the amount of salami was merely a rent in advance. That Commissioner expressly referred to the case in 4 Pat. 73 (7), also reported in 1 I. T. O. 384 (7) and sought to distinguish it on the ground that in the present case the lease was for three years only and did not cover a long period.

The provisions of s. 105, T. P. Act, were referred to in the course of the argument before this Court in the Raja of Jharia's case (7). Section 105 distinctly defines a lease in this country as a transfer of a right to enjoy immovable property for a time or in perpetuity in consideration of a price paid or for a recurring rent or annual services or both; and also mentions that "the price is called the premium." The Legislature has thus drawn the very distinction between a price and a recurring payment which the eminent Judges in England have drawn while deciding cases under Income Tax Act. In the present case there is no suggestion that the term embodied in the contract evidenced by the chalan and the kabuliyats was not a fair expression of what the parties intended. It was argued however that the amount of premium will always bear some proportion to the amount of rent which is ultimately fixed and therefore it ought to be held that the premium should be taken in law as an advance payment of rent. I think the argument is fallacious; the premium or the price will always be fixed on taking into consideration the amount of rent the lessor will receive, and he may vary it as he does in practice with the amount of salami which he insists on receiving as a condition precedent for the parting with the land in favour of the lessee. It may be that in some cases the evidence might show that the parties fixed a particular salami as an advance payment of rent. In those cases I would not hesitate to treat that receipt as income but I am of opinion that it is not open to me to treat a premium in the nature of a salami as in this case as a revenue receipt. It should be noticed that the amount of Rs. 1,800 was received not because of the use of the land but before the land was put into use by the assessee. For these reasons I have no hesitation in holding that this amount of Rs. 1,800 was a capital receipt in the hands of the assessee as it was a capital payment on behalf of the lessee.

I wish to make a few observations regarding the procedure adopted by the Commissioner of Income-tax in sending up the present reference. It appears that the assessee has been considerably harassed by the manner in which the proceedings for a reference to this Court were conducted by the Commissioner. On November 16, 1937, when the reference came up for hearing before the learned Chief Justice and Agarwala, J., it was discovered that by some unfortunate slip there was an error in the statement of the case. The learned Judges in agreement with the submission on this point by the learned Advocates for the assessee and the Income-tax Department directed that the case should be sent back to the Commissioner in order that he may re-state the case with such finding of fact as may be considered necessary. The assessee was in no way to blame when the Commissioner gave his opinion regarding a document which admittedly referred to some other case. When the case went back to the Commissioner he sent up a re-statement of the case, but unfortunately without hearing the assessee. The re-stated case came up before this Court once again on November 28, 1938, when the order which we passed was that the Court was compelled to send the case back to the Commissioner once again in order that the case might be re-stated with such further finding of fact as the Commissioner may consider necessary after hearing the assessee. The matter then went back to another Commissioner, who instead of re-stating the case, as he was ordered by this Court to do, sent up a letter to this Court to the address of the Deputy Registrar (p. 2 of the supplementary paper-book). In that letter he says:

"I have not heard the party in regard to the opinion of the Commissioner. In any event I should not consider that I had power within s. 66 (4) to vary an opinion given under s. 66 (2) if no new facts were admitted."

In my opinion, the Commissioner was in duty bound to carry out the order of this Court. He should have re-heard the parties, admitted such further evidence as he considered relevant on the point at issue and re-stated the case with his opinion thereon. It was also open to the Commissioner to make a submission that the High Court should decide the case not upon the case which he was re-stating (as ordered) but upon the finding of fact already arrived at by the previous Commissioner on August 4, 1938. I do not agree with the view expressed by the Commissioner that the case did not stand at large, whether under s. 62 (2) or s. 66 (4). It was within the jurisdiction of the High Court to require the Commissioner to re-state the case which was not found satisfactory by this Court; and, if the Commissioner was dissatisfied with this order, he should have moved their Lordships of the Judicial Committee against the order passed by this Court. But so long as that order stood, this Court expected that it should be carried out to the very letter and in the spirit in which the order was worded. The result of the procedure adopted by the Commissioner has been that a third hearing in this Court has been inflicted upon the assessee. The further evidence which Sir Sultan Ahmed wanted us to consider was the affidavit of the Chief Manager of the Raj regarding which upon being supplied with a copy the standing Counsel agreed that this would amount to a decision on the construction of the document in favour of the assessee. I am doubtful however how this affidavit can be used to supply the meaning of the terms in this document which are in no way ambiguous, or to help us in construing the document. I have therefore ruled this affidavit out of my consideration entirely in coming to a conclusion as to the meaning to be attached to the word "bemeyadi" in the documents or kabuliyats which fall to be construed. For these reasons I agree that the answer to the question should be in the negative and I also agree to the order of costs proposed by my learned brother.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Application in Insolvency Suit No 88
of 1938

June 20, 1939

PANCKRIDGE, J.

In re IGUSTINS ROHDIRICK.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 7, 17, 60 (2)—S. 7, scope of—Orders to be passed under—Pension payable by Government, if property of insolvent within s. 17—Debtor arranging with creditor to pay portion of pension in liquidation of debts—Pension papers deposited with creditor—Insolvency of debtor—Insolvency Court, whether can direct creditor to return papers to insolvent—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 12—Arrangement between pensioner and his creditor to pay portion of pension to creditor and deposit pension papers with creditor—If falls under s. 12.

Although the jurisdiction given by s. 7, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, is extensive, only those orders can be made under the section which are necessary for the purpose of the insolvency, that is to say, for facilitating the distribution of the assets among the creditors.

A pension payable by Govt. is not 'property' of the insolvent within the meaning of s. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which vests in the Official Assignee on the making of the order of adjudication.

A pensioner arranged with his creditor to pay a portion of his pension monthly in liquidation of his debts and deposited the pension pay order and other pension papers with the creditor. On being adjudged insolvent the debtor applied to the Insolvency Court for an order directing the creditor to return pension papers to him:

Held, that the pension was not attachable and the Insolvency Court had therefore no power under s. 60 (2) to make an order for the return of the pension papers to the insolvent.

The language of the Pensions Act is very wide, and the transaction by which a pensioner arranges with his creditor to pay a certain portion of his pension month by month in liquidation of the sum previously advanced, and to deposit with the creditor his pension pay order and pension papers is clearly one of the class of transactions which s. 12, Pensions Act is enacted to prevent.

Mr. J. N. Majumder, for the Insolvent.

Mr. S. C. Roy, for Jagannath (Creditor).

Order.—This application raises an important question with regard to the position of creditors of Govt. pensioners who have the misfortune to be adjudicated insolvents. The facts are that the insolvent was adjudicated on his own petition on July 4, 1938. He was formerly an employee of the Posts and Telegraph Department of the Govt. of India, and on his retirement he was granted a monthly pension of Rs. 308 not after deduction of income-tax. Prior to his adjudication he had admittedly borrowed money from the opposite party, Jagannath Panday, in whose favour he had executed a promissory note for Rs. 5,000.

The insolvent states in his petition that he arranged with Jagannath Panday that he should pay a certain portion of his pension month by month in liquidation of the sum previously advanced, and should deposit with Jagannath his pension pay order and pension papers. Without these documents he is unable to draw his pension from Govt.

It appears that after the adjudication order the insolvent obtained the pension papers from Jagannath, who brought criminal proceedings against him. The criminal proceedings were abortive as the Magistrate held that the matter was one which should be dealt with by a Civil Court, and the papers were returned to Jagannath in whose custody they now are. The insolvent now applies that this Court should direct Jagannath to make over the pension papers to him. The application is made on notice to the Official Assignee. The insolvent contends that the arrangement under which he made over the papers to Jagannath is invalid and illegal because it was in contravention of s. 12, Pensions Act, 1871. Under s. 11 of that Act no pension granted by Govt. on account of past services, and no money due or to become due on account of any such pension or allowance, shall be liable to seizure, attachment, sequestration, by process of any Court in British India, at the instance of a creditor, for any demand against the pensioner, or in satisfaction of a decree or order of any such Court. Under s. 12, all assignments, agreements, orders, sales, and securities of every kind made by a person entitled to any pension, mentioned in s. 11, in respect of any money not payable at or before the making thereof, on account of any such pension, or for giving any future interest therein, are null and void. The insolvent argues that the pension papers in the hands of Jagannath are a security within the meaning of s. 12, that by reason of that section the deposit of them by way of security is null and void, and that he is entitled to the return of the papers.

On the other hand, Mr. S. C. Roy, who appears for Jagannath, draws a distinction between a security and a possessory lien, and argues that what he has obtained does not fall within the former category. I do not propose to decide this question, though my inclination would certainly be to agree with the view put forward by the insolvent. The language of the Pensions Act is very wide, and in my opinion the transaction with which I am dealing is clearly one of the class of transactions which s. 12 was enacted to prevent. The difficulty in making the order for which the insolvent asks is that I consider that it is beyond my power to make it in the exercise of the insolvency jurisdiction of the Court. Under s. 7, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the Court has power to decide all questions of priorities and all other questions whatsoever, whether of law or fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court, or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of the property in any such case. In my opinion, although the jurisdiction given by s. 7 is extensive, only those orders can be made under the section which are necessary for the purpose of the insolvency, that is to say, for facilitating the distribution of the assets among the creditors.

Mr. Majumdar for the insolvent does not disagree with this construction of the section, but he maintains that if I make the order asked for, it will put the Court into a position to make an order under another section of the Insolvency Act for the benefit of the creditors generally. Now, it is conceded that a pension payable by Govt. is not 'property' of the insolvent within the meaning of s. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which vests in the Official Assignee on the making of the order of adjudication. This is in accordance with s. 2 (e) of the Act, by which 'property' includes any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. It is however, said that in respect of a pension such as that payable to the insolvent an order can be made for the benefit of creditors under s. 60 (2) of the Act. Section 60 (1) deals with the pay and pensions of military and naval officers and of officers employed in the Civil Service of the Crown. Sub-section (2) is as follows:

"Where an insolvent is in the receipt of a salary or income other than as aforesaid, the Court may at any time after adjudication and from time to time, make such order as it thinks just for the payment to the Official Assignee, for distribution among the creditors, of so much of such salary or income as may be liable to attachment in execution of a decree or of any portion thereof."

I think it is clear that the insolvent's pension can properly be described as "income" within the meaning of sub-s. (2) but in my opinion an insuperable difficulty is created by the words "as may be liable to attachment in execution of a decree." Reference has been made to s. 53, Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which is now superseded by s. 51, Bankruptcy Act, 1914. In In re Saunders (1), the Court of Appeal had no doubt that under s. 53, Bankruptcy Act, 1883, there was power to order payment of a pension, which was made inalienable by Indian Legislation, to the trustee in bankruptcy of the pensioner but there is nothing in the English statute corresponding to the words in s. 60 (2), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which I have described as causing an insuperable difficulty. In my opinion it is impossible to say that the insolvent's pension is liable to attachment in the execution of a decree; and if this is so, the Court will have no jurisdiction under s. 60 (2) to order the insolvent to pay any portion of it to the Official Assignee for distribution among the creditors. Not only does s. 11, Pensions Act, exempt Govt. pensions from seizure, attachment or sequestration by process of any Court in British India at the instance of a creditor or in satisfaction of a decree or order of any such Court, but by s. 60 (1), Proviso (g), Civil P. O., stipends and gratuities allowed to pensioners of Govt. are expressly rendered not liable to attachment or sale under the section.

It is true that once a pension has been paid it loses its special character and becomes part of the assets of the pensioner, but all future instalments are clearly exempted from liability to attachment under the proviso I have mentioned, and it is precisely with regard to such instalments that it is suggested I have power to make an order on the insolvent in favour of the Official Assignee under s. 60 (2), Insolvency Act. Unless I have power to make such an order, the interests of the creditors will in no way be served by a direction on Jagannath to return the pension papers. If this is so, such a direction cannot be justified by s. 7, Insolvency Act. I come to this conclusion with some reluctance as I greatly doubt if Jagannath has any answer to a suit brought by the insolvent for the return of the pension papers. However, for the reasons I have given I have come to the conclusion that there is no power in the Insolvency Court in the circumstances to direct the return of the pension papers, and this application must be dismissed with costs.

s. Application dismissed.

THE COMMISSIONER OF THE ARRAH—

INDER CHAND—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

*Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII of 1922),
s. 82, 180—Commissioner imposing tax upon platforms on Municipal drains -- No consent of Local Government—Tax, if illegal and ultra vires*

It is impossible to exempt from the provisions of
s. 82, Bihar and Orissa Muni. Act, license fees to be imposed under s. 180 of the Act, and where the Commissioners purport to fix a scale of fees imposing tax upon platforms over Municipal drains under s. 180, the imposition without the consent of the Local Govt.
under sub-s. (2) of s. 82 is illegal and ultra vires the Commissioners.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah, dated December 22, 1937.

Messrs. Baldeva Sahay, Mahabir Prasad, Harinandan Singh and Tarkeswar Nath, for the Appellants.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Messrs. D. N. Barma and S. Sundar Sinha, for the Respondent.

Wort, J.—This appeal comes before this Court after remand. The case was remanded for the purpose of deciding a question of fact relating to a drain in Arrah.
The Municipal Commissioners, who are the appellants, were the defendants in the trial Court in a case in which the plaintiff claimed the following reliefs :

"That on the facts and circumstances stated it be declared that the imposition of a fee by the defendants for taking license for plaintiff's keeping platform is illegal and ultra vires and the defendants have no right to realize the same from the plaintiff and that the said levy of platform-tax is illegal, ultra vires and beyond the power of defendants and the defendants are not entitled either in law or in equity to do the same and demand the same from the plaintiff."

The second relief claimed was :

"That the defendants be restrained from realizing platform-fee or taking proceedings against the plaintiff under the Municipal Act or by-laws of the Municipality for not taking a license or compelling the plaintiff to remove his platform (if any) during the pendency of the suit."

The plaintiff further claimed a refund of the amount paid with interest.

Several questions were raised in the Courts below, and in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff succeeded. The learned Judge in the Appellate Court came to the conclusion, contrary to the contention of the Commissioners, that the drain was not a Municipal drain and that, therefore, the Municipal Commissioners had no jurisdiction over it. He also decided two questions of law in favour of the plaintiffs, which will be indicated by the points to which I shall refer in the judgment.

This Court, being in doubt as regards the findings of fact, remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for the determination of the question whether the drain was the Municipal drain, or whether it was within the limits of the District Board road.
The contention of the plaintiff was that the District Board road was 38 feet 8 inches in breadth and that the drain in question came within those limits. The learned Judge in the Court below, after remand, has come to the conclusion that the drain is beyond the limits of the District Board road. At the instigation of the parties, a Commissioner was appointed and he came to the following conclusion. "His report" says the learned Judge

"shows that the road in front of the plaintiff's house was 44 feet 4 inches wide from the south-east corner of the plaintiff's house, 44 feet 4 inches wide from the southern stairs of the plaintiff's house, and 44 feet 5 inches wide from the north-east corner of the plaintiff's house... From the measurements made by the Commissioner it will appear that at 20 places, where the plaintiff wanted the widths of the road to be measured, it varied from 24 feet to 38 feet 6 inches, the average coming to 29 feet 10 inches."

The learned Judge has come to the conclusion accordingly, and it will be seen therefore, that the drain is beyond the limits of the District Board road, and on that conclusion it seems to be abundantly clear that, contrary to the plaintiff's contention, the drain is that of the Municipal Commissioners and not of the District Board. However, that matter does not dispose of the case.

Dr. Mitter on behalf of the respondent raises several questions of law. The first is on the construction of s. 82 of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act, 1922. Section 82, provides that

"the Commissioners may, from time to time, at a meeting convened expressly for the purpose, of which due notice shall have been given, subject to the provisions of this Act and with the sanction of the Local Govt., impose within the limits of the Municipality the following taxes and fees, or any of them."

Then a list of cls. (a) to (l) of the matters with regard to which fees are chargeable under the first sub-section. It is with regard to the second sub-section that the question arises. The second sub-section runs thus :

"The Commissioners may from time to time, at a meeting convened as aforesaid, and in accordance with a scale of fees to be approved by the Local Govt., charge a fee in respect of the issue and renewal of any license which may be granted by the Commissioners under this Act and in respect of which no fee is leviable under sub-s. (1)."

Shortly it is contended that the tax which the Commissioners here purported to impose by their Resolution of January 18, 1935, comes within the mischief of that sub-section. Section 180, which is the warrant to the Commissioners to impose the tax, is as follows :

"No platform shall be erected, re-erected or extended upon or over any public road or drain without the previous sanction of the Commissioners."

Pausing there, I may observe that one of the contentions of the plaintiff-respondent in the Courts below was that the previous sanction had been granted by the Commissioners in 1935, that a fee had been paid, and that therefore the tax which the Commissioners sought to impose was illegal. But that point apparently was given up, and certainly was not argued in this Court. Sub-section (2) of s. 180 of the Act provides :

"The owner of every platform, except platforms which are used for giving such access to the houses as the Commissioners may consider necessary, shall, if the Commissioners at a meeting so direct, take out a license for keeping the platform."

Sub-section (3), provides that such license shall remain in force for one year. Sub-section (4), provides that

"for every such license there shall be paid a fee to be fixed by the Commissioners at a rate of not less than two annas nor more than eight annas for each square foot or the superficial area of the platform except such portion thereof as is used for giving such access to a house etc."

Sub-section (5) is a penalty clause making a person who contravenes the provisions of the section liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees.

At first it was thought that in this case the Commissioners had acted ad hoc in fixing fee for the license with regard to this particular platform. But that view of the matter is clearly wrong when the Resolution of January 18, 1935, is looked into. It was passed at a meeting of the Commissioners at which the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman, and four other members were present and the resolution which was passed unanimously on that occasion was that "two annas six pies per square foot per year be levied on the platform abutting on the Municipal drains" in a certain area described in the Resolution. It was further resolved that

"fees on the platform on Municipal roads, lanes, drains or lands within the rest of the area be levied at the rate of two annas per square foot per year."

It seems to me quite clear therefore that whether the Commissioners were entitled under s. 180 of the Act to act ad hoc as I have described it, they certainly did not purport to do so by the Resolution of January 18, 1935. What they were apparently doing was that they were fixing a scale of fees for the issue and renewal of any license "which might be granted by the Commissioners under this Act and in respect of which no fee was leviable under sub-s. (1)" (of s. 82). To repeat myself, it is clear that the Commissioners were fixing a scale of fees for licenses with regard to platforms erected over Municipal drains. Now, it is contended by Dr. Mitter therefore that unless they have the previous sanction of the Govt. the tax so charged was ultra vires of the Commissioners. It is admitted that the consent of the Local Govt. was not obtained. The words of the sub-section I shall repeat:

"The Commissioners may, from time to time, at a meeting convened as aforesaid, and in accordance with a scale of fees to be approved by the Local Govt. charge a fee in respect of the issue and renewal of any license which may be granted by the Commissioners."

I used the words "previous sanction of the Local Govt.," and although the expression may be to some extent inaccurate, it is quite clear that if the sub-section applies the imposition of the tax without the consent of the Local Govt. would be illegal; and that is the question which arises for determination in this appeal. It was contended, as I have already stated, that the commissioners could act in each case and fix a fee according to circumstances of each case, and that as the Legislature has fixed the limits within which the tax should be imposed, no consent of the Local Govt. was necessary. Sub-s. (2) of s. 82 speaks of the issue and renewal of fees for licenses charged under sub-s. (1). Instances of this are to be found in three sections.

Section 256 of the Act provides that "the Commissioners may, from time to time grant licenses to persons applying for the same." It is true that the section does not appear on the face of it to warrant the Commissioners charging any licence fee, the Act merely referring to a license to be granted by the Commissioners and the power of the Commissioners to prescribe a scale of the rates for the sale of such articles referred to in the section. But I assume that authority is given to the Commissioners that fees would be chargeable for the grant of that license.

Section 259 of the Act gives power to the Commissioners to license premises used for trades described in the various sub-clauses of the section, and sub-s. (3) of the same section provides:

"The Commissioners at a meeting may, subject to a maximum to be fixed by the Local Govt., levy a fee in respect of any such license and the renewal thereof, and may impose such conditions upon the grant of any such license as they may think necessary."

Section 261 provides power to Commissioners to license premises occupied by cartman, livery stable keeper or keepers of vehicles, and sub-s. (2) gives them power to license places for such purpose and may levy a fee not exceeding one rupee on the issue and renewal of any such license.

It is to be noted that there is a distinction between sub-s. (2) of s. 261 and sub-s. (3) of s. 259 of the Act. Sub-section (2) of the latter makes no reference to the consent of the Local Govt., whereas under sub-s. (3) of s. 259 the Commissioners at a meeting may, subject to a maximum to be fixed by the Local Govt. levy a fee. I apprehend therefore that although the consent of the Local Govt. is to be obtained under sub-s. (3) of s. 259 it is not the consent referred to in sub-s. (2) of s. 180 (2). But the same cannot be said in my judgment with regard to s. 261 (2) which provides that "the Commissioners may license places for such purpose, and may levy a fee not exceeding one rupee on the issue and renewal of any such license. Such license shall be renewed in the first and seventh months of each year."

The language of s. 261 and s. 180 (2) are not materially different, and it seems to me that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to contend that the license fee chargeable under s. 261 would not be subject to the consent of the Local Govt. under sub-s. (2) of s. 81. And if that argument is well-founded, it seems equally impossible to exempt from the provisions of sub-s. (2) the license fees to be imposed under s. 180 of the Act, the section with which we are dealing in this case. It is clear, as I pointed out at the commencement of my observations, that the Commissioners purported to fix a scale of fees and that would seem in any event to come specifically within the mischief of sub-s. (2) of s. 82.

I do not pretend to say that the matter is without difficulty, but in my judgment it was necessary in this case to have the approval of the Local Govt. to the scale of fees chargeable under the Resolution of January 18, 1935.

Another question of law arose, and that is that the Resolution fixed no time for which license fees would come into operation. In the circumstances of the case it is unnecessary to come to a conclusion with regard to that matter, but I may add that in passing a Resolution of this kind the Commissioners would be well-advised to fix such a date.

The remaining point is whether the plaintiff is in the circumstances entitled to the relief which he claimed in the suit. In the second item he asked for an injunction restraining the Commissioners from taking proceedings against the plaintiff that, it is clear, is a relief to which the plaintiff is not in any circumstances entitled; but in my judgment he was entitled to a declaration that the imposition of the fee for the plaintiff's keeping the platform was ultra vires the Commissioners and that the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the fees which, as I understand, were paid into the Court of the Munsif.

The appeal of the Commissioners is dismissed and the judgment of the Court below set aside, the plaintiff being entitled to a decree for the relief indicated in this judgment.

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 15 (4)—"Means," how determined—Magistrate's discretion regarding means of person not illegally exercised—Cannot be attacked in Civil Court—Burden of proving that in assessing means of person under s. 15 (4) his income from outside disturbed area was taken into account is on that person.

While considering the means of a person under s. 15 (4), Police Act what the Magistrate is entitled to look to is not only the income derived by the person from the disturbed area but also the means which he had of raising the money required for the assessment.

The Magistrate is given absolute discretion in determining the means of a person under s. 15 (4). That being so, unless it is proved that the Magistrate has exercised his judgment illegally which means to say, not in accordance with that section, his decision cannot be attacked in a civil suit.

Under s. 15 (4), Police Act only the means within the disturbed area can be considered. The burden to prove that the Magistrate in making assessment under s. 15 (4) took into consideration a person's means from outside the disturbed area is on such person because the act being an official act will be presumed in the first instance to have been regularly performed in accordance with law.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the First Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated April 18, 1936.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This appeal relates to the correct interpretation of s. 15 (4) of the Police Act, 1861.

The plaintiff is the proprietor of a Khel in mauza Hingani in Wardha Tahsil. Disputes occurred in this village and so punitive Police were quartered there under s. 15 (1) of the Police Act. The plaintiff was then required by the Magistrate to pay Rs. 300 towards the expenses of this additional force under s. 15 (4) of the Police Act. He states that the Magistrate has taken into consideration not only his means within the disturbed area, that is to say, within the village of Hingani, but also his means from outside sources. This he states is illegal.

I quite agree that under s. 15 (4) only the means within the disturbed area can be considered. The question therefore resolves itself into this. Did the Magistrate in making this assessment take into consideration the plaintiff's means from outside the disturbed area? The burden is on the plaintiff because the Act being an official act will be presumed in the first instance to have been regularly performed in accordance with law.

Before, however, dealing with the matter on which the plaintiff relies in proof of his case, I will examine the meaning of the word "means." It has been defined in the Oxford English Dictionary as being "the resources at one's disposal for effecting some object." According to that definition what the Magistrate had to consider then was the resources at the plaintiff's disposal within the village of Hingani for paying the Rs. 300 to which he had been assessed.

The word "means" has also been used in O. XXXIII, r. 1 of the Civil P. O., and the meaning attached to it is much the same. Mulla at p. 963 states that the words "refer to property over which the petitioner has actual control." Therefore what the Magistrate was entitled to look to was not only the income derived from this village but also the means which the plaintiff had of raising the money required for the assessment.

The next point to be observed is that the Magistrate is given absolute discretion in this matter under s. 15 (4). The section runs:

"The Magistrate of the District, after such enquiry as he may deem necessary, shall apportion such apportionment shall be made according to the Magistrate's judgment of the respective means within such area of such inhabitants."

That being so, unless it is proved that the Magistrate has exercised his judgment illegally which means to say, not in accordance with that section, his decision cannot be attacked in a civil suit.

As regards the question of fact, namely, whether the Magistrate took other resources of the plaintiff into consideration or not, the plaintiff has produced no evidence whatever except 3 documents. Two of them have no bearing on the matter before me and the third is the list of assessment which shows that the plaintiff's annual income has been estimated at Rs. 5,000 and that he has been assessed to a sum of Rs. 300.

Now as I have said the fact that the Magistrate thought that the plaintiff's annual income was Rs. 5,000 cannot be questioned here whether he was right or wrong unless it can be shown that he took into consideration the plaintiff's resources from property outside Hingani.

Nothing could have been easier for the plaintiff than to show what his income within the Hingani area actually was. He has not attempted to show that this figure was so excessively high that it could only have been derived by taking into consideration the income from outside sources. Therefore that document, Ex. p-3, does not carry us any further.

Apart from that all that he relies on is what he calls an admission or rather a want of denial by the defendant of the allegation made by the plaintiff in the plaint. The allegation is that the Magistrate took into consideration the plaintiff's means from villages other than Hingani.

The defendant's written statement is to this effect:

"It is denied that the costs apportioned on the plaintiff is not according to the means of the plaintiff within the disturbed area. The apportionment of costs was made according to the Magistrate's judgment of the respective means of the persons taxed within the area in disturbed state."

That is a clear denial of the issue raised by the plaintiff.

Another passage in a later oral statement is also relied on by the plaintiff's learned Counsel. It is to this effect :

"So far as the malguzars were concerned, he fixed the amount entirely in his own discretion without reference to their means or the rents paid by them."

It is argued that the words "without reference to their means" import an admission that it was with reference to the plaintiff's means in other areas. That is clearly an impossible construction. The sentence is unhappily phrased, but the following sentence explains what is meant :

"The Magistrate thus allotted Rs. 600 to the malguzars and recovered the same from them considering their means within the area. Means included all sorts of income derived by the persons assessed and does not include only rents or revenues."

It is clear from this that the defendant very clearly denied the plaintiff's allegation in this behalf and pleaded that the exact directions in s. 15(4) had been faithfully observed. Therefore no support can be found for the plaintiff's case by any admission in the pleading. That being so, he was bound to adduce evidence. He has not done so. But it appears that he was not given an opportunity to do so. The case was decided on certain preliminary issues. Therefore the matter will now have to go back to the trial Court to enable the parties to adduce whatever evidence they have in respect of the question whether the District Magistrate took into consideration the means of the plaintiff outside the area in dispute or whether he confined his attention as required by the Act to the area in dispute.

Costs will abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 63, 63-A, 72—Deed of mortgage with possession providing that mortgagees should effect repairs on failure of mortgagor if property fell into ruins and mortgagees sustained loss in income of rent—Repairs not shown to be made after property fell into ruins—No loss of income proved—Repairs in nature of improvements—Mortgagees held not entitled to credit for sums spent in repairs—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 1—Suit by vendee of mortgagor for redemption of two mortgaged properties—Decree for redemption as well as decree against mortgagor for another sum charged on one of mortgaged properties, if can be passed.

A mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property in the absence of any contract to the contrary. Although a mortgage-deed provides that the principal mortgage money, as well as interest and compound interest thereon has to be paid, yet if the repairs effected came within the T. P. Act or within the document, the cost thereof would under the same principle come under the expression "principal mortgage money" and can be added to the principal mortgage money.

Under a deed of mortgage with possession repairs were to be done by the mortgagor and the only power given to the mortgagees, in the event of the mortgagor not effecting repairs was that in case the property fell into ruins or was destroyed on account of some unexpected calamity or want of repairs and the mortgagees sustained a loss in their income of rent on that account, then the mortgagees could effect repairs from their own pocket after giving the mortgagor notice and they could charge interest on these repairs. It was not claimed that any repairs were done by the mortgagees after the property had fallen into ruins or had been destroyed. There was nothing to prove any loss of income from rent and the property was never in ruins or destroyed. On the contrary the work done, was more in the nature of improvements calculated to bring in increased rent. None of them were proved to have been necessary within the meaning of s. 72 or s. 63-A, T. P. Act :

Held, that the mortgagees were not entitled to credit for the sum spent by them in effecting the repairs. 80 Ind. Cas. 820(1), referred to.

In a suit for redemption of two mortgaged properties instituted by a vendee from the mortgagor it is not possible to grant a decree for redemption to the plaintiff against the mortgagee on payment of a certain sum and to give him a decree against his vendor for another sum charged on one of the mortgaged properties. The two claims cannot be combined. [p. 710, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated August 30, 1937.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and Asa Ram Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan and Qabul Chand and Shamair Chand, for Respondent, Nos. 1 to 7 and 8 respectively.

Addison, J.—By a registered mortgage deed, dated October 18, 1928, the defendant Ohhunnu Lal mortgaged two properties, namely half of a katra, known as Dhulianwala, and a house named Diwan-khana, with Bihari Lal, deceased defendant No. 1, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for Rs. 1,50,000. Bihari Lal is now represented by his son Ohander Bhan and grandsons Aghar Chand, Mansuram Kumar and Mahindar Kumar. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Kidar Nath and Sagar Chand, transferred their rights to Bihari Lal, deceased defendant No. 1. By a sale deed, dated February 10, 1934, Ohhunnu Lal, defendant No. 4, sold the half katra only to the plaintiff Suraj Mal, for Rs. 2,00,000 of which Rs. 1,72,500 were left by the mortgagor with the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage. Under this sale deed Chhannu Lal made himself liable to pay to his vendee anything over the sum of Rs. 1,72,500 which the vendee might have to pay for redemption and it was stated in the sale deed that such additional sum, if any, would form a charge on the house called Diwankhana. The plaintiff then wrote a letter to the mortgagees, offering to pay them Rs. 1,72,500 and asking them to hand over the katra to him on payment of that amount. This letter is dated February 20, 1934. In reply the mortgagees sent letter Ex. P-6, dated February 25, 1934. They claimed from the plaintiff :

Rs.	1,50,000	for principal,
Rs.	21,481	for interest and compound interest up to February 27, 1934,
Rs.	9,867	for costs of improvement, house-tax and other taxes, and
Rs.	4,356	for interest and compound interest on the costs of improvement, house-tax and other taxes.

Total Rs. 1,85,704

The plaintiff sent in reply a letter, Ex. P-7, dated March 11, 1934, to the mortgagees. The correctness of the mortgagees' right to claim any money for improvements, house-tax, etc., was denied and details of this item were asked for. Information was also asked for as to whether the improvements were effected with the consent of the mortgagor and if any notice was served on the mortgagor with respect thereto. It was stated further that the claim for improvements etc., was irrelevant to the matter of redemption by virtue of cl. (10) of the mortgage deed, which specifically stipulated for the redemption of the half katra on payment of the principal money and interest, which amounted to Rs. 1,72,500. Finally it was said that the plaintiff would be willing to pay the entire amount in order to obtain possession of the half katra if the mortgagees agreed to account afterwards for the excess payment over Rs. 1,72,500 and refund any amount in excess not justified under the mortgage deed. In reply the mortgagees, Bihari Lal, stated (see Ex. P-8, dated March 19, 1934), that the money spent on improvements was a charge on the mortgaged property, that the mortgagee was prepared to redeem and hand over possession of the mortgaged property on receipt of the amount due according to him and he further stated that he was willing to account later to the plaintiff and to refund any excess payment made by the plaintiff but that if a suit was necessary such a suit must be brought by the plaintiff. The plaintiff replied by Ex. P-10, dated April 2, 1934. It was stated therein that the plaintiff would pay under protest the amount claimed by Bihari Lal, provided that immediate possession of the half katra was given and that Bihari Lal agreed to indemnify the plaintiff against any defect in Bihari Lal's title to realize the entire mortgage amount himself, seeing that two others, Kidar Nath and Sagar Chand, were according to the mortgage deed, entitled to half, and provided that the excess payment over the amount of Rs. 1,72,500 should be accounted for later and Bihari Lal agreed to refund any amount not found legally payable. Nothing however, came of this correspondence and finally the plaintiff deposited Rs. 1,88,000 with a Notary Public (see Ex. P. W. 6-1). The Notary Public offered this amount to Bihari Lal and at the same time requested Bihari Lal to sign an agreement in the terms already mentioned, but Bihari Lal refused, claiming in addition to the sum of Rs. 1,85,704 formerly admitted by him, another sum of Rs. 1,890 paid to his Pleader. He also demanded further time up to April 29, 1934.

Accordingly, the plaintiff instituted this suit the next day, that is on April 10, 1934. He claimed redemption of the half katra, which alone he was entitled to redeem, on payment of Rs. 1,72,500, but it was set out that he had deposited Rs. 1,88,000 with the National Bank of India Limited, to meet any further claim made by them mortgagees. In the written reply of Bihari Lal, Rs. 1,86,757 were demanded as payable before possession of the katra could be given. The plaintiff applied to the Court to the effect that he was willing to pay this amount and be put in possession of the property, provided that, after the matter had been gone into by the Court, he might be given a decree against Bihari Lal for any sum paid in excess. This was accepted by Bihari Lal and Rs. 1,86,757 were paid to Bihari Lal by cheques dated April 21, 1934, on the National Bank of India Limited. These cheques were cashed and the plaintiff was put in possession of the half katra. The question therefore, remained how much of the additional sum claimed was proper. The trial Judge has found that the mortgagees were entitled to the following additional sums:

	Rs.	a.	p.
Costs of repairs	4,922	0	0
Supervision charges	492	0	0
Amount of water-tax	382	12	0

He has also allowed interest at Rs. 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem on this amount and has calculated the interest as coming to Rs. 2,520. This interest was allowed from March 1, 1930. The total additional sum allowed was thus Rs. 8,316-12-0 plus Rs. 20, further interest on the mortgage amount. He thus held that Rs. 5,920-4-0 had been paid in excess and he granted the plaintiff a decree for this amount with simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum thereon from April 21, 1934 till the date of realization. This decree is against Chander Bhan, son of Bihari Lal. It has also to be mentioned that on February 20, 1937 the plaintiff applied to amend his plaint. In this application he stated that under the terms of the deed of sale, dated February 10, 1934, Rs. 1,72,500 had been left with him by the defendant Ohhunnu Lal for payment to the mortgagees and that Ohhunnu Lal had agreed in that sale deed to reimburse him for any excess payment thereover with interest at Rs. 0-12-0 per cent. per mensem. He therefore prayed that if the mortgagees were held to be entitled to any sum in excess of Rs. 1,72,500 the plaintiff should be given a decree to that extent against Ohhunnu Lal, the mortgagor defendant, and it was also prayed that any such decree should be made a charge upon the house Diwankhana. The amendment was allowed by the trial Judge but the Judge who delivered judgment at the conclusion of the case held that this claim made the suit multifarious and could not be allowed in a redemption suit. The claim made in the amended plaint against Ohhunnu Lal was therefore dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this appeal, claiming Rs. 8,316-12-0 disallowed by the trial Judge as principal with interest thereon from April 21, 1934 to December 21, 1937 at 6 per cent., this sum amounting to Rs. 1,829-11-0. The total claim in the appeal was therefore Rs. 10,146-7-0. A decree against Ohhunnu Lal in terms of the amended plaint was also asked for. Cross-objections have been put in on behalf of Chander Bhan, son of Bihari Lal, to the effect that the decree in favour of the plaintiff amounting to Rs. 5,920-4-0 with simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum should not have been passed in a redemption suit and that the Court was wrong in disallowing the full claim of the mortgagee.

The trial Judge held that under cl. (7) of the deed the mortgagor had to pay to the mortgagees house-tax, water-tax, electric tax and other taxes on the half katra. He did not however allow any of these taxes except water-tax on his finding that the mortgagees, who were in possession, collected the other taxes from the tenants. As regards what the trial Judge describes as repairs, he held that the defendants' books were entirely unreliable and he rejected them completely. He also found that there was no evidence of any purchases, shown in the defendants' books, as having been for the repairs of this katra. He found however that certain vouchers amounting to Rs. 3,500-4-9, principally for cement, had been produced. He noted that Makhan Lal who was produced as an expert by the plaintiff and was P. W. No. 7 assessed the repairs to Rs. 1,700 or so. This Makhan Lal however had not included certain repairs effected by the mortgagees, such as the costs of a pushta from one end of the half katra to the other. After hearing arguments therefore in the case he appointed a Local Commissioner to assess the repairs. This he did in spite of the fact that long before this in the course of the trial the plaintiff had applied for such a Commissioner to be appointed and the predecessor of the Judge who wrote the judgment had refused this request because the contesting mortgagee defendant did not wish Commissioner to be appointed, although the burden was on him to establish what the repairs were. The procedure adopted by the Judge was therefore not justifiable. After he found that the accounts produced by the defendant for repairs of the half katra were not authentic or reliable and that nothing had been established by the contesting defendant, he should have proceeded to judgment and not appointed a Commissioner, the appointment of which the defendant had already resisted.

This Local Commissioner went to the spot accompanied by the defendant's servants only and the Judge is wrong in saying that he estimated the repairs in the presence of the parties. The Commissioner's report is far from satisfactory. The work he saw seemed to him to be several years old but it was sufficiently rigid. This does not establish when the work was done and it may be noted that Bihari Lal, the contesting defendant, had a mortgage of this katra in 1924, the mortgage now in suit being a fresh mortgage executed in 1928 in lieu of the prior mortgage. A part of the consideration for the present mortgage of 1928 was Rs. 2454-14-3 spent on the repairs of the katra prior to 1928 and it cannot therefore be said with any certainty, seeing that the defendants' books are unreliable, when the repairs estimated by this Commissioner took place. He stated that the main items of repairs were cement plaster, cement concrete pushra at the back of the building and cement concrete floors and roofs. There is no evidence that the katra had any cement flooring, etc., at the time of the mortgage and obviously the mortgagee cannot improve the property so as to get better rents by improving the state of the katra as compared with what it was when he took it over. The Commissioner stated that too much cement had been used in the concrete but, so far as he could, he made an estimate of what he was shown, amounting to a sum of Rs. 4,922. There is another finding by the Judge that these repairs were effected by the mortgagee with the consent of Ohhunnu Lal, mortgagor.

The learned Counsel, appearing for the plaintiff-appellant, placed his reliance principally on the terms of the mortgage deed. Here it might be at once mentioned that in the letters which passed between the parties when the plaintiff was trying to get possession of the katra after the sale in his favour, Bihari Lal described the additional expenditure as costs of improvement, house-tax and other taxes which he put at Rs. 9,867 (see Ex. 6 and para. 2 of Ex. p. 8 where it was said that the improvements were effected with the consent of the mortgagor, the consent being given orally). In the suit however the word 'improvements' was dropped and the word 'repairs' was used. The reason for the change is obvious. It will be necessary to set out some part of the mortgage deed at this stage. Ohhunnu Lal, the mortgagor, stated therein (see p. 45 of Vol. 2) that the half katra in suit was already mortgaged with possession with the three mortgagees, Bihari Lal, Kidar Nath and Sher Singh, for one lac of rupees, which was re-payable in five years, under a deed of mortgage, dated January 28, 1924, the condition in that deed also being that the rent was to counter-balance interest while the house known as Diwankhana was free from encumbrance. He therefore now mortgaged, on October 18, 1928, with possession the half katra while he effected a simple mortgage of the house Diwankhana for the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 for a term of ten years, one-half being the share of Bihari Lal and one-half the share of the other two mortgagees. Interest on Rs. 1,20,000 for which sum the half katra was mortgaged, was to be set off against rent; while interest on the sum of Rs. 30,000 for which the house Diwankhana was mortgaged, was to run at the rate of Re. 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem. He admitted receipt of the entire mortgage money and stated that he had put the mortgagees in possession of the half katra. He himself was to occupy the Diwankhana on a rental amounting to the interest. (That is why I have stated that it was in effect a simple mortgage of the Diwankhana house.) The following conditions are then set forth in the deed :

"(1) The mortgagor could not pay the whole or part of the principal mortgage money before the expiry of the first two years.

"(2) After the expiry of the first two years the mortgagor could redeem the mortgaged property on payment of the entire principal mortgage money."

(These two clauses are general.) Clause (3) is to the effect that the mortgagees were to credit rent of the half katra towards interest and were responsible themselves to realize the rent while the mortgagor was responsible for title and for repairs to the half katra. (Then comes the disputed part of the clause.)

"If, God forbid, the mortgagor does not effect repairs to the mortgaged property (referring of course to the half katra) and it falls into ruins on account of some unexpected calamity or want of repairs and the mortgagees sustain a loss in their income of rent thereby, they shall be at liberty to effect repairs from their own pocket after giving the mortgagor notice."

The mortgagor contracted to pay simple interest at Re. 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem on such repairs. Then come cls. (4) to (7) which apparently refer only to the house Diwankhana :

"(4) The mortgagor was to pay Rs. 3,150 annually on account of interest on the sum of Rs. 30,000 charged on the house Diwankhana, at annas 14 per cent. per mensem and obtain receipts for such payments. No payment without a receipt was to be valid.

"(5) If he did not pay interest on the sum charged on the house annually, compound interest at the same rate was to be allowed.

"(6) In default of payment of interest for two years on the sum charged on the house Diwankhana, the mortgagees were at liberty to cancel the term of the mortgage and recover the sum of Rs. 30,000, the principal mortgage money, with interest and compound interest, from the house Diwankhana as also from the person and other property of the mortgagor, or maintain the term of the mortgage and recover the entire principal mortgage money with interest and compound interest in the lump from the mortgaged property as also from the mortgagor's person and other property.

(7) The mortgagor was responsible for repairs to the mortgaged house as he was occupying it and for all other matters in connection therewith, fall in the market value of the property, payment of house-tax, water rate, electric charges and other charges."

Then comes the last sentence of this clause:

"That is to say, till redemption of the mortgaged property I am entitled to all sorts of profit and liable for all kinds of loss in connection with it."

The Judge has held that this last sentence, as it mentions the usual words 'mortgaged property,' applies also to the half katra mortgaged. This interpretation is absolutely impossible and was not pressed before us. In fact the words "mortgaged property" were used in cl. (3) with reference to the half katra. According to this cl. (7) the mortgagor was responsible for everything in connection with the house Diwankhana, including its taxes of all kinds, but he was not made responsible for the taxes on the half katra mortgaged with possession, the terms relating to it being incorporated in cl. (3) already set out. This means that the sum allowed by the Judge for water-tax goes in any case. Besides, there was the same evidence for water-tax as there was about the other taxes. The Judge accepted that evidence as regards the other taxes and should have accepted it also, therefore, for the water-tax. Clauses (8) and (9) are general. Then comes cl. (10) which is also in controversy:

"If after the expiry of the first two years I want to redeem the mortgaged katra, I can do so on payment of rupees one lac and fifty thousand, principal mortgage money and the entire unpaid interest and compound interest in the lump; and if I want to redeem the Diwankhana after the expiry of the first two years, I can do so on payment of Rs. 30,000; principal mortgage money, and the unpaid interest and compound interest. I will not otherwise be able to redeem the house."

The clause allows the mortgagor to redeem the properties separately; by the second part thereof he can redeem the house Diwankhana on payment of Rs. 30,000 principal mortgage money and the unpaid interest and compound interest at annas 14 per cent. per mensem due thereon. If this had been done, the katra would have remained under mortgage with possession for the remaining sum of Rs. 1,20,000. By the first part of cl. (10) permission was given to redeem the katra alone on the terms that the whole principal mortgage money of Rs. 1,50,000 and the entire unpaid interest and compound interest on the Rs. 30,000 charged on the house were paid. This really means that the katra could only be redeemed by also redeeming the house Diwankhana. The plaintiff, having purchased the half katra, by reason of the first part of cl. (10) is entitled to redeem it but, in doing so, he virtually redeems the whole property.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that, under this redemption clause, no question of the costs of improvement or repairs arose and that all that had to be paid in order to redeem was the principal sum of Rs. 1,50,000, and interest and compound interest, amounting to Rs. 22,500 on Rs. 30,000. In this connection numerous rulings have been referred to most of which appear to me not to be very helpful. Under s. 58 (a), T. P. Act, the mortgage money consists of the principal money and interest. Under s. 58 (d) the mortgagee is entitled to possession until payment of the mortgage money. Under s. 60 after the principal money has become due the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender of the mortgage money, to redeem the property. Under s. 63 the mortgagor is liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper costs thereof as an addition to the principal money. Such costs therefore would come under the term 'principal money' if the acquisition were made for the purposes set out. Under s. 63-A of the Act, where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has been improved, the mortgagor upon redemption shall in the absence of a contract to the contrary be entitled to the improvement, but by sub-cl (2) of this section, where any such improvement was necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration, etc., the mortgagor shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be liable to pay the proper costs thereof as an addition to the principal money. Lastly, by s. 72 (b), a mortgagee may spend such money as is necessary for the preservation of the mortgaged property from destruction, forfeiture or sale and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money. It seems therefore that the words 'principal mortgage money' in cl. (10) can be made to include the necessary payments allowed under the sections quoted, provided that there is no contract to the contrary.

The case law need not be discussed in detail, as it seems that their Lordships of the Privy Council have in Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh (1), set this question at rest. Their Lordships merely distinguished Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (2). But in fact that ruling as well as cases such as Jawala Singh v. Teja Singh (3), must be taken to be no longer good law. It was held by their Lordships that a mortgagee was entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property in the absence of any contract to the contrary, and that, in a suit to redeem two simple mortgages, which provided for the annual payment of interest and that the mortgagor could redeem upon payment of the "mortgage money" which expression the documents used referring to the sums advanced, the general rule was not displaced and the interest was a charge upon the property and payable, upon redemption. In the present appeal 'mortgage money' is used in the document as meaning 'the sum advanced.' This is clear from the last part of the document. Further, it was provided that the principal mortgage money, as well as interest and compound interest thereon had to be paid; so that the case is not exactly the same as that before their Lordships of the Privy Council. But if the repairs effected came within the T. P. Act, or within cl. (3) of the document, the cost thereof would under the same principle come under the expression "principal mortgage money" and could be added to the principal mortgage money.

Clause (3) of the mortgage deed has therefore to be considered. Under it repairs were to be done by the mortgagor and the only power given to the mortgagees, in the event of the mortgagor not effecting repairs was that in case the property fell into ruins or was destroyed on account of some unexpected calamity or want of repairs and the mortgagees sustained a loss in their income of rent on that account, then the mortgagees could effect repairs from their own pocket after giving the mortgagor notice and they could charge interest on these repairs at Re. 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem. The words used are therefore not very different from the words employed in ss. 63-A (2) and 72, T. P. Act. But such repairs were only possible if the half katra fell into ruins or was destroyed. The vernacular word used in the deed means "destroyed" or "fallen." It cannot be, and has not been claimed in the present case, that any repairs were done by the mortgagees after the property had fallen into ruins or had been destroyed. According to cl. (3) therefore there was no power in the mortgagees to effect any repairs. Further, in my opinion there is no evidence which would have justified the mortgagees in spending money for the preservation of the mortgaged property from destruction within the meaning of s. 72, T. P. Act, nor does s. 63-A (2) apply, as the improvements effected have not been proved to have been necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration, or to prevent the security from becoming insufficient. Again, on the evidence the repairs which were carried out are distinct improvements. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) As regards (iii), it is perfectly clear that cl. (3) only gives the mortgagee power to execute repairs after giving notice to the mortgagor, if the property fell into ruins or was destroyed by reason of some calamity or by reason of the mortgagor not effecting repairs, and loss had accrued to the mortgagee on this account in his rent income. There is nothing to prove any loss of income from rent and the property was never in ruins or destroyed. On the contrary the work done, as already stated, was more in the nature of improvements calculated to bring in increased rent. None of them are proved to have been necessary within the meaning of s. 72 or s. 63-A, T. P. Act.

The only other point argued was that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to a decree against Chhunnu Lal, the mortgagor, for any amount in excess of Rs. 1,72,500 which he might be held liable to pay to the mortgagee. I am in agreement with the finding of the trial Court that this claim could not be made in the present suit. It is only after this suit is decided that the amount can be ascertained. Besides, it would be impossible in a redemption suit to grant a decree for redemption to the plaintiff against the mortgagee on payment of a certain sum and to give him a decree against his vendor for another sum charged on the house Diwankhana. The two claims cannot be combined. It does not matter whether it is said that the suit is multifarious, or that it is premature with respect to the claim against Ohhunnu Lal. The appeal of the plaintiff therefore against Ohhunnu Lal mortgagor must fail. It may be noted that no court-fee was paid on this part of the claim either in the trial Court or in this Court and that is another reason why the claim cannot succeed. In fact, the claim could not be valued. As it so turns out, no decree can be given against Ohhunnu Lal, the mortgagor, as the plaintiff's appeal in other respects against the mortgagee has been accepted.

For the reasons given therefore I would accept the appeal and give the plaintiff an additional decree for Rs. 8,316-12-0 with simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum thereon from April 21, 1934, to date of realization. The plaintiff will have his full costs in the trial Court and in this Court to be paid by Chander Bhan, son of Bihari Lal. The appeal is dismissed so far as Ohhunnu Lal mortgagor is concerned and the plaintiff-appellant will pay his costs in this Court. The cross-objections are dismissed but no order as to costs is made in them.

Ram Lal, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Order accordingly.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Civil Suit No. 184 of 1938

June 2, 1939

Ba U, J.

MA SAN MYINT—PLAINTIFF

versus

U TUN SEIN—DEFENDANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, rr. 1 and 2, scope of—Plaintiff granted leave to withdraw suit with permission to bring fresh one on the same cause of action, on condition of paying costs to defendant on or before certain date or before institution of fresh suit—Condition not fulfilled—Fresh suit is void ab initio.

Under r. 1, O. XXIII, Civil P. C., a plaintiff can withdraw a suit as a matter of right without the permission of the Court; but if he does it he is then precluded from filing a fresh suit on the same cause of action. If he wants to withdraw the suit and at the same time wants to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action, he must resort to r. 2. Under the said Rule he must ask for permission to withdraw with liberty to file a fresh suit. The Court may grant the permission asked for on "such terms as it thinks fit" The terms may be of any kind. They might be, (1) That the plaintiff shall pay the costs before a certain date specified in the order, or (2) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs before the institution of the second suit, or (3) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs without specifying the time of the payment. If the terms imposed are as in illus. (1) or (2), they then obviously refer not to the withdrawal of the suit but to the institution of a fresh suit. Once permission is granted to withdraw, the suit can no longer be regarded to be still existing.

Where, therefore, leave to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action is granted on condition of payment of costs on or before a specified date or before the institution of a fresh suit, payment must be made before the specified date or before the institution of a fresh suit. If no payment is made, the second suit is void ab initio. The payment of costs is a condition precedent to the institution of a fresh suit.

[Case-law discussed.]

Mr. U E Maung, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. U Ze Ya, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the wife of the defendant and for partition and payment of her share out of the properties acquired by the defendant. The plaintiff asked for a similar declaration against the defendant in Civil Regular No. 192 of 1937 of this Court; but subsequently her Advocate asked for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit. In granting her the permission to withdraw the suit Sharpe, J., passed the following order.

"I dismiss the suit with costs, as being withdrawn and give the plaintiff liberty to institute a fresh suit if he (she) is so advised. I fix the Advocate's fee at seven gold mohurs; and I also make it a condition for the institution of a fresh suit that all the costs of the present suit must be paid to the defendant before the plaintiff is allowed to file a fresh suit."

U E Maung on behalf of the plaintiff admits that the costs were not paid before the institution of the fresh suit and in fact, according to U E Maung, the costs have not been paid up to date. Because of this one of the pleas now taken in defence is that the suit is void ab initio. There is a conflict of decisions on this point. The Calcutta, Lahore and Patna High Courts hold one view, while the Madras, Bombay and Allahabad High Courts take another view. In Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (1), Geidt and Mookerjee, JJ. said:

"We may take it that the payment of costs was meant by the order to be a condition precedent to the bringing of a fresh suit. But then the question arises, does that necessarily make the suit void ab initio, and will not the subsequent payment of the defendant's costs cure the undoubted irregularity. There is no express provision by the Indian Legislature as to the consequences of such a course of conduct. But we have referred to the rules of the Supreme Court, 1883. Order XXVI, r. 4 runs as follows: 'if any subsequent action shall be brought before payment of the costs of a discontinued action for the same, or substantially the same cause of action the Court or a Judge may, if they or he think fit, order a stay of such subsequent action, until such costs shall have been paid.' We think that the rule there laid down would be a fair rule for the Courts in this country to follow, in the absence of any statutory enactment in the matter and that though a Court would be warranted in refusing to proceed with a suit like this when the facts are brought to its notice that the plaintiff had not complied with the order requiring payment of costs, yet there is nothing in the law to show that a suit instituted under such circumstances is bad ab initio and must ipso facto be dismissed; if the payment ordered is made after its institution."

The decision in this case was supported by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Shital Prasad v. Gaya Prasad (2), but on different grounds. The learned Chief Justice said ;

"Though I agree with the result of the ruling in Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (1), I would base my decision in this case on somewhat different though not antagonistic reasons. The withdrawal was under s. 373 of the Code of 1882, which provides that 'if at any time after the institution of the suit, the Court is satisfied on the application of the plaintiff that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the subject-matter of the suit, the Court may grant such permission on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit. If the plaintiff withdraws from the suit without such permission he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit for the same matter.' Here permission was given. Therefore, the last paragraph that I have read has no application, for it cannot be said that the plaintiff withdrew without such permission. He withdrew with the permission and the permission is under the section to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, that is to say a permission with a sequel attached to it. The condition of such permission in this case was the payment of costs. Until the costs were paid the permission was not operative, and so there was no withdrawal with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The result was that until there was such withdrawal the former suit was still pending. This appears to me to be the literal meaning of the words of s. 373 which is now reproduced in effect under O. XXIII, and is in accordance with the view of the English authorities on a cognate provision, for in Edginton v. Proudman (3), it was decided that where the plaintiff instead of paying costs went on with the original suit and obtained a verdict, the Court refused to set aside the verdict. When a plaintiff has obtained leave to withdraw upon payment of costs, it is his duty to pay the costs at once, for until they are paid there is no withdrawal with the permission of the Court. In that view when the case came before the Munsif he was not entitled to dismiss it. All he could do was to regard s. 10 as a bar to his proceeding with the trial of the suit."

This decision was followed by the Patna and Lahore High Courts in Muhammad (2) 19 O L J 529; 23 Ind. Cas. 210; A I R 1914 Cal. 207.

(3) (1832) 1 Dowl 152.

Afzal v. Lachman Singh (4) and Nazir Hussain v. Nathu (5). The point now under discussion came up for decision by the Madras High Court for the first time in Robert Fischer v. Nagappa Mudaly (6). At that time the only authority that was apparently available was the case in Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (1). Though they did not dissent from that decision, White C. J. and Krishnaswami Ayyar, J., observed that where leave was granted to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs on or before the specified date and he failed to do so, he was precluded from bringing a second suit and if such a suit was brought, it would be dismissed. In a subsequent case, Seshayya v. Subbayya (7), Phillips, J., reviewing the cases cited above said :

"These cases all assume that the permission granted by the Court is not only permission to bring a fresh suit but also permission to withdraw the first suit, and that consequently until the condition is fulfilled the first suit is pending. This seems to me to overlook the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1 (1) which gives a plaintiff power to withdraw his suit at any time without the permission of that Court. Consequently, I think that we must read the latter part of cl 2 (b) as referring not to permission to withdraw a suit as well as permission to institute a fresh suit, but merely as allowing the Court to give permission to institute a fresh suit in place of the one which has been withdrawn. Inasmuch as the withdrawal of the suit does not require the permission of the Court, it must be taken that the first suit is withdrawn when the order is passed and that the permission granted refers only to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions."

The view thus taken by the Madras High Court was followed by the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts in Shidramappa Mutappa v. Mallappa Ramchandrappe (8) and Rachhpal Singh v. Sheo Ratan Singh, 118 Ind. Cas. 584 (9). In the first case Patkar, J. said :

"I am inclined to agree with the view of the Madras High Court, and most respectfully dissent from the view of the Calcutta High Court. When once a suit has been withdrawn, it is no longer pending and the permission given by the Court relates to the bringing of the fresh suit..."

The conditions attached to the permission to bring a fresh suit after the withdrawal of the first suit may fall under different categories according to decided cases, (1) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs before a certain date specified in the order,

(4) 5 Pat. 306; 96 Ind. Cas. 942; A I R 1926 Pat. 409; 7 P L T 491.

(5) A I R 1927 Lah. 159; 99 Ind. Cas. 420.

(6) 33 M 258; 6 Ind. Cas. 288; 7 M L T 226.

(7) 47 M L J 646; 82 Ind. Cas. 499; A I R 1924 Mad. 877; 20 L W 642; (1924) M W N 887; 35 M L T 62.

(9) 118 Ind. Cas. 584; A I R 1929 All. 692; Ind. Rul. (1929) All. 188.

(3) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs before the institution of the second suit; and (3) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs without specifying the time of the payment. The present case falls under the second category as the condition imposed by the permission allowing the bringing of the second suit after the withdrawal of the first was to pay the costs before the institution of the second suit."

In the same case Baker, J., said :

"Under O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (1), the plaintiff has an absolute right to withdraw his suit if he likes, and the permission granted under O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (2), relates not to the withdrawal but to the right to bring a fresh suit. With respect, I am unable to follow the reasoning in Shital Prasad v. Gaya Prasad (2). I do not see how where permission is given to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a suit on condition of payment of costs, the former suit can be held to be pending until the costs are paid. In my opinion, the permission relates not to the withdrawal but to the bringing of the fresh suit, and with respect I agree with the view of the Madras High Court in Seshayya v. Subbayya (7), that the latter part of O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (2) (b) must be read as referring not to permission to withdraw a suit as well as permission to institute a fresh suit, but merely as allowing the Court to give permission to institute a fresh suit in place of the one which has been withdrawn. Inasmuch as the withdrawal of the suit does not require the permission of the Court, it must be taken that the first suit is withdrawn when the order is passed and that the permission granted refers only to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions. In my opinion, it would be inconvenient to consider a suit which has been withdrawn as still pending, and with respect, the reasoning in the Madras cases commends itself to me rather than the reasoning in the Calcutta case."

In the second case Boys, J., said :

"Once a plaintiff who has applied for the withdrawal of his suit has accepted the terms imposed by the Court, the case is withdrawn and is no longer pending and the plaintiff cannot institute a fresh suit without strictly complying with those terms."

With respect I am of opinion that the view taken by the Madras, Bombay and Allahabad High Courts is the correct view of the law. As pointed out by Baker, J., under r. 1, O. XXIII, a plaintiff can withdraw a suit as a matter of right without the permission of the Court; but if he does it, he is then precluded from filing a fresh suit on the same cause of action. If he wants to withdraw the suit and at the same time wants to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action, he must resort to r. 2. Under the said rule he must ask for permission to withdraw with liberty to file a fresh suit. The Court may grant the permission asked for on "such terms as it thinks fit." The terms may be of any kind. They might be as pointed out by Patkar, J. :

"(1) That the plaintiff shall pay the costs before a certain date specified in the order, or (2) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs before the institution of the second suit, or (3) that the plaintiff shall pay the costs without specifying the time of the payment."

If the terms imposed are as in illustrations (1) or (2), they then obviously refer not to the withdrawal of the suit but to the institution of a fresh suit. Once permission is granted to withdraw, the suit can no longer be regarded to be still existing. If in spite of the permission to withdraw being granted the suit were to be regarded as still pending, the position would be intolerable. The plaintiff would be able to keep the case pending as long as he likes and use it to the annoyance and prejudice of the defendant, and the defendant would be simply helpless. This, I do not think, could have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting r. 2, O. XXIII. The terms imposed in illustrations (1) and (2) are somewhat analogous to what cl. 10 of our Letters Patent and cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts, say. Where a part of the cause of action arises within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of any of the said High Courts, leave to institute a suit must first be obtained. Where leave is not first obtained and a suit is instituted, the suit is void. Leave to sue is a condition precedent to jurisdiction: De Souza v. Coles (10). Where therefore leave to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action as in the first case is granted on payment of costs on or before a specified date or before the institution of a fresh suit, payment must be made before the specified date or before the institution of a fresh suit. If no payment is made, the second suit is void ab initio. The payment of costs is a condition precedent to the institution of a fresh suit. Where no time is fixed for payment of costs then different considerations may arise. In the present case the order of Sharpe, J., definitely stated that the costs of the plaintiff should be paid before the institution of the second suit and as no costs were paid before the institution, the present suit is, in my opinion, void. For these reasons I dismiss the suit.

Suit dismissed.

PROVINCE OF SIND—APPELLANT

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 23, 4, 6, 3—Part of property ceasing to exist between notifications under ss. 4 and 6—Value of that part, if can be considered when making award—"Land" includes buildings, trees and standing crops.

No interest in favour of Govt. arises from the notification under s. 4, Land Acquisition Act. The identity of the property acquired is determined only by the notification under s. 6. If in the period between the two notifications a part of the property has ceased to exist, whether by act of the owner or by accident, the value of that part has not to be taken into consideration when making the award.

For the purposes of the Land Acquisition Act land includes buildings and also trees and standing crops. The definition is wider than that of immovable property under the T. P. Act.

F. A. against the order of the Assistant Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General for the Appellant.

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Respondent.

Weston, J.—This is an appeal under s. 54, Land Acquisition Act. The acquisition was of two small plots of land bearing Nos. 1363 and 1364 of areas 173 and 100 square feet respectively in the Ohodki Bazar, Hyderabad, and as the notification under s. 4 of the Act dated March 5, 1928, shows the purpose of the acquisition was the widening by the Hyderabad Municipality of the bazar and adjoining lanes. The two plots which adjoin were owned by opponent in the present appeal. At the time of the notification under s. 4 each plot contained a shop. Above the shop in No. 1364 was a room reached by an outside staircase, while above the shop in No. 1363 were outhouses forming appurtenances to the room over the first shop. The declaration under s. 6 of the Act was published on May 22, 1930, and some time in the year 1929 a fire took place in the premises, as a result of which the shop in No. 1363 with the outhouses over it was wholly destroyed except for two girders of the roof, while the shop in No. 1361 and the room over it suffered only slight damage, except that the staircase was destroyed. After the fire opponent applied to the Municipality under the Municipal Act for permission to reconstruct, but this permission was refused evidently because of the impending acquisition. When making his award the Land Acquisition Officer came to the conclusion that the normal rent realized from the property before the fire was Rs. 33 a month but he refused to value the property on this basis. He considered the fire to be an act of God for which the Municipality could not be held responsible, and that opponent was entitled only to the market value of the bare land and to the value of the materials upon it. From a comparison of sales of neighbouring plots, he estimated the value of the land of the two plots at Rs. 11-8-0 per square foot, and he awarded compensation at this rate. He made no estimate of the value of the materials. The amount of compensation allowed by him was Rs. 3,140 plus the statutory 15 per cent, or Rs. 3,611.

Opponent had claimed an amount of Rs. 12,500 as compensation and also loss of rent due to the refusal of the Municipality to permit him to reconstruct the buildings destroyed, and he claimed a reference to the District Court under s. 18, Land Acquisition Act. The Assistant Judge before whom the reference came held that under s. 23 of the Act, compensation was to be awarded on the market value of the land as it was on the date of the notification under s. 4, and that any loss accruing after this date was to be borne by the Municipality. He accepted the figure of rental value Rs. 33 per month given by the Land Acquisition Officer, and made a valuation on this basis and awarded a sum of Rs. 4,395 plus the statutory 15 per cent.

The present appeal filed by the Advocate-General purports to be filed on behalf of the Land Acquisition Officer, and a preliminary point is taken by the learned Advocate for the opponent that the appeal is not in proper form, as under s. 79, Civil P. C., an appeal can be filed only on behalf of the Province of Sind. But, in our view, the title of the appeal is not more than a clerical mistake, for para. 1 of the memorandum of appeal shows that it is an appeal filed on behalf of the Local Govt. sanctioned by formal resolution; and we have allowed a formal amendment of the title of the memorandum of appeal whereby "the Province of Sind" has been substituted for "the Land Acquisition Officer." The figure of Rs. 33 as normal rent of the properties before the fire, and the mode of calculation adopted by the Assistant Judge have not been challenged before us. But it is claimed by the learned Advocate-General that Govt. or the Municipality is not bound to pay for the property destroyed between the dates of the notifications under ss. 4 and 6, and this argument raises a question which, so far as we have been able to ascertain, has not been the subject of a reported decision by any of the High Courts in India.

Land is defined in s. 3 of the Act as including benefits to arise from land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. For the purposes of the Act therefore land includes buildings and also trees and standing crops. The definition is wider than that of immovable property under the T. P. Act. The scheme of the Land Acquisition Act may be described briefly as follows: There is first a notification under s. 4, published in the Official Gazette and at places in the locality, which announces that land in the locality is needed or is likely to be needed for a public purpose. It is usual in this notification to particularize the land needed or likely to be needed, but more than a general description does not appear essential. Following this publication, it is lawful for any officer authorized in this behalf to enter upon any land in this locality, to investigate the adaptability of the land for the public purpose, and to survey and set out the boundaries of the land proposed to be taken. If necessary for these investigations standing crops and fences may be removed, but all damage caused must be paid for promptly. It is open to persons interested in land notified under s. 4 to raise objections to the proposed acquisition, and objections so raised must be considered by the Collector and decided by the Local Govt.

If Govt. decide to proceed with the acquisition a notification or declaration is published under s. 6 that particular land is required for the public purpose, and the Local Govt. is empowered to acquire only after publication of this declaration. The Collector is then directed to take order for the acquisition, and, after causing the land to be marked out, if this has not already been done, the Collector issues public notice under s. 9 that claims to compensation may be made to him. This notice must contain particulars of the land required, and must be served upon the occupants of the land if any and upon all persons known or believed to be interested therein. Under s. 11 inquiry is made into any objections made to the measurement effected under s. 8, and the value of the land at the date of publication of the notification under s. 4, and an award is made declaring the true area of the land, the compensation which should be allowed and the persons entitled to receive it. Following the award under s. 11 the Collector may take possession, and upon his taking possession the land vests in Govt. free from all encumbrances.

Sections 23 and 24 lay down the lines upon which compensation is to be determined both by the Collector under s. 11 and by the Court on reference being made. Section 23 requires that the following shall be taken into consideration: (1) the market value of the land at the date of the notification under s. 4; (2) damage sustained by reason of the taking of any standing crop or trees at the time of the Collector's taking possession; (3), (4) and (5) damage sustained at the time of the Collector's taking possession by reason of severance of the land taken from other land of the person interested, injury to other property or expense incurred by forced change of residence, etc.; (6) bona fide damage resulting from diminution of profits of the land between the time of publication of the declaration under s. 6 and the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land.

Section 24 provides that certain circumstances shall not be taken into consideration. Of these it is only necessary to note; (4) any damage likely to be caused to the land acquired, after the date of the publication of the declaration under s. 6, by or in consequence of the use to which it will be put; and (7) any outlay or improvements on, or disposal of, the land acquired, commenced, made or effected without the sanction of the Collector after the date of the publication of the notification under s. 4. It has been urged for the opponent that in accordance with the Privy Council decision in Atmaram v. Collector of Nagpur (1) an owner of land is entitled to the value of the property at the time of expropriation, and it is claimed that expropriation therefore takes place at the time of the notification under s. 4. But the acquisition in this Nagpur case [Atmaram v. Collector of Nagpur] (1) was made in the year 1919 and at that time the Act provided that compensation was to be assessed on the value at the time of the declaration under s. 6 and not at the time of the notification under s. 4. We do not think this latter notification is analogous to the notice to treat given under the English Land Clauses Act, which is almost equivalent to a contract for sale; see Halsbury, Vol. 6, Edn. 2, at p. 84. Apart from the fact that in India an agreement for sale by itself creates no interest, we think it is clear from the sections of the Land Acquisition Act already set out, that no interest in favour of Govt. arises from the notification under s. 4. The identity of the property acquired is determined only on the declaration under s. 6 being made. It is not necessary that the property acquired should include all the property appearing in the notification under s. 4. Damage caused during the preliminary investigation following this notification has to be paid for immediately and has nothing to do with the award. Standing crops, trees and fences are land for the purposes of the Act, and if those existing at the time of the notification under s. 4 were necessarily to be included in the award, an owner would receive double payment if they were removed or damaged in the preliminary investigation. There is nothing in the Act which prevents the owner from removing crops after the notification under s. 4. Section 23 (6) shows that the owner is entitled to receive profits even up to the date when the Collector takes possession, and he is entitled to compensation for any diminution in these profits only after the date of the declaration under s. 6. In the present case if the owner had obtained the permission of the Municipality and had restored the buildings to their former condition before the declaration under s. 6, we are not able to understand how he could claim to recover his outlay from Govt. or the Municipality.

To take another example, if by flood an appreciable part of land notified under s. 4 was swept away before the declaration under s. 6, but it was considered necessary to proceed with the acquisition of the remainder, the description of the property in the two notifications might be in the same or similar terms. But Govt. would not be bound by any statement of area contained in the first notification, and would have to pay only for such property as was declared to be required by the notification under s. 6. We think, therefore, that although the date of the notification under s. 4 is the date at which values are to be considered, the identity of the property is determined by the notification under s. 6. If in the period between the two notifications a part of the property has ceased to exist, whether by act of the owner or by accident, the value of that part has not to be taken into consideration when making the award. In the present case the two notifications were identical in terms. Neither contained mention of the constructions on the land. But the property described as Survey Nos. 1363 and 1364 was very different in the year 1930 from that property as it existed in 1928. In 1928 there were two shops, an upper room and outhouses. In 1930 there were one shop and one upper room without a staircase.

On our conclusion that the proper compensation to be awarded is the value in 1928 of the property existing in 1930, this compensation will be something between the valuation of the Land Acquisition Officer and that of the Assistant Judge. The difference between these is Rs. 1,255 only, which supports the statement of the Land Acquisition Officer made in his award that the main value of the property lies in the land. We think it may be taken that roughly half the structures were destroyed. Although it was the larger shop which was burnt, on the first floor only outhouses and the staircase suffered, while the upper room remained. On this basis about Rs. 600 or half the difference of the two valuations would represent the value of the structure destroyed. Mr. Khanchand for opponent has very fairly conceded that Rs. 600 is a reasonable estimate of the cost of renewals necessary to bring the property to its condition before the fire, and we think that this may be taken as correct. The total compensation allowed by the Assistant Judge therefore must be reduced by Rs. 600 together with the statutory 15 per cent. on this amount, that is to say, by Rs. 690 and we modify the order of the learned Assistant Judge by reducing the amount allowed by this sum. As the appellant has only partly succeeded we make no order as to costs.

Easement—Light and air—Wall existing between two houses from beginning—Ancient apertures in it before other house is built, if can be closed—Agreement to treat lower part of wall as joint—If would extinguish easement of light and air through widows in upper wall.

The party, who wants the whole wall to be treated as a joint wall, must establish that there was a party wall in the beginning and that it had been subsequently raised by the other co-owner or that there was an agreement to treat the whole wall as joint. If the wall exists from the beginning and there are ancient apertures in it before the other house is built they cannot be blocked up unless there is an agreement to close them when the other house is raised, and the agreement to treat the lower part of the wall as joint would not have the effect of extinguishing the already acquired easement of light and air through the windows in the upper wall. 87 Ind. Cas. 977 (1) and 97 Ind. Cas. 691 (2), explained.

S. A. against the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 190 of 1935.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and V. N. Chhatrapati, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. A. Dhruva, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for declaration that the upper part of the wall of their house containing two apertures was of their exclusive ownership and for injunction restraining the defendant from blocking them up. The houses of the parties are situated adjacent to each other in Ahmedabad. The plaintiffs' father purchased their house in the year 1889, the sale deed of which contains a recital that the western wall of that house (the wall in dispute) was a joint wall only up to the roof of the house of Harilal, who was the defendant's predecessor-in-title, and above the height of the defendant's house it belonged exclusively to the plaintiffs' house. The defendant purchased his house in 1908, and it is recited in his sale deed that the eastern wall, which is the same as the western wall of the plaintiffs' house, was joint up to the roof of the house with the plaintiffs' house, but it is silent about the ownership of the upper part of the wall. It is material to note that the two apertures in the upper part of the wall in dispute were in existence before 1908, but there is no evidence of the particular time when they were put up. It is also material to note that there is no evidence that the height of the wall in dispute was originally only to the roof of the defendant's house and that it was subsequently raised by the plaintiffs or their predecessors. We have the fact that in 1889 when the plaintiffs' father purchased this house, the whole of the western wall was in existence as it is to-day.

The defendant intended to raise the height of his house and the plaintiffs apprehended that they would be deprived of the light and air which they had enjoyed through the two apertures in the upper part of their wall on account of the defendant raising his house. They, therefore, brought the present suit for the declaration and injunction as stated above. The defendant's case was that the whole wall to the west of the plaintiffs' house was joint wall, and that the plaintiffs therefore could not acquire any easement of light and air through any apertures in that joint wall.

Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit relying on the decision of this Court in Imambhai v. Rahimbhai (1). The main ground on which the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based is that it was probable that the upper part of the wall was constructed by the plaintiffs' father at his own expense and was also subsequently repaired by him, that in the absence of any agreement between the owners of the two houses that a part only was to be treated as joint and the rest exclusive, it must be taken on the principle of the decision in Imambhai v. Rahimbhai (1) that the whole was a joint wall, because where one of the two neighbouring owners raises a party wall, the other owner giving his consent or acquiescence, the raised portion of the wall assumes the same character as the old party wall on which it stands, and that neither party has a right to commit a trespass on the party wall so raised in height by opening windows in it.

It is true that the decision in Imambhai v. Rahimbhai (1), lays down the proposition that where a joint wall is raised by one co-owner with the consent or acquiescence of the other co-owner, the whole wall becomes joint. But I think that decision is to be applied where it is proved that the joint wall had been raised by one co-owner and that it had been raised with the consent or acquiescence of the other co-owner.

(1) 27 Bom. L.R. 503; 87 Ind. Cas. 977; A I R 1925 Bom. 373; 49 B 586.

Where these two facts are not proved, I do not think that that decision would have any application. It is conceivable that the whole wall might be in existence before the house of the other co-owner was built and when the latter began to build his house by the side of that wall, there might have been an agreement between the owners of the two houses to treat the lower part of the wall in so far as it extends to the roof of the new house as joint, so that both the co-owners might treat that part of the wall as a common wall and the remaining upper part of wall might be allowed to remain the exclusive property of the owner of the house of which it is a part. Such an agreement is possible in thickly populated cities where party walls are very common. The ground of the decision in Imambhai v. Rahimbhai (1), is that the wall must have been raised with the consent or acquiescence of the other co-owner. But there is no question of the consent or acquiescence of the other co-owner where there is no raising of the wall at all, and therefore the legal inference of the whole wall becoming joint would not arise in a case where there is no raising of a party wall but a part of the wall is to be treated as joint by agreement. The lower Court has recognized the possibility of such an agreement because it says: "Nor is there evidence of any agreement between the two owners relating to any part of the wall." The fact that the defendant's sale deed is silent about the ownership of the upper part of the wall although it does recite that the lower part was joint is more consistent with an agreement to treat the lower part only as joint than to treat the whole wall as joint. The party, who wants, the whole wall to be treated as a joint wall, must establish that there was a party wall in the beginning and that it had been subsequently raised by the other co-owner or that there was an agreement to treat the whole wall as joint. If the wall exists from the beginning and there are ancient apertures in it before the other house is built they cannot be blocked up unless there is an agreement to close them when the other house is raised, and the agreement to treat the lower part of the wall as joint would not have the effect of extinguishing the already acquired easement of light and air through the windows in the upper wall. The decision in Rajubhai v. Lalbhai (2), that easement of light and air through windows opened in a joint wall cannot be acquired by prescription would not therefore apply to the present case where the upper wall is not proved to be joint.

I think therefore, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed and the appeal allowed with costs throughout. The plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration and injunction as prayed for in respect of the easement of light and air.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 68, 71—S. 71 is exception to rule in s. 68—"Execution," in both sections, meaning of—Mortgage deed—Attesting witness turning hostile—Mortgagees can give evidence to prove attestation by others.

Section 71, Evi. Act, is one of the exceptions to the rule relating to proof of documents, required by law to be attested, which is laid down in s. 68, Evi. Act. The Rule in s. 68 is stringent rule and it cannot be relaxed except under circumstances provided for in the Act itself. One of such exceptional circumstances is to be found in s. 71.

The same meaning must be given to the word 'execution' in s. 71 as in s. 68, Evi. Act. In the case of a document which is not valid without attestation 'execution' not only means signing by the executant but it means and includes attestation as well which is the last of the series of acts necessary to give completeness and formal validity to the deed. Hence it would be necessary to call an attesting witness under s. 68 not merely to prove the signature of the executant but to prove attestation as well and if such witness turns hostile or refuses to prove execution or attestation other witnesses may be called for the same purpose. 70 Ind. Cas. 532 (1) and Hari Nath Ghose v. Nepal Chandra Rai (2), relied on.

A mortgagee being grantee of the instrument cannot witness the execution of the document made to himself nor can he take its acknowledgment, but when the attesting witnesses turns hostile he is certainly competent to give evidence not as an attesting witness but as a witness to prove attestation by others. The Legislature, has not left the fate of attested documents completely at the mercy of the attesting witnesses. The plaintiff's duty is at an end as soon as he calls one of the attesting witnesses under the provisions of s. 68, Evi. Act. If the witnesses turn hostile the plaintiff is not helpless and he is entitled to adduce other evidence as laid down in s. 71. This other evidence, would include his own evidence as well. 7 Ind. Cas. 735 (5), relied on. Seal v. Claridge (3) and 5 Ind. Cas. 539 (4), distinguished.

Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen and Amiya Prosad Maitra, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjee, J—This is an appeal on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and it arises out of a suit commenced by the plaintiff for enforcement of a mortgage bond. The facts lie within a short compass and are, for the most part, undisputed. The defendant No. 1 executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff on January 15, 1935 to secure a loan of Rs. 2,500. Shortly after this defendants Nos. 2 and 3 obtained a money decree against defendant No. 1 for a sum of about Rs. 1,299 in the Court of the Munsif at Jalpaiguri. The date of the decree is February 7, 1935. The decree was executed in money execution Case No. 58 of 1935 and the properties included in the mortgage bond were attached on February 22, 1935. The plaintiff mortgages preferred a claim but it was dismissed for default as he did not appear at the date of hearing. In the result the attached properties were sold and they were purchased by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for a sum of about Rs. 300 only. The plaintiff has now instituted the present suit and has prayed for sale of the mortgaged property and also for setting aside the order of dismissal for default passed in the claim proceeding. The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 only and their contentions substantially were of a three-fold character. In the first place, it was contended that the mortgage bond was not executed and attested according to law. In the second place, it was pleaded that the bond was a collusive and a benami affair and that it was executed in order to defraud the creditors of defendant No. 1 and was not supported by any consideration. The third ground raised was that the mortgaged property was a co-parcenary property belonging to a Mitakshara family of which defendant No. 1 was only one of the members. It was said that he had no authority to mortgage it and the transfer was totally void in law. All these defences were overruled by the trial Court which gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 the lower Appellate Court reduced the amount of interest from 18 per cent. to 10 per cent. per annum but on all other points affirmed the decision of the trial Judge. It is against this decision of the District Judge of Jalpaiguri that the present second appeal has been preferred.

Mr. Bagchi who appears for the appellants has argued before us in the first place that no mortgage decree could be given to the plaintiff inasmuch as the mortgage bond failed for want of proof of attestation. It appears that there were two witnesses to the mortgage bond both of whom were examined by the plaintiff. The attesting witnesses however turned hostile and although they admitted their signatures on the bond, they denied having seen the executant signing the deed or obtaining any acknowledgment from him. The Courts below were of the opinion that these witnesses were gained over by the present appellants and relying on the evidence of the plaintiff on the point of execution and attestation they decreed the plaintiff's suit. Mr. Bagchi argues that under s. 71, Evi. Act, when the attesting witnesses denied the execution of the document, attestation could not be proved by any other evidence and he has further argued in this connection that, at any rate, the plaintiff himself was an incompetent witness to speak to attestation.

As regards the first branch of the appellant's contention it may be pointed out that s. 71 is one of the exceptions to the rule relating to proof of documents, required by law to be attested, which is laid down in s. 68, Evi. Act. That section requires that execution of a document compulsorily attestable must be proved at least by one attesting witness if he is alive and subject to the processes of the Court. This is a stringent rule and whether it is based on the ground that the attester's testimony is the most desirable and trustworthy evidence, or that he being the witness agreed upon between the parties cannot be dispensed with, there is no doubt that the rule is mandatory and it cannot be relaxed except under circumstances provided for in the Act itself. One of such exceptional circumstances is to be found in s. 71, Evi. Act, which lays down that if the attesting witness who is called, denies execution or refuses to prove the document or turns hostile the execution may be proved by other evidence. Mr. Bagchi contends that under this section other evidence may be let in only to prove execution but not to prove attestation. This contention, in my opinion, is manifestly untenable. The same meaning must be given to the word 'execution' in s. 71 as in s. 68, Evi. Act. It has been held in several cases that in the case of a document which is not valid without attestation execution not only means signing by the executant but it means and includes attestation as well which is the last of the series of acts necessary to give completeness and formal validity to the deed. Arjun Chandra v. Kailas Chandra (1) and Hari Nath Ghose v. Nepal Chandra Rai (2). In this view it would be necessary to call an attesting witness under s. 68 not merely to prove the signature of the executant but to prove attestation as well and if such witness turns hostile or refuses to prove execution or attestation other witnesses may be called for the same purpose. If, on the other hand, we accept the view of Mr. Bagchi that execution does not include attestation the result, in my opinion, would be exactly the same. In that case s. 68 would not make it compulsory on the plaintiff to examine any attesting witness at all for the purpose of proving attestation and there would be no necessity to invoke s. 71 in case the attesting witness proves hostile. The first branch of Mr. Bagchi's contention therefore must fail.

In support of the other branch of contention Mr. Bagchi has relied upon certain decisions of this Court as well as of English Courts, namely Seal v. Claridge (3), Sarur Jigar Begum v. Barada Kanta (4) and Peari Mohan Maiti v. Sreenath Chandra Maiti (5). The proposition of law which has been enunciated in these cases cannot, in my opinion, be disputed but I think it does not support the present contention of Mr. Bagchi. It was laid down by Lord Selborne in Seal v. Claridge (3), referred to above, that :

"A person who is a party to the deed cannot be regarded as an attesting witness on the ground that if the person for whose benefit the instrument is executed is allowed to be an attesting witness, the very object of attestation namely the prevention of fraudulent malpractice, may be completely defeated."

Following this principle it has been held in Sarur Jigar Begum v. Barada Kanta (4), that when a document or a bond is executed by two persons in the presence of each it could not be said that each executant was an attesting witness in respect of the signature of the other. In Peari Mohan Maiti v. Sreenath Chandra Maiti (5), the document which was a mortgage bond, was attested by four persons none of whom was called as a witness and execution was sought to be proved by the evidence of defendant No. 2 alone who was one of the mortgagors and was also a scribe of the document. It was rightly held by this Court that defendant No. 2 could not under the law be brought within the category of an attesting witness even though he might have been present at the execution of the bond. Nor was his evidence the evidence of an attesting witness. It was pertinently pointed out by the learned Judge who decided that case that it was the duty of the plaintiff to examine at least one of the attesting witnesses under s. 68, Evi. Act. But if no such attesting witness was available it was then and then only that the evidence of defendant No. 2 could be received in proof of the execution and attestation of the bond. In my opinion, the same principle applies in its entirety to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The plaintiff was not certainly an attesting witness in the proper sense of the word and he was not competent to attest the deed. Being, grantee of the instrument he could not, I think, witness the execution of the document made to himself nor could he take its acknowledgment, but the attesting witnesses having turned hostile he was certainly competent to give evidence not as an attesting witness but as a witness to prove attestation by others. The Legislature, it seems, has not left the fate of attested documents completely at the mercy of the attesting witnesses. The plaintiff's duty is at an end as soon as he calls one of the attesting witnesses under the provisions of s. 68, Evi. Act. If the witnesses turn hostile the plaintiff is not helpless and he is entitled to adduce other evidence as laid down in s. 71. This other evidence, in my opinion, would include his own evidence as well. This branch of Mr. Bagchi's contention therefore must also be overruled. I agree with the Courts below in holding that the plaintiff's evidence does establish that the document was executed and attested.

The second point that was raised by Mr. Bagchi is to the effect that the Court of appeal below did not properly consider the case which the appellants wanted to make under s. 53, T. P. Act. I do not think there is any substance in this contention,

It is true that it was stated generally in the written statement that the mortgage was a benami affair the object of which was to defraud the creditors of defendant No. 1 but defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not certainly attempt to make any case under s. 53, T. P. Act, and it is very doubtful whether they were competent in law to make any such case in this form. The point was not set out specifically in the pleadings nor made the subject-matter of an issue and the question was not raised in either of the Courts below. In these circumstances this contention must also fail. The third ground put forward by Mr. Bagchi relates to the question as to whether the property mortgaged belonged to defendant No. 1 or it was a co-parcenary property belonging to a Mitakshara family of which defendant No. 1 was only a member. This contention, in my opinion, has been concluded by the findings of fact concurrently arrived at by both the Courts below that the other co-parcener whose claims were set up passed out of the family by adoption and the property did belong exclusively to defendant No. 1.

The last ground of the appellants relates to the rate of interest. The stipulation in the bond undoubtedly was for interest at the rate of 18 per cent. compound per annum. The lower Appellate Court in exercise of its powers under the Ben. Money-lenders Act reduced it to 10 per cent. compound. We think that having regard to the circumstances of this case it will meet the ends of justice if we allow the plaintiff mortgagee interest at the rate of 8 per cent. simple up to the date of the preliminary decree and then at the rate of 6 per cent. simple from that date up to the date of the expiry of the period of grace and also for the subsequent period till the mortgage money is realized. Subject to the modification as regards interest as mentioned above the appeal is dismissed with costs.

tion—Possibility that accused might have some defence, is ground for dismissal.

A complaint under s. 499, I. P. O., which is made on oath cannot be dismissed on the ground that there is a possibility that the accused might have some defence to the complaint, if true. The Magistrate should direct his attention to ascertain whether there is any reason for disbelieving the complaint.

Mr. A. B. N. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Raj Kishore Prasad and S. R. Ghosal, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application against an order of the Sessions Judge of Shahabad declining to interfere with an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Buxar refusing to prosecute one Budheshwar Dubey on a charge of defamation. It appears that prior to the present proceedings there was a report by the Police with regard to allegations made by Budheshwar Dubey against the present complainant. The Magistrate then observed that Budheshwar's allegations appeared to be in the nature of blackmail but that he would not take criminal proceedings but merely issue a warning to Budheshwar not to commit the offence again. The complainant's allegation is that Budheshwar had persisted in repeating the defamatory allegations of which he complained and should therefore be prosecuted. Among other reasons for not prosecuting Budheshwar the Magistrate has stated that it is possible that Budheshwar will be able to shelter himself behind two of the explanations to s. 499, I. P. O. Whether he will be successful in that is immaterial. In the present case all that the Magistrate should have directed his attention to was to ascertain whether there was any reason for disbelieving the complaint which was made on oath and not whether there was some possibility that the petitioner might have some defence to the complaint if true. I will therefore set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate dismissing the complaint and direct him to summon the accused person and to proceed with the trial.

In re OHOUTHMAL GOLAPCHAND—

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 24 (1)—Firm of partners dealing in shares holding opening stock of shares valued at certain amount, at beginning of accounting year—Stocks and shares always valued at cost—Firm dissolved at end of accounting year and shares allotted to partners at market value on date of dissolution—Difference between opening stock valuation at cost and valuation at market rate on dissolution of firm held could not be claimed as loss.

A business firm which is liable to be assessed to income-tax is under an obligation to maintain a system of accounts with regularity and it is not permitted to change the system except upon a proper application being made to the income-tax authorities in that behalf. So also every tax year is a self-contained period and the profits earned or the loss sustained either before that year or after that year are not at all relevant for the purpose of an assessment relating to a particular year. 137 Ind. Cas. 772 (2), relied on.

The assessee a firm of partners were doing business in shares and held at the beginning of the accounting year an opening stock of shares valued at certain cost. Their stock of shares had always been valued at cost. During the year there had been no transaction in shares. At the end of the accounting year their partnership was dissolved and shares were allotted to the partners at the valuation based on the market value of the shares on the date of the allotment. The assessee in the year of assessment claimed to deduct the difference between the opening stock valuation at cost and the valuation at market rate on the date of allotment of shares to the partners, as loss.

Held, that the assessee was not entitled to do so because, as the stock was at all previous times valued at cost price and was brought into the balance sheet at the beginning of the year at its cost price, then, when it was taken out of the assets of the company, it also should be valued in the same way at the cost price. The system of valuation which the assessee contended for had the effect of bringing into the accounts of the year a loss in respect of this stock which had not occurred during the year. In re Tata Industrial Bank Ltd. (4), referred to.

Facts.—The assessment in question is for the year 1936-37 and was made on the income of the accounting year 1922 Ram Navami which ended on March 30, 1936. During the accounting year the assessee, Messrs. Ohouthmal Golapchand, were a firm of four partners with equal shares constituted under a partnership deed, dated May 1, 1933. By a deed of agreement, dated January 8, 1936 the partners agreed to dissolve the firm on and from March 30, 1936, (Chait Sudi 8, 1933) "and in the meantime to partition assets of the partnership in so far as they are collected in equal shares and complete the partition." A copy of this agreement is attached as annexure A. (It is dated January 8, 1935 but this is admitted to be a mistake for January 8, 1936.) The partition was completed on March 29, 1936.

For the 1936-37 assessment, the assessee, who had business in piece-goods, jute, money-lending, silver and shares and had also income from interest on securities and dividends returned against the head "business, trade, etc.," loss of Rs. 16,285-6-3, and against the head dividends from companies, income of Rs. 1,389-12-0 thus returning a total loss of Rs. 14,895-10-3. The loss shown against the head "business" included an alleged loss of Rs. 33,365 in the share account. The facts regarding this share account are that the assessee were doing business in shares and held at the beginning of the accounting year an opening stock of shares valued at cost Rs. 85,331. Their stock of shares had always been valued at cost. During the year there had been no transaction in shares. On March 9, 1936, in the course of the partition above-mentioned the shares were allotted to the four partners at a valuation agreed upon by the partners. The allotment was as follows: (Small amounts of cash were paid to make up the differences in the allotment):

	Rs.
Raughlal Sohanlal	... 13,415
Sujanmull Punamchand	... 12,904
Hazarimull Sumermull	... 12,964
Melapchand Jatanlal	... 12,683

Total Rs. 51,966

Rupees 33,365 which was the difference between this figure and the opening stock valuation, Rs. 85,331, was claimed as a loss in the assessment. The Income-tax Officer refused the claim on the ground that if there were any loss it was a capital loss in distribution of assets. A copy of the assessment order is attached as annexure B. The status of the assessee for assessment purposes was also in question. Hitherto they had been assessed as a registered firm (s. 26-A, Income Tax Act), and they applied orally for renewal of the registration for this assessment. The Income-tax Officer when making the assessment on December 9, 1936 refused to renew the registration on the ground that the partnership constituted by the deed of May 1, 1933 had been dissolved and no fresh deed had been executed. He made the assessment on an unregistered firm. On appeal the Assistant Commissioner upheld both the disallowance of the claim for loss in shares and the rejection of the application for renewal of registration. Copies of these appellate orders are attached as annexures O-1 and O-2. Being dissatisfied with these orders the assessee has asked me to refer two questions (attached as annexure 'D') to the High Court. I refer the following questions: (a) whether on the facts of this case the assessee was entitled to claim a loss in shares by valuing the shares at their market price on the date on which they were divided up amongst the partners? (b) whether the Income-tax Officer was justified in refusing to renew the registration of the firm?

With regard to the first question, the transaction was merely a distribution of assets and not a transaction in the course of business from which a revenue profit or loss could result. And the figure of loss arrived at is purely fictitious and arises from a change in the assessee's method of accounting which they are not entitled to make. No loss was in fact incurred on these shares and according to the assessee's method of accounting there could be no loss until the shares were sold. The division of the shares amongst the partners was certainly not a sale. In my opinion therefore the first question should be answered in the negative. With regard to the question of registration, Income-tax r. 6 requires an application for renewal of registration to be accompanied by a certificate that the constitution of the firm as specified in the instrument of partnership remains unaltered. No such certificate was filed in this case nor could it have been since the firm was dissolved at the time of the oral application for registration. And the Income-tax Officer could not renew the registration of a firm which had ceased to exist. In my opinion, therefore, the second question should be answered in the affirmative. I append to this statement of case copies of the following in addition to those already referred to in the body of the statement: (1) Grounds of appeal in respect of the assessment—Annexure E. (2) Ground of appeal in respect of the question of registration—Annexure 'F'. (3) Application under s. 66 (2) in respect of the assessment—Annexure 'G'. (4) Application under s. 66 (2) in respect of the question of registration—Annexure 'H'.

Mr. Bose, for the Assessee.

Mr. R. B. Pal, for the Commissioner.

Derbyshire, C. J.—The facts in this case are set out in the case and in annexure A, dated January 8, 1936. The first question is whether on the facts of this case the assessee was entitled to claim a loss on shares by valuing the shares at their market price on the date on which they were divided up amongst the partners? It has been contended by the assessee that these shares were sold by the partnership to the outgoing partners, and not partitioned as the case states. The case, in my opinion, is in accordance with the facts and is conclusive on that point. The shares in question were acquired sometime previous to the beginning of the accounting year—we are not told how long previous. It is common ground that they were acquired at a price higher than the price ruling on March 8, or March 30, 1936. They had been shown in the books of the partnership and carried forward from year to year at the cost price. The assessee says that there was properly a loss on the disposal of those shares and that that loss was the difference between the cost price and the price at which they were taken over which is alleged to be the market price on March 8, 1936. The assessee says that that loss they are entitled to set off against gains on other parts of the business during the accounting year.

We are not told what the market value of these shares was at the beginning of the accounting year in question. It is only the loss during the year that can be set off against other gains during the year. We do not know what loss, if any, occurred on these shares during the accounting year in question. It was pointed out by Lord Buckmaster in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency v. Allahabad New Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. (1) at p. 23 where the question of the valuation of stocks in relation to the ascertainment of the profits of a business for a particular year was discussed that "Section 13, Income Tax Act, 1922, says: 'income, profits and gains shall be computed for the purposes of ss. 10, 11 and 12 in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee.'"

(1) 57 I A 21, (23); 121 Ind. Cas. 543; A I R 1930 P C 56; 54 B 213; Ind. Rul. (1930) P C 79; (1930) A L J 76; 31 L W 297; 34 C W N 292; 32 Bom. L R 352; 51 O L J 128; 58 M L J 204; (1930) M W N 313 (P O).

He also says :

"The method of introducing stock into each side of a profit and loss account for the purpose of determining the annual profits is a method well understood in commercial circles and does not necessarily depend upon exact trade valuations being given to each article of stock that is so introduced. The one thing that is essential is that there should be a definite method of valuation adopted which should be carried through from year to year, so that in case of any deviation from strict market values in the entry of the stock at the close of one year it will be rectified by the accounts in the next year."

In my opinion, as this stock was at all previous times valued at cost price and was brought into the balance sheet at the beginning of the year at its cost price, then, when it was taken out of the assets of the company, it also should be valued in the same way at the cost price. The system of valuation which the assessee contend for would, it appears to me, have the effect of bringing into the accounts of the year a loss in respect of this stock which had not occurred during the year. For these reasons I am of the opinion, that Question (a) should be answered in the negative. As to Question (b) the partnership in question had come to an end on March 30, 1936, by virtue of the deed of dissolution. The deed provides that the partnership agreement shall cease on that date and "shall not continue for any reason whatsoever." Therefore, on December 9, 1936, when the Income-tax Officer refused to renew registration of the firm, the firm no longer existed in any way and could not be deemed to use the words of the deed, to "continue for any reason whatsoever": that includes continuation for purposes of registration under the Income Tax Act. In my opinion, Question (b) must be answered in the affirmative. The Commissioner is entitled to the taxed costs of this Court including the fees of two Advocates.

Costello, J.—The assessment with which we are concerned was made on December 9, 1936 the year of assessment being 1936-37 that is to say it was made in respect of the period from March 31, 1935, to March 30, 1936, which is the Ram Navami year of the firm. The assessee are described as an unregistered firm and there were four partners each of them having one-fourth share in the firm. The assessment was made under s. 23 (3) read with s. 25 (3). The assessee had submitted a return in response to notices under s. 23 (2) and s. 22 (4). In that return in respect of their share business or as it was called in the assessment "shares account" they have claimed to be allowed to deduct a loss of Rs. 33,365 said to have been incurred in respect of the sale of certain shares which constituted part of their stock-in-trade. It has been argued before us that the matter has to be determined with reference to s. 24 (1), Income Tax Act, which says:

"Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year under any of the heads mentioned in s. 6, he shall be entitled to have the amount of loss set off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year."

The contention put forward on behalf of the assessee was that the shares in question had originally cost Rs. 85,331 and that was the figure which had appeared in their accounts apparently on more than one occasion, and certainly at the opening of the accounting year—the tax year 1932. It was then said that upon the dissolution or rather, in contemplation of a dissolution of the partnership as provided for in an agreement dated January 8, 1936, these shares were disposed of (for the moment I use a neutral word) and had produced the sum of Rs. 51,966 showing the difference between that sum and the cost price—a sum of Rs. 33,365 which I have mentioned. The case as originally put forward by the assessee is to be found set forth in the decision—the appellate order and ground of decision as it is called—of the Assistant Commissioner given on February 12, 1937, in which he said :

"The learned Pleader has tried to argue that there was an actual sale of the shares as between the partners. I am afraid that I cannot accept this contention, for, as a matter of fact the books show that the partners' accounts were debited with the value of the shares allocated to each of them and that there was a payment of small amount of ready cash to make up the small difference which arose from the distribution of the shares."

The learned Assistant Commissioner further said :

"The reason for the Income-tax Officer not allowing the loss on shares, I find, was due to the fact that he found that there were no actual sales of shares in the year of account, and that the business having been discontinued, the assets were distributed among the partners who received an allocation of shares which were priced at the ruling market rate."

Apparently, the assessee endeavoured to induce the Commissioner of Income-tax to put a question of law before this Court in a form which would suggest that there had actually been a sale of the shares in question, because we find that the question of law dated April 26, 1937, as formulated by the assessee was as follows :

"Where the partners of an assessee firm having share business agreed on January 8, 1936, to dissolve the firm on March 30, 1936, and in the meantime realize the assets thereof and divide the proceeds amongst themselves and where for that purpose the stock of shares was sold by the firm at market rate resulting in a loss of Rs. 33,365 as the market rate was much lower than the cost price, whether in assessing the firm the Income tax Officer is competent in law to disallow such loss as capital loss only arising out of alleged allocation of shares as stranger buyers having not been obtained on suitable terms for depressed market the shares were sold to the four new firms of the families of the partners started after the said date January 8, 1936:

This seems to indicate to my mind that the assesseees in some way anticipated that they would find themselves in difficulties if they came before this Court in the position of having to found an argument upon a set of facts which included in it a statement that the shares were actually divided up or shared out or distributed amongst the four persons who originally composed the partnership. It is obvious, to my mind, that the question formulated by the assesseees was intended to suggest, and in fact did suggest, that there had been an actual sale of the shares to third parties in the shape of new firms and that the old partners had then distributed amongst themselves the proceeds of that sale. We find however that even as far back as the assessment to which I have already referred, the Income tax Officer himself took an entirely different view and he said commenting on the shares account:

"There was no sale in the year of account. The business has been closed and assets have been transferred to the partners at alleged market price. Shares were purchased at a time when prices were rather high and the assessee has all along valued his closing stocks at cost price. Due to over-valuation of the opening stock for the same reason the assessee is claiming losses as above. It is due entirely to depreciation in the capital value of shares held and as there was no sale I disallow the claim."

When the assesseees had succeeded in persuading the Commissioner of Income-tax to put the matter before this Court, in the case which the Commissioner put forward we find it stated:

"The facts regarding this share account are that the assesseees were doing business in shares and held at the beginning of the accounting year an opening stock of shares valued at cost Rs. 85,331. Their stock of shares had always been valued at cost. During the year there had been no transaction in shares. On March 9, 1936 in the course of the partition above mentioned the shares were allotted to the four partners at a valuation agreed upon by the partners."

Then he sets out the values assigned to the shares and explains that small amounts of cash are paid to make up the differences in the allotment. He had previously stated that the partition was completed on March 29, 1936. It may be said at the outset that there can be no doubt that a business firm which is liable to be assessed to income-tax is under an obligation to maintain a system of accounts with regularity and it is not permitted to change the system except upon a proper application being made to the income-tax authorities in that behalf. We find it laid down in para. 51 (ii) of the Income-tax Manual as follows:

"The cases in which an assessee desires to change his accounting system should be rare and where such a request is made, the Income-tax Officer in considering it should, as in the similar case of a demand for a change in the 'previous year,' if he is prepared to allow the change, take steps to secure that no profits escape taxation on account of the change. While s. 13 leaves it to the discretion of the Income-tax Officer to decide whether a particular system of accounting should be accepted or whether a change in the system of accounting should be allowed, the discretion of the Income-tax Officer in this matter can be questioned in the course of an appeal against an assessment under s. 30, that is, it may be made one of the grounds of appeal in contesting the assessment of the profits."

In the case now before us no application was made to change the accounting system and, in fact, no change was made. We find, as I have already stated, that at the beginning of the tax year 1932 (Ramnavami) the value of these shares was put in the accounts of the firm as at the cost price. There is another rule which is of great importance in a matter of this kind and that is that every tax year is a self-contained period and the profits earned or the loss sustained either before that year or after that year are not at all relevant for the purpose of an assessment relating to a particular year. In that connection I must briefly call attention to the case in Commissioner of Income-tax, Central Provinces and Berar v. Sir S. M. Chitnavis (2), in which at p. 296 Lord Russell of Killowen, delivering the opinion of the Board, said:

"Although the Act nowhere in terms authorises the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction is necessarily allowable. What are chargeable to income-tax in respect of a business are the profits and gains of a year; and in assessing the amount of the profits and gains of a year account must necessarily be taken of all losses incurred, otherwise you would not arrive at the true profits and gains. But the losses must be losses incurred in that year. You may not, when setting out to ascertain the profits and gains of one year, deduct a loss which had, in fact, been incurred before the commencement of that year. If you did you would not arrive at the true profits and gains."

of the year. For the purpose of computing yearly profits and gains each year is a separate self-contained period of time in regard to which profits earned or losses sustained before its commencement are irrelevant."

Then in a subsequent paragraph at page 297* Lord Russell said:

"Whether a debt is a bad debt, and, if so, at what point of time it became a bad debt, are questions which in their Lordships' view are questions of fact to be decided in the event of dispute by the appropriate tribunal, and not by the ipse dixit of any one else."

Lastly at p. 299* the noble and learned Lord said:

"In their Lordships' opinion the question which was referred to the Court in relation to bad debts should have been answered as follows: the assessee has no 'option' of declaring debts bad. Whether a debt is bad, and when it became bad, are questions of fact to be determined in case of dispute not by the assessee or by the exercise of any 'option' on his part, but by the appropriate tribunal upon a consideration of all relevant and admissible evidence....."

In the same way, in my opinion, it follows that it is not open to an assessee by his own ipse dixit to decide that a particular transaction entails loss of a kind which may be set off against profits or gains made in respect of other transactions. In this particular instance these assesseees were asking the Court to hold that because the shares in question were bought at one price and then dealt with on the basis of another and lower price, that was necessarily a business loss of the kind contemplated by s. 24. As it was the practice of this firm, or apparently was the practice to put in the value of that part of their stock-in-trade which consisted of shares, equally with the rest of their stock-in-trade at cost price at the end of one accounting year and at the opening of the next, it follows from what I have already said, and the authority to which I have referred, that the cost price of the shares must be taken as the starting point or, as I called it in the course of argument, the datum line for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there has been an increase or a decrease in the value of the shares in question.

It is quite certain and, indeed, it is clear law that if a trader puts into his accounts one value at the end of any accounting year, he must start his next year's accounts with precisely the same value. In this connection I would mention the case in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Chengalvaraya Chetty (3). Having put in the value of these shares as at cost and being in the position that they were not able, and in fact did not seek to change the system of accounting in this particular case, we must take the cost price of these shares as the starting point. It seems to me therefore that if there had been any real sale of these shares in the course of the year 1992 (Ramnavami), it might have been open to the assesseees to say that it was between the cost and the sale price that there was this difference of Rs. 33,665. But there never was a sale. It is quite obvious, and in any event we must accept the statement of facts put before us by the learned Commissioner, that there was no sale, but what was loosely called a 'partition'. I say loosely because 'partition' in this country is a technical expression which has in it implicit number of legal ideas and legal consequences which are not applicable in a case of the kind we are now considering. Therefore, I prefer to say that there was a division of these shares and that division took place, as the learned Commissioner states, on March 9, 1936. The partners for their own purposes chose to say that they would take over the shares or rather their portion of the shares. What they said as regards a loss seems to me to be definitely an ipse dixit. They have sought to take credit to themselves—credit in its commercial sense—for the difference between the buying and the selling price based upon a valuation which they themselves had chosen to put upon these shares and in regard to which, as far as one can see, there was no evidence as to its accuracy. In those circumstances, the matter seems to me to fall well within the ambit of the decision in In re Tata Industrial Bank Ltd. (4), the head-note of which runs as follows:

"A banking concern having been assessed for income-tax on profits amounting to Rs. 12,54,130 it claimed to deduct from the taxable profits a sum of Rs. 2,98,000 being the amount of depreciation on war bonds and securities belonging to the bank arrived at by comparing the market rates with the valuations in the books of the bank."

That seems to me very much the same kind of operation as was performed or was sought to be performed by the assesseees in the present instance. In the course of his judgment Macleod, C. J., discussed the case on which Mr. Bose relied in his argument before us, namely that in In re Spanish Prospecting Co., Ltd (5), where at p. 98 Fletcher-Moulton L. J. said:

"The word 'profits' has in my opinion a well-defined legal meaning, and this meaning coincides with the fundamental conception of profits in general parlance, although in mercantile phraseology the word may at times bear meanings indicated by the special context which deviate in some respects from this fundamental signification. 'Profits' implies a comparison between the state of a business at two specific dates usually separated by an interval of a year. The fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made by the business during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the assets of the business at the two dates."

(4) (1921) 1 I T O 152.

(5) (1911) 1 Ch. 92, (98) 80 L J Ch. 210; 103 L T 609; 18 Manson 191; 55 S J 63; 27 T L R 76.

At p. 99* the learned Lord Justice said:

"We start, therefore, with this fundamental definition of profits, namely if the total assets of the business at the two dates be compared, the increase which they show at the later date as compared with the earlier date (due allowance of course being made for any capital introduced into or taken out of the business in the meanwhile) represents in strictness the profits of the business during the period in question."

Now, Mr. Bose at the opening of his argument invited our attention to that definition. It seems to me that in the present instance the assesses have overlooked the fact that they were taxed in respect of trading operations for the period beginning on March 31, 1935 and ending on March 30, 1936. The "self-contained period" referred to by Lord Russell in the passage which I quoted earlier in this judgment was the period between those particular dates. In other words, before the Ramnavami year 1992 had come to an end, part of the assets of the business had been taken out of the business, namely these particular shares which, as we have seen, were distributed amongst the four partners on March 9, 1936. That is one way of looking at it and upon that view of the matter there could be no question of loss, because you cannot compare anything that happened when the shares were disposed of as against the cost price of those shares as appearing in the opening stock account at the beginning of the Ramnavami year 1992. I entirely agree with the view put forward by my Lord the Chief Justice with regard to that.

Looking at the matter from the other aspect which I have discussed, it seems to me that the assesses were not entitled to say "we have shown the value of these shares year after year as cost price: we now propose to show the value of them as at the market price." To state the matter succinctly, I agree that if these shares were put into the accounts of cost they ought to have been taken out of the accounts at cost. It follows therefore that the first question propounded for the consideration of this Court should be answered in the negative. I need say very little with regard to the second question. In my opinion, merely to state that the application was made in December and the partnership had been dissolved, and irrevocably dissolved, as on March 30, 1936 is quite sufficient to indicate that the answer to that question should be in the affirmative.

A. Answered accordingly.

RESPONDENT

Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), s. 45—"Recovered," meaning explained—Decision by Revenue Court that cess was recoverable and claim made for its recovery was within limitation—Decision, if can be set aside by Civil Court—Practice—New plea—Appeal.

The word "recovered" which is in s. 45, Ben. Cess Act means "sued for" or "recovered by means of an action."

The cess which is payable under the Act may be recovered either under the Public Demands Recovery Act or by a suit. The question whether cess was recoverable in a case under s. 45 of the Act is one to be decided by the Revenue Court which issued the certificate, and if that Court has decided rightly or wrongly that the cess was recoverable and the claim made for the recovery was not barred by limitation, a suit cannot be entertained in a Civil Court to set aside that decision. A Civil Court can entertain a suit only if the order of the Revenue Court is without jurisdiction and not because the decision pronounced by the Court is not correct.

The plaintiff cannot be allowed to abandon the case put forward by him before the lower Courts and set up a new case in the High Court.

L. P. A. from the decision of Mr. Justice Verma, dated January 23, 1939.

Mr. S. K. Mitra, for the Appellant.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Respondent.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of Varma, J., in a second appeal. It appears that plaintiff is the Receiver of an estate which owns certain coal-mines in Dhanbad. In 1929-30 a certificate was issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act to recover certain arrears of cess payable by the estate and a sum of Rs. 52 was realized in May, 1930. In 1934-35 a fresh proceeding was started to realize the balance, and the plaintiff was obliged to deposit a sum of Rs. 438-23. Thereafter, he brought the present suit to recover this amount on the allegation that the assessment of cess was wholly illegal and the proceedings by which the sum of Rs. 438-2-3 was realized from him was without jurisdiction.

The suit was resisted by the Secretary of State on various grounds and the trial Court as well as the first Court of Appeal held that the suit could not succeed. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal which was heard by Varma, J. In this appeal the points raised by him were, first, that the proceedings of 1934-35 were without jurisdiction inasmuch as two certificates could not be issued in respect of the same demand; and, secondly, that the certificate Court could not under s. 45, Cess Act, recover the said amount more than three years after it became due. Both these points have been decided against the plaintiff by Varma, J., and hence this appeal under the Letters Patent. As to the point that two certificates were issued in regard to the same demand, Varma, J. observed as follows:

"Now, with regard to the first part of the argument I must say at once that in spite of the strenuous efforts of Mr. Mitra he has not been able to refer to any materials on the record which could satisfy me that two certificates were actually issued, and although I agree with the proposition of law that two certificates could not be issued for the same period, on the question of fact this part of his contention must fail."

Notwithstanding these observations, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that in fact two certificates were issued, and learned Counsel for the appellant pressed us to allow him an opportunity to produce certain papers as additional evidence to establish his contention. Now, the judgments of the first two Courts clearly show that the contention raised on behalf of the appellant is an entirely new one. From the judgment of the learned Munsif it appears that one of the issues framed in the suit was "whether the certificate proceedings of 1934-35 were illegal, without jurisdiction and barred by limitation. In discussing this suit, the learned Munsif has set out the case put forward before him on behalf of the plaintiff in these words:

"His next contention is that there was certificate of non-payment issued against him which was put into execution in certificate execution case No. 107-R. O. 1929-30, that that case was struck off in 1930 and then more than three years after, in 1934 a fresh execution for recovery of the unpaid amount was instituted by the certificate officer of Dhanbad against him under case No. 171-R. O. of 1934-35; that this latter case was clearly time-barred...."

From this it is quite clear that what the appellant contended before the Munsif was not that a second certificate had been issued in 1934-35 but that the execution proceedings of that year were time-barred inasmuch as they were instituted more than three years after the first execution proceeding. The learned District Judge also states in his judgment that the proceedings of 1934-35 were attacked before him on the ground that they were time-barred and the plea of limitation was "based on an assertion of fact viz. that the previous certificate case of 1929-30 was struck off in May 1930, so that more than three years elapsed between the disposal of that certificate case and the filing of the next."

Thus, it seems to me that neither before the Munsif nor before the District Judge it was seriously contended by the plaintiff that there were two successive certificates for the same dues. On the other hand, it appears that one of the main points urged on behalf of the plaintiff was that the proceedings of 1934-35 were execution proceedings and they were barred by limitation inasmuch as they were started more than three years after the termination of the first execution proceedings. In my view, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to abandon the case put forward by him before the Munsif and the District Judge and set up a new case in this Court. I am also of the opinion, that the plaintiff cannot be allowed to produce any additional evidence at this stage. The power of this Court to admit additional evidence is limited by the provisions of O. XXI. r. 27, Civil P. C. This rule provides, amongst other things, first, that additional evidence shall be allowed only when the Appellate Court requires any such evidence to be produced to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause; and secondly, that additional evidence shall not be allowed to be adduced unless the party who wishes to adduce it satisfies the Appellate Court that such evidence, notwithstanding exercise of due diligence was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree or order under appeal was passed or made. The present case does not satisfy any of these conditions. On the other hand it appears to me that the plaintiff could have very well produced the documents which he is trying to produce now in the Courts which had to deal with the facts of the case. It is not the case of the plaintiff that these documents, notwithstanding exercise of due diligence, were not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him when the matter was before the trial Court or the lower Appellate Court. The first point raised by the appellant must fail. The next point urged on behalf of the appellant is that the proceeding of 1934-35 was without jurisdiction inasmuch as under s. 45, Cess Act, the arrears of cess cannot be recovered more than three years after they became due. Section 45, Cess Act, runs as follows :

"If any instalment of local cess or part thereof payable to the Collector shall not be paid within fifteen days from the date on which the same becomes due, amount of such instalment or part thereof may be recovered at any time within three years after it became due, with interest, &c...."

I entirely agree with the view expressed by Varma, J. that the word "recovered" which is in the section means "sued for" or "recovered by means of an action." In my opinion, this is the only readable meaning which can be attributed to the expression. The cess which is payable under the Act may be recovered either under the Public Demands Recovery Act or by a suit. If the meaning attributed by the plaintiff to the expression is the meaning which the expression was intended to convey, it follows that in many cases cess will become irrecoverable, because the proceedings instituted to recover it may be delayed for reasons beyond the control of the plaintiff. In my opinion, it would be wholly unreasonable to construe the expression in the manner in which the plaintiff asks us to construe it. There is also a further answer to the plaintiff's contention. The question whether cess was recoverable in this case under s. 45 of the Act was one to be decided by the Revenue Court which issued the certificate, and if that Court has decided rightly or wrongly that the cess was recoverable and the claim made for the recovery was not barred by limitation, a suit cannot be entertained in a Civil Court to set aside that decision. A Civil Court can entertain a suit only if the order of the Revenue Court is without jurisdiction and not because the decision pronounced by the Court is not correct. In my opinion, no question of jurisdiction arises in this case and the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed. I would therefore uphold the decision under appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's appeal with costs.

Harrles, C. J.—I agree.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V. of 1920, s. 37 (1)— Insolvency annulled—Court, if can proceed to distribute assets of insolvent among creditors—Proper procedure

Section 37 (1), Prov. Insol. Act does not allow an Insolvency Court on annulling an insolvency to proceed to distribute the assets of the insolvent among any of the creditors. The distribution of assets is a proceeding in insolvency, and by annulling the insolvency it means that the Court will not proceed with the insolvency. Therefore, the course open to the Court is either to return the property to the insolvent on condition that he furnishes security which will make it available to the creditors or for some other reason the Court may direct the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver to vest in a certain person. The words "to vest in such person" do not mean distribution of assets among the creditors. 145 Ind. Cas. 320 (1) and 134 Ind. Cas. 848 (2), followed, 141 Ind. Cas. 836 (3) and 153 Ind. Cas. 993 (4), not followed.

Misc. A. against the order of the District Judge, Bara Banki, dated March 1, 1937.

Mr. D. K. Seth, for the Appellant.

Mr. Karta Krishna for Mr. G. D. Khare, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This miscellaneous civil appeal arises out of an order dated March 1, 1937, passed by the learned District Judge of Bara Banki.

Ram Nath was adjudicated an insolvent on May 13, 1933, and the Court fixed one year from the date of the order of adjudication as the period within which he should apply for his discharge. The insolvent did not apply for his discharge within the time fixed, and he was served with a notice to show cause why the order of adjudication should not be annulled. This was served on him on December 14, 1936, but he did not appear, and the learned District Judge passed the following order:

"I direct that the order of adjudication shall be annulled. Certain sale proceeds are with the Receiver. These shall vest in the Receiver."

The Receiver on February 19, 1937, reported to the learned District Judge that he had no sale proceeds with him. The learned Judge then passed another order to the effect that certain property was declared by him and the Hon'ble Chief Court in appeal to be the property of the insolvent, that the insolvent's transfer of the same in favour of his wife having been set aside on the application of the Receiver the property should vest in the Receiver, for the benefit of the creditors. He further directed that the Receiver should proceed to realise the property which was formerly that of the insolvent and distribute the same in accordance with the provisions of the Insol. Act subject always to the direction of the Insolvency Court. This order was passed on March 1, 1937, and this is the order which is under appeal before us.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the order was illegal and ultra vires because the Court could not have ordered the Receiver after annulling the adjudication to distribute the assets among the creditors. Reliance was placed on two cases, Jaing Bir Singh v. P. K. Banerjee, (I. L. R. 11 Rangoon, 287) (1) and Panna Lal v. Official Receiver, (I. L. R. 53 Allahabad 313) (2).

In the Rangoon case it was held that on an order of annulment being passed under the s. 43 of the Prov. Insol. Act the Court ceases to have jurisdiction to entertain, hear or determine an application by the Receiver to have a transfer of property set aside under s. 53 or s. 54 of the Act, whether such application was presented before or after the order of annulment and that in making a vesting order under s. 37 the Court may impose conditions relating to the property of the debtor but not of any other person. In vesting the property of the debtor in any appointee, the Court cannot order that he should continue the liquidation of the debtor's assets on the same terms and conditions as those on which the Receiver in insolvency would have been entitled to carry out the liquidation of his estate if the insolvency had still been subsisting.

In the Allahabad case it was held that s. 37 of the Prov. Insol. Act does not allow an Insolvency Court, on annulling an insolvency, to proceed to distribute the assets of the insolvent among any of the creditors. The course open to the Court is either to return the property to the debtor on condition that he furnishes security which will make it available to the creditors to take their remedy under the ordinary civil law; or pending such security or for some other reason the Court may direct the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver to vest in a certain person. Such vesting is only for the purpose, apparently, of making the property available to creditors to proceed through the Civil Court.

The above decisions no doubt support the contention of the learned Counsel.

On the other hand the Counsel for the respondent relies on the case of Chouhmal Bhagirath v. Jokhiram Surajmal, (I. L. R. 12 Patna 163) (3) and on the case of Balla Mal v. Mst. Fatma Bibi, (I. L. R. 15 Lahore, 698) (4).

In the Patna case it was held that where the Court annulled an adjudication and by a subsequent order directed the debtor's property to vest in the Receiver appointed by the Court, after that order of annulment the Court did not cease to have jurisdiction in the matter and that the vesting order was valid and operative.

The Lahore case more or less takes the same view.

Section 37 (1) of the Prov. Insol. Act lays down that "where an adjudication is annulled, all sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made, and all acts therefore done, by the Court or Receiver, shall be valid; but, subject as aforesaid, the property of the debtor who was adjudged insolvent shall vest in such person as the Court may appoint, or in default of any such appointment, shall revert to the extent of his right or interest therein on such conditions as the Court may, by order in writing, declare."

It is thus clear from the section that where an adjudication is annulled the property of the debtor who was adjudged insolvent shall vest in such person as the Court may appoint, or, in default of any such appointment, shall revert to the debtor. In our opinion the section does not allow an Insolvency Court on annulling an insolvency to proceed to distribute the assets of the insolvent among any of the creditors. The distribution of assets is a proceeding in insolvency, and by annulling the insolvency it means that the Court will not proceed with the insolvency. Therefore in our opinion the course open to the Court is either to return the property to the insolvent on condition that he furnishes security which will make it available to the creditors or for some other reason the Court may direct the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Receiver to vest in a certain person. The words "to vest in such person" in our opinion do not mean distribution of assets among the creditors. We are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the learned District Judge was ultra vires and illegal.

We therefore set aside the order and allow the appeal to this extent that we order that the property shall vest in the Receiver and it will be available to the creditors when they have taken their remedy under the ordinary civil law. In the peculiar circumstances of the case we direct that the parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

party's whole property worth more than Rs. 10,000 —Certificate under s. 110 (2) held could be granted.

P and R were co-owners of a village owning one-third and two-thirds of the property respectively. Through the village lands ran two water channels, A and B. P brought under wet cultivation by means of channel B an additional area which resulted in a suit being filed against him by R. The suit was compromised, whereby P was restrained from cultivating any further area by using the channel. P, however, subsequently brought under cultivation more area by use of the water from channel B. This resulted in execution application being filed by R in which the High Court ultimately held that P was not entitled to draw further water from either channel. P applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The value of the additional land brought under cultivation which resulted in the execution proceedings was under Rs. 10,000 but the value of the land affected by the decree was of the value of more than Rs. 10,000:

Held, that as the decision of the High Court prohibiting P from bringing any further portion of his land under wet cultivation affected his interest in the village which was of far greater value than Rs. 10,000, the certificate under s. 110 (2), Civil P. C., could, therefore, be granted. 74 Ind. Cas. 584 (1) and Aliman v. Hasiba (2), relied on.

O. Misc. P. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the order of the High Court in C. M. A. No. 460 of 1936.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastry and T. M. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and V. Ramaswamy Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is an application for a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The facts as stated at the Bar are shortly these. The petitioner and the respondent are co-owners of a village in the Madura District, the petitioner owning one-third and the respondent two-thirds of the property. Through the village lands run two water channels, which have been referred to as A and B. Originally the wet cultivation of the village lands covered 200 kulis, roughly 110 acres. Of the 200 kulis, the petitioner had 50 kulis and the respondent 150 kulis. In 1908, the petitioner brought under wet cultivation by means of channel B an additional 14 kulis, which resulted in a suit being filed against him by the respondent for an injunction restraining him from using the channel for this purpose. The suit was compromised and the agreement arrived at was embodied in the decree. Under the decree the petitioner was allowed to cultivate the 14 kulis, but according to the respondent he was to be restrained from cultivating any further area. The petitioner subsequently brought under wet cultivation a further 5 kulis obtaining the water from stream A. This resulted in an application being filed by the respondent in execution proceedings to restrain him. The contention was that by reason of the injunction which had been granted the petitioner was not entitled to bring under wet cultivation any additional land, either by means of the water from channel A or from channel B. The reply was that the injunction which had been granted only referred to channel B. The District Judge of Madura dismissed the petition, being of the opinion that the petitioner was entitled to use the water from channel A, notwithstanding the decree. An appeal followed to this Court. The appeal was allowed, this Court holding that the petitioner was not entitled to draw further water from either channel. The petitioner desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this decision.

The application for leave is opposed on the ground that the subject-matter is not of the value of Rs. 10,000. The application came before this Court in the first instance on February 9, 1939 and a report on the value of the property was called for from the District Judge. Before the District Judge it was conceded by the respondent that the value of the land belonging to the petitioner which is affected by the judgment of this Court is far more than Rs. 10,000. The value of the additional 5 kulis which the petitioner brought under cultivation and which resulted in the present proceeding is admittedly under Rs. 10,000. The petitioner says that inasmuch as the property affected by the decree is of the value of Rs. 10,000 he is entitled to the certificate under the second clause of s. 110, Civil P. O. We consider that this contention is well founded. In Radha-krishna Iyer v. Sundarswamy Iyer (1) the Judicial Committee observed:

"In the first place, the sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceedings may in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit."

That is the position here. This is not a case of a person claiming a right in a property where the value of the property is over Rs. 10,000 and the value of the right is less than that amount. It is the construction of the agreement embodied in the compromise decree which is in dispute. If the decision of this Court stands, it will mean that the petitioner will not be able to bring any further portion of his land under wet cultivation and his interest in the village is of far greater value than Rs. 10,000. The case reported in Aliman v. Hasiba (2), is directly in point. The application will be allowed on the usual conditions. The costs of this application will be made costs in the appeal.

Second Civil Appeal No. 60 of 1937

SAT NARAIN—PLAINTIFF—

versus

CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, SARAI SHAHZADI, DISTRICT LUCKNOW.

AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 233 (m) —Sale of minor's property—Minor not applying under s. 173—Sale in contravention of ss. 163 and 164—Suit for declaration that sale was void, if maintainable.

The general presumption is against an intention to disturb the established state of the law, or to interfere with the vested rights of subjects, and there is a strong leaning against so construing a statute as thereby to oust or restrict the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. In the provision that 'no person shall institute a suit' in s. 233 (m), U. P. Land Revenue Act the Legislature had in contemplation the class of persons to whom the Act in its general bearing is applicable, that is, to share-holders liable to pay Govt. Revenue and not to strangers outside this body. It was not intended to protect the Govt. against claims in respect of illegal acts done to the detriment of persons who are under no liability to pay Govt. Revenue. It was merely intended to protect the Govt. against claims of members of the revenue paying class.

A Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record and as against such persons, the decrees or sales under them are void without any proceedings to set them aside. It would be a travesty of justice to hold that a minor whose property is being wrongly sold by the revenue authorities has no remedy left to him if he does not apply to the Commissioner under s. 173 of the Land Revenue Act, specially when the sale was conducted with material irregularity and in complete disregard of the provisions of ss. 163 and 164 of the Land Revenue Act. A suit therefore, for declaration that the property sold belongs to him and that the sale is consequently void and ineffective is not barred by the provisions of s. 233 (m). Tulsa Kunwar v. Jageshwar Prasad (5), followed, 151 Ind. Cas. 414 (4); distinguished Secretary of State for India in Council v. Mahadevi (1), 101 Ind. Cas. 628 (2) and 155 Ind. Cas. 92 (3), not followed, Khairajmal v. Daim (6), relied on.

S. C. A. against the decree of the Additional Civil Judge, Lucknow, dated October 21, 1936.

Messrs. R. B. Lal, Sri Ram and M. M. Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohd. Jafar Husain, for the Respondents.

Radha Krishna, J.—(October 16, 1939).—

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant in this case has argued the following points among others:—

(1) That Sat Narain was not the legal representative of the deceased Ram Prasad and the resolution of the Co-operative Society, Sarai Shahzadi, District Lucknow, to the effect that they could proceed for the realisation of the debt of the deceased against Sat Narain was ultra vires.

(2) That in any case the personal property of Sat Narain was not liable and s. 233 (m) is no bar to a suit in a Civil Court because in the proceeding for sale there was no proper party representing the deceased.

(3) That the provisions of ss. 163, 164, 173 and 183 as well as s. 233 (m) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act would operate only where the defaulter himself or his legal representative is a party to the proceedings for realisation of the debt and not to a case like the present.

These grounds have not been specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal but they are grounds of law and I have allowed them to be raised.

I have heard the learned Counsel for the parties at length on the above questions and I consider that they involve the determination of the scope and the interpretation of the sections mentioned above of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. As the questions involved in the decision of this case are very important, I refer this case for decision by a Bench of two Hon'ble Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

Zia-ul Hasan, J. (March 21, 1940).—This is a plaintiff's second appeal against a decree of the learned Additional Civil Judge of Lucknow dismissing his suit for a declaration in respect of some property. Sat Narain, plaintiff-appellant is the grandson of Gaya Din brother of one Ram Prasad. Ram Prasad was a member of the Co-operative Society of Sarai Shahzadi. The appellant was nominated by Ram Prasad as his heir though his wife Sukhedi, defendant No. 2 is still living. Ram Prasad appears to have died in or about 1935. The Society held a decree against him and on November 8, 1935, they passed a resolution that Sat Narain's name should be substituted in the decree in place of Ram Prasad, deceased. On December 12, 1935, a warrant of attachment was issued in respect of the appellant's property, movable and immovable. On December 13, 1935, a sale proclamation was issued fixing January 5, 1936, for sale. It was not however served on the appellant as required by law. On January 5, 1936, the attached immovable property was sold and on February 1, 1936, the suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the appellant against the Co-operative Society concerned and Mst. Sukhedi, widow of Ram Prasad, for a declaration that the property sold belongs to him and that the sale is consequently void and ineffective.

Both the Courts have held that Ram Prasad and his brother Gaya Din were separate and that the property in suit is the property of the appellant but both have dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by s. 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act. The plaintiff therefore appeals.

Section 233 (m) bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts with respect to,

"claims connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue (other than claims under s. 183) or any process enforced on account of an arrears of revenue or on account of any sum which is by this or any other Act realizable as revenue."

The wording of this clause is no doubt very wide and it is because of this that suits of various kinds both against private individuals as well as Govt. have been held to be barred by this clause. For instance, in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Madader (I. L. R. 19 All. 121) (1), in which in satisfaction of an arrear of revenue by certain defaulters some cattle belonging to the plaintiff who had no concern with the land in respect of which the arrear was due, were sold and the suit was brought against the Secretary of State, the defaulters and the purchaser of the cattle, it was held that the remedy of the owner of the cattle lay entirely in the Courts of Revenue and that no suit would lie in a Civil Court respecting the sale. Similarly in Abdullah v. Secretary of State for India in Council (I. L. R. 49 All. 101) (2), the property of the plaintiffs had been attached by the Collector at the request of the liquidator of a Co-operative Society on account of a debt due by a member of the Society, the plaintiff's objection to attachment was rejected and the plaintiff got the property released on the security of a third person. Subsequently a suit was brought by the plaintiffs and the surety against the Secretary of State, the liquidator and the defaulter member. It was held that s. 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act barred the claim. In this Court also the same view was taken in Khud Mukhtar Bank Utrawan v. Bhagwanain (A. I. R. 1935 Oudh 325) (3) in which a Co-operative Bank had obtained a decree against a member of the Bank and in execution attached a house and a gondah. The father of the judgment-debtor filed an objection claiming the property to be his but his objection was disallowed. He then brought a regular suit for a declaration that the house and the gondah belonged to him. The trial Court decreed the suit in part and the Bank's appeal was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. This Court dismissed the suit in toto and held that it was barred by s. 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has also relied on the case of the Co-operative Society v. Qadir (1934 O. W. N. 1060) (1), but the judgment in that case shows that though s. 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act was also considered, the judgment was actually based on cl. 6 of s. 42 of the Co-operative Societies Act.

In Tulsa Kunwar v. Jageshar Prasad (I. L. R. 28 All. 563) (5), however, in which the plaintiff sued in the Civil Court to recover money from the defendants on the allegation that certain property belonging to her having been wrongfully attached in order to realize arrears of Govt. Revenue due from the defendants, the plaintiff had, in order to save her own property, paid the arrears of revenue due from the defendants to Govt. It was held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain the suit was not ousted by the provisions of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, ss. 163 and 233 (m). Stanley, O. J., remarked in his judgment :—

"There is no doubt that the claim of the plaintiff is in a sense connected with the collection of revenue but had the Legislature when it enacted this clause in contemplation any other claims than claims which might be advanced by parties liable to pay revenue? I think not. The Act is one which regulates the relations of the Govt. on one side and a limited class of persons, namely sharers in revenue paying mahals on the other. General words admit of restriction according to the subject to which they relate and the scope and object of the enactment. If the Legislature intended so important an innovation as is contended for, it would I think have manifested its intention in clear and explicit terms. The general presumption is against an intention to disturb the established state of the law, or to interfere with the vested rights of subjects, and there is a strong leaning against so construing a statute as thereby to oust or restrict the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. In the provision that 'no person shall institute a suit' it seems to me that the Legislature had in contemplation the class of persons to whom the Act in its general bearing is applicable, that is, to share-holders liable to pay Govt. Revenue and not to strangers outside this body. I do not think it was intended to protect the Govt. against claims in respect of illegal acts done to the detriment of persons who are under no liability to pay Govt. Revenue. It was merely intended to protect the Govt. against claims of members of the revenue paying class."

Banerji, J., who concurred with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice said:

"I also concur in holding that s. 233, cl. (m) does not bar the suit. The language of the section is no doubt very wide; but as the learned Chief Justice has pointed out, the Legislature could not have intended that except a suit under

s. 183 (which in our opinion can only be brought by the defaulter) no other suit of any description could be instituted by any one in connection with the 'collection of revenue or any process enforced on account of an arrears of revenue.' It seems to me that the section forbids a suit by the defaulter against the Govt. or possibly by any other person against the Govt.; but it does not I think preclude a person in the position of the plaintiff from maintaining a suit like the present. Were we to accept the contention of the respondent, the plaintiff would be wholly without remedy."

As remarked by Banerji, J., the language of the section is undoubtedly very wide but this is to my mind pre-eminently a case in which the view adopted by Stanley, O. J., and Banerji, J., should be followed. The plaintiff was a minor when his property was sold. It is also conceded that the sale was conducted with material irregularity. It was held only twenty-three days after the issue of the proclamation of sale in complete disregard of the provisions of s. 163 of the Land Revenue Act. It is also admitted that no notice of the sale was given to the plaintiff as was required by s. 164 of the Act. It would in my opinion be a travesty of justice to hold that a minor whose property is being wrongly sold by the revenue authorities has no remedy left to him if he does not apply to the Commissioner under s. 173 of the Land Revenue Act. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have clearly laid down in Khizarajmal v. Daim (I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296) (6) that a Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record and that as against such persons, the decrees or sales under them were void without any proceedings to set them aside.

In view of what I have said above, I would follow the view of their Lordships Stanley, O. J., and Banerji, J., in Tulsa Kunwar v. Jageshar Prasad (I. L. R. 28 All. 563) (5), and allowing the appeal would decree the appellant's suit with costs.

Yorke, J.—(April 3, 1940.)—I am in strong sympathy with the view taken by my learned brother in this case but I was at first inclined to think that in view of the current of decision in The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Mahadei (I. L. R. 19 All. 127) (1), Abdullah v. Secretary of State for India in Council (I. L. R. 49 All. 701) (2) and Khud Mukhtar Bank, Utrawan v. Bhagwan Din (A. I. R. 1935 Oudh 325) (3), it would not be proper to follow the decision in Tulsa Kunwar v. Jageshar Prasad (I. L. R. 28 All. 563) (5). On further consideration I am with the greatest respect of opinion that s. 233 (m) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act is rightly interpreted in this latter ruling and that although that section bars a suit against the Secretary of State it cannot bar a suit to recover compensation from a third person by whose action the plaintiff has been put to loss. I would therefore agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

By the Court :—We allow the appeal and decree the appellant's suit with costs throughout.

NACHIMUTHU GOUNDAN AND OTHERS

versus

BALASUBRAMANIA GOUNDAN—

RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Debts—Antecedent—Word “rina,” interpretation of—Unascertained liability of partner, whether debt, according to Hindu Law—Alienation—Father—Antecedent debts—Distinction between mortgage for antecedent debt and for new debt—Effect of—Object of restriction on father's right of alienation—Property in hands of father or manager, if trust for family.

The significance of the sanskrit word rina for apportioning rights or liabilities, must not be determined by reference to its English equivalent but by the original sanskrit word itself, giving to it just the meaning in which it is used or understood in the parent language in its literal or even colloquial sense. The word ‘debt’ is not the exact equivalent of rina in sanskrit at any rate with all the technical import that that word carries. The words dhana and rina coupled together in the texts, are used in a comprehensive sense, for describing all varieties of divisible assets and liabilities. As dhana includes in its connotation all varieties of property and assets, there is no reason why rina should not be held to include all varieties of obligations and debts as well.

Hence, the unascertained liability of a partner in partnership is a debt according to Hindu Law although until the settlement of partnership accounts the relationship of debtor and creditor does not exist.

[Case-law referred to.]

Although at first sight it seems that there is little distinction in principle between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt, and a mortgage for a debt incurred for the first time when the mortgage is executed, yet, if the distinction is observed, it will tend to preserve the property in the family as it will render it more difficult for a Hindu father to incur debts which might ultimately have the effect of dissipating that property.

[Case-law referred to.]

The underlying object of the restriction upon the father's power to alienate joint family property is the conservation of the family substance for the benefit of the existing and future members of the family. In a loose, though not in a strict legal sense, the family property in the hands of the father or the manager may perhaps be termed a trust for the family itself conceived as a continuing unit. 39 Ind. Cas. 280 (2) and 178 Ind. Cas. 220 (3), relied on.

As. and C. Misc. P. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, in O. S. No. 183 of 1932.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and M. Krishna Bharathi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and N. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the mortgage sued on is binding on the undivided sons of the mortgagors. The argument against it is that there was neither an antecedent debt nor a justifying necessity and in its absence the father had no authority to bind by his act the interest of his sons in the joint property. No new principle of law is therefore involved in the decision of this appeal; for the doctrine of antecedent debt is at least as old as Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad Singh (1), if not older still, and has now been finally and authoritatively declared by the Privy Council. Though the rule itself in this form does not find express mention in the texts of Hindu Law or the commentaries, there can be no doubt that it is but the logical outcome of the fundamental principle stated in the Mitakshara, Ch. I, ss. 27 and 28. The author says:

“Therefore it is a settled point that property in the paternal estate is by birth, although the father has independent power in the disposal of effects other than immovables, for indispensable acts of duty and for purposes prescribed by texts of law as gifts through affection, support of the family, relief from distress and so forth, but he is subject to the control of his sons and the rest in regard to immovable estate, whether acquired by himself or inherited from his father or other predecessor; since it is ordained that though immovables or bipeds have been acquired by a man himself, a gift or sale of them should not be made, without convening all the sons. They who are born and they who are yet unbegotten and they who are yet still in the womb require the means of support; no gift or sale should therefore be made. Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of immovable property during a season of distress for the sake of the family, and especially for pious purposes."

The underlying object of the restriction is plain enough, namely the conservation of the family substance for the benefit of the existing and future members of the family. In a loose, though not in a strict legal sense, the family property in the hands of the father or the manager may perhaps be termed a trust for the family itself conceived as a continuing unit. It was in this sense that in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), at pp. 447, 448, Lord Shaw observed as follows:

"In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position; under his management he (the father) can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain, and it might be a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalize any such transaction."

Once it is realized that it is a kind of trust, that lies at the foundation of the restriction, (see also Patel Khana Venkataramaswami v. Imperial Bank of India, Rajahmundry (3), at p. 466), it will be easy to understand its scope as well as its applicability. At first sight, it may look as if there is very little purpose in requiring that there should not only be a debt but that it must also be an antecedent one. According to Hindu Law it is equally the pious obligation of the son to discharge the father's debt, whether it had been antecedently or was concurrently incurred. Both have to be met from out of the family estate, and there is no escape from either except by the practice of fraud or dishonesty. If accordingly the family property is the fund out of which both classes of debt have to be met, no rational distinction could be made between the two and this indeed was the view of such eminent Hindu Judges as Sir V. Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Chidambaram Muthu v. Koothaperumal (4), and Banerji, J., in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mataprasad (5); and it was not till the Privy Council finally pronounced against it that the true basis of the principle emerged into view:

What appears to be a cogent explanation is given by Aikman, J., in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mataprasad (5), where he has observed as follows:

"At first sight it seems that there is little distinction in principle between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt, and a mortgage for a debt incurred for the first time when the mortgage is executed. But if the distinction is observed, it will tend to preserve the property in the family as it will render it more difficult for a Hindu father to incur debts which might ultimately have the effect of dissipating that property."

In other words, the creditor will have one more hurdle to jump and the family will have a little more time to avert the threatened danger. At this time of day it is perhaps pointless to enter into a discussion of the reason of the rule for the rule itself has now been clearly and unequivocally settled by the decisions of the highest tribunal. It is with the application of that rule rather the meaning of the word "debt" in the phrase "antecedent debt" that we are concerned in this appeal remembering that the corresponding term in the Sanskrit text is rina. The facts of this case lie in a narrow compass. Two brothers who had themselves started a mill business and carried it on for some years, presumably with the aid of family funds, were obliged in April 1925 to take a new partner whose contribution by way of capital enabled them to meet the debts then owing and to continue the business itself. The new partner was plaintiff's father who paid a sum of Rs. 20,000 towards his share of the capital, an equal sum represented by the value of the business premises and the plant and machinery therein belonging to the brothers being treated as their contribution. The partnership was to run for a period of five years and the profits and losses were to be shared equally between the plaintiff's father on the one hand and the two brothers together on the other. Clause 4 of the partnership deed, which is the only relevant clause, is as follows:

"It was agreed that we should conduct the business up to the said period and, at the end of the period, compare the purchase, etc., and all accounts duly maintained and divide the net profit and/or loss in equal shares, one-half for the individual No. 1 (the plaintiff's father) and the other half for the individual Nos. 2 and 3 (the two brothers). So, if any of us is willing to separate himself from us before the due date, such person should forfeit the profit relating to his share and receive the balance of principal after deducting his loss therefrom after the expiry of the period of the partnership."

Long before the period expired, and indeed within four months after a new partnership, the plaintiff's father died, and the partnership became dissolved. The plaintiff being a minor, his mother wisely decided not to continue the partnership any longer and desired that the partnership accounts should be taken, the share of the deceased partner ascertained and paid over to her. The accounts were accordingly taken with the assistance of certain mediators and a sum of Rs. 30,294-13-4 was found due. For a portion of that amount, namely Rs. 14,732-13-4, outstandings of the business, were assigned to her and for the balance of Rs. 15,562 the suit mortgage was executed. The assignment is Ex. B dated September 1, 1925 and the mortgage, Ex. A, dated August 30, 1925. Both these documents were in fact parts of one transaction and were brought into existence close upon the settlement of the partnership accounts and in order to implement. Subsequent to the mortgage one of the brothers, Krishnaswami Goundan, died within a few months leaving four sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and a grandson, defendant No. 7. The other brother Velai Goundan, is defendant No. 1 and his son is defendant No. 6. The main defence to the suit was that pleaded by these sons and grandson, namely that the mortgage, as such could not affect their shares in the mortgaged property as until the settlement of the partnership accounts which was practically simultaneous with the mortgage, there was no debt as such in law, but merely a duty to account. It was accordingly urged that the requisite conditions of antecedent debt were not present in this case as the mortgage was not really or sufficiently disconnected from the precedent debt in point of fact or time. In the Court below, it appears to have also been urged that the business in question was in the nature of a speculative trade, that a debt incurred in it, even regarding the deceased partner's interest in the partnership assets as a debt, should be held to be of an immoral or illegal nature. But this contention was rightly and summarily overruled, and has not been repeated before us.

The only question then is whether the consideration for the mortgage was an antecedent debt in the sense in which that expression is understood in Hindu Law. The argument for the appellant is that until the accounts are taken and the liability ascertained, it is impossible to posit that there is or will be a debt due by one partner to the others or vice versa. The liability to account of a partner or partners in a running or even a dissolved partnership does not, it was argued, amount in law to a debt in being, but was merely the possibility or contingency of a debt to arise in the future. Till it is known how the accounts stood, it was urged there could be no debt and no partner liable for it. The appellant's learned Advocate was not prepared to go the length of saying that in no case of unsettled accounts could there be a debt in law even if there remained nothing more than a pure arithmetical calculation to arrive at the correct figure. What he did urged was that so long as there was no debtor and creditor relationship established, no debt could come into existence and that in a partnership there is no such relationship until the business is dissolved and until the liability of the partners inter se is ascertained by the taking of the usual accounts. There may be some support for this argument if one confines one's attention to the meaning of the words 'debt' according to its common law acceptance. Jenks' definition is that it is "a definite sum of money recoverable from one person (the 'debtor') by another person (the 'creditor') by means of a common law action; whether payment can be claimed immediately or not"; Jenks' Digest of English Civil Law, Book III. Title II, s. 1620.

The action of debt lay according to Anson, Anson's Law of Contract, Edition 17, p. 53, Pollock's Principles of Contract, Edition 10, pp. 135, 136,

"for liquidated or ascertained claims arising either from breach of covenant, or from non-payment of a sum certain due for goods supplied, work done, or money lent."

The qualification that the claim in respect of a debt so called, should be definite, ascertained or liquidated has its roots in the old common law action of debt which was proprietary in character, and was in fact a claim for the recovery of money by way of restitution, rather than the enforcement of an obligation arising out of contract: Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law, Edition 2, Vol. II, pp. 203 to 207. Its supersession by assumpsit or the indebitatus count, the practical abolition by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, of the distinction between debt and assumpsit, and the doing away altogether with the formal pleadings of the Common Law Courts by the Judicature Act, 1873, are familiar knowledge to the student of English legal history (Holdsworth's History of English Law, Vol. II, pp. 366, 367 and III, pp. 420, 421, 442 and 443, Anson's Law of Contract, Edn. 17, p. 44). The distinction between debt and damages, the former relating to a liquidated claim, and the latter generally to an unliquidated demand still clings to English legal phraseology and still exerts a limited nonetheless real influence on modern English jurisprudence. With that technical narrow meaning of the word we are not here concerned. For we are not considering a proposition of English Law or the provisions of a statute based on that law. We have on the contrary to deal with a totally different subject and a totally different system of law. We have in fact to assign a meaning to the word rina according to the sense in which that word has been used in the texts of Hindu Law. To such a word and in such a context are we to apply the English Common Law meaning of the word or are we to go back to those texts themselves and to the language in which they have been clothed, in order to ascertain the true meaning of the word rina indifferently rendered as debt in English and occurring in the modern text-books and in the decisions of the Courts when defining the obligation of a Hindu son to relieve his father from the sin of the undischarged debt?

The narrower interpretation will at once lead to obvious and startling consequences. The larger and more numerous obligations arising out of contracts and quasi-contracts, trusts and other fiduciary relationships though leading to monetary liability and without the slightest taint of immorality or illegality in any of them, will fall outside the pious duty. And yet we find the texts full of passages, Sanyasayya v. Murthamma (9) at p. 3, and the reports full of cases, in which obligations which are far removed from debt in the narrow sense have been clearly recognized. Brihaspati in describing the fate of a debtor who dies without having discharged a debt refers to him as one who received a sum lent or the like (Colebrooke's Digest I, 228, attributed also to Katyayana). According to Katyayana, the son is bound to carry out what an ancestor has promised for religious purposes (Colebrooke's Digest I, 206). Usanas obviously understands rina in the wider sense, though of course he excludes certain categories as falling outside the limits of the obligation being avyavaharika in nature or origin. According to the texts, a surety debt, commercial tolls, debts due for spirituous liquors, for lustful pleasures, gambling debts, unpaid fines, promises without consideration, had in terms to be excluded as otherwise, being rinās the sons would be bound to discharge them by reason of their pious obligation; see the texts collected in Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (10). The words dhana and rina (Manu: rine dhanecha) riktha and rina (Yagnavalkya, Chap. II, 119, rikthamrinam) coupled together in the texts, seem to have been so used in a comprehensive sense, for describing all varieties of divisible assets and liabilities. Otherwise, obligations other than debts strictly so called would bind only the man who incurred them while he is alive and will die with him when he dies and though alive or dead, the family assets in his hands will be divisible among the sons while the liabilities will be left unprovided for. Such an absurdity could not have been in the contemplation of the authors of the texts and we at any rate do not feel justified in attributing it to them; in the absence of clear and definite words to the contrary. If dhana includes in its connotation all varieties of property and assets, we see no reason why rina should not be held to include all varieties of obligations and debts as well. Apart from the texts of Hindu Law, the word has been frequently used in the wider sense in Sanskrit literature. Witness for instance the well known Vedic text referring to the triple debt which attaches to a Brahmin at birth. (Jayamano wai brahmanastribhi rinaih rinawan jayate | brahmcharyenashirbhyah. yaanyena dewebhyah prajaya pitrubhyah. ||) Other instances could be easily multiplied.

Coming to the decided cases on the point, Sanyasayya v. Murthamma (9) at p. 3*, the sons were held liable for the unaccounted collections made by a father out of the trust estate under his charge and the learned Judges, Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., refused to recognize the subtle distinction, as they called it, between accountability and debt. In a later case, Ramasubramania Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (11) in which the point was more directly raised, the learned Judges considered the question of the liability of the son to pay mesne profits decreed against the father and held that their pious obligation extended to it. The case is instructive for the collection of cases in which the liability was established against the sons in respect of a variety of causes of action far removed from debt in the limited sense. In none of them, it is noteworthy, was it disputed that there was a debt but only that the debt was not of a nature which would bind the son's interest. Venkatasubba Rao, J., explained the position in these words :

"It was contended that the obligation to pay mesne profits is not in the nature of a debt, that it is not in fact rina which means strictly 'what is taken under a promise to repay.' We agree with Mukerjee J., see Chakouri Mahlon v. Ganga Proshad (10) at p. 877*, that the word rina as used in the texts has a much wider application than a mere debt or loan. I am prepared to go further than merely hold that at any rate, a judgment debt comes within the expression rina for, if this narrow construction be adopted, a son can be held liable only after a decree is passed against the father; whereas, if he is originally impleaded in the suit for damages, he can resist it on the ground that there has been no debt, as there has not been a judgment. This would be a clear anomaly."

The other learned Judge Madhavan Nair, J., was also of the same opinion : Ramasubramania Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (11) at p. 630†; see also Natesayyen v. Punnuswami (12) at p. 104. Quite recently a Bench of the Allahabad High Court has expressed a definite preference for the wider interpretation of the word as including a liability for unliquidated damages arising on a breach of contract by the father. We are in entire agreement with the observations of the learned Judges who declined to accept the stricter meaning of the word rina. They said :

"If we carry it to its logical conclusion, the liability of a son to pay the antecedent debts of his father would not extend to any liability incurred otherwise than by the advancing of a sum in cash to the father. We cannot believe that this was the intention of the author of the text (Brihaspati, Vol. 33, Max Muller's Sacred Books of the East,

p. 319). We cannot believe, for instance, that a son would not be liable to pay the unpaid price of a commodity which had been bought by his father or to pay rent due by his father as a tenant. (According to English Law an action of debt lay at Common Law). We think that the son is bound to pay any sum which is lawfully due from the father provided that the father's liability is not in any way tainted with immorality; Chatar Sen v. Raja Ram (13) at pp. 61 and 62."

These authorities are sufficient to negative the appellant's contention. It may however be observed that even if the word rina in Sanskrit is to be understood as meaning a debt, there is no warrant for importing into it the technical sense in which it has become wrapped up by the peculiarities of the old English Common Law and Procedure. Almost every English Dictionary includes 'obligation' among the meanings of the word 'debt' though ordinarily the word does mean that which is due from one person to another or what is owed. We even speak, metaphorically perhaps, of owing a debt of gratitude. But whatever may be the meaning which a layman or a lawyer speaking the English language may attach to it, we are unable to say that the word 'debt' is the exact equivalent or rina in Sanskrit at any rate with all the technical import that that word carries. Moreover, the word rina has passed into colloquial use in the wider sense in most of the vernaculars of the presidency. It is not capable of being fully or definitely expressed in any single English word. Like the words, satya or dharma which are but imperfectly translated as truth or duty, the word rina also is often rendered, though loosely, as debt, though such a rendering is sufficient enough for practical purposes. But when it becomes necessary to ascertain its significance for apportioning rights or liabilities, we must determine it not by reference to its English equivalent but by the original Sanskrit word itself, giving to it just the meaning in which it is used or understood in the parent language in its literal or even colloquial sense. What we cannot agree to is the attempt first to regard debt as a perfect synonym and then to understand it in the archaic sense in which the word was understood in the now obsolete old forms of Common Law actions. We must accordingly hold that the unascertained liability of the two brothers was a debt according to Hindu Law incurred by them in favour of the plaintiff's father from the time when the latter brought into the partnership the sum of Rs. 20,000 subject to its being returned with a reduction in case of loss or an addition on account of profit. It was thus both antecedent in time and independent in origin from the mortgage which, it is plain, could not have been in the contemplation of the parties when the capital was brought in. What was in fact contemplated was, as appears from the partnership deed, something totally different from what actually led to the execution of the mortgage. The test must therefore be held fully satisfied, antecedency in time and dissociation in fact being thus established.

It was urged that the word 'debt' has been defined in some Indian cases in such a way as to exclude a liability for an amount to be yet ascertained by the taking of accounts. Two cases were cited both of which proceeded on the meaning of the word as used in two different statutes and it was held that such a liability cannot be regarded as a debt within the meaning, in one case, of s. 4 (1) (a), Succession Certificate Act, (VII of 1889) and in the other, within s. 25, Contract Act, (IX of 1872). In Sabju Sahib v. Noordin Sahib (14). Subramania Iyer, J., to whom the case was referred on a difference of opinion between Shephard, Offg. C. J., and Benson, J., held relying on Johnson v. Diamond (15), that the liability arising from such an obligation could not be held to be a debt in the accepted legal sense of the term for the obvious reason that the liability was not in respect of a liquidated sum. It is not without interest that Benson, J., who took what may be called a common sense view of the matter, dissented, holding that when the accounts are taken and the sum due is ascertained, that sum while yet it remained unascertained was a debt within the Act. In Doraisami Padayachi v. Vaithilinga Padayachi (16), a promise to pay the amount which may be found due by an arbitrator on the taking of accounts between the parties was held not to amount to a promise to pay a debt within the meaning of s. 25, Contract Act, the amount not being a liquidated sum. These decisions, whatever their value may be in the construction of statutes which have employed the English legal terminology, have no bearing on the meaning to be given to the expression in a different context, in a different language and for a principle of law altogether alien to the English system. The decision in Thirunavukarasu Chetty v. Muthukrishna (17), is however directly in point, and is not to be distinguished in this way though it was sought to distinguish it from the present case on the facts. The mortgage in that case was given by one partner to the other in a running partnership for the amount due on an investigation of the accounts necessitated by the bad faith of the mortgagor. The learned Judges who decided the case held that until the settlement of the partnership account as such was arrived at, the relationship of creditor and debtor did not exist between the parties, and there could not be said to have been any debt existing antecedently to the mortgage. With respect we find ourselves unable to accept this dictum as a correct statement of the Hindu Law on the point. Their attention does not appear to have been called to the meaning of the word rina as explained in the cases cited above, nor was the rule of the Hindu Law on this point put specifically before them. We therefore feel that we are at liberty to come to an independent conclusion for ourselves on a consideration of the relevant material which we may observe had not been placed before them, and we think that our interpretation is more consistent with the texts and the principles of the Hindu Law.

A word about the distinction that was sought to be made on behalf of the respondent. It was urged that whether or not the liability of some partners to the other or others in an undissolved partnership is a debt, the moment a dissolution takes place there arises in law a debt properly so called, as there could be no more fluctuation and uncertainty about the rights of partners, as by reason of the dissolution all further transactions necessarily stop. Reliance was placed on s. 43 of the English Partnership Act, 1890, which runs as follows:

"Subject to any agreement between the partners, the amount due from surviving or continuing partner or partners to an outgoing partner or the representatives of a deceased partner in respect of the outgoing or deceased partner's share is a debt accruing at the date of the dissolution or death."

It was argued that this statutory provision is merely a declaration of the common law on the point, and hence in the case on hand, unlike the case referred to above, the partnership became dissolved on the death of the plaintiff's father, an event which took place an appreciable time before the mortgage. We may observe that no such provision is found in the Indian Act and even according to English Law, it would seem that partners stand in a fiduciary relation to each other (Lewin on Trusts, 13th Edn., p. 253) whether or not they are trustees in the full and proper sense of the word: see Knox v. Gye (18), at p. 675, per Lord Westbury: cf. observations of Lord Hatherley at p. 678: see also s. 29 of the English Partnership Act, 1890; Vyse v. Foster (19). Out of this relation arises in favour of the representative of a deceased partner not necessarily a debt, but a right which consists in having an account of the property, of its collection and application, and on receiving that portion of the clear balance that accrues to the deceased's share and interest in the partnership. The representative of a deceased partner has no specific interest in or claim upon any particular part of the partnership estate. The whole property therein accrues to the surviving partner. Whether the effect of s. 43 of the English Act is anything more than the putting to an end of all difficulties in the way of the application of the rule of limitation to such a cause of action, it is not easy to determine. It is however not necessary to pursue the matter, as in our view there was in this case an antecedent debt according to Hindu Law, and the mortgage was executed to discharge it. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs subject to the decision of the lower Court on the petition presented by the appellants under Madras Act IV of 1938, which will be sent to the lower Court for disposal. The court-fee on the memorandum of appeal must be paid by the appellants. In the connected C. M. A. No. 312 of 1935, it is stated that in view of the dismissal of the main appeal no orders are necessary. It is also accordingly dismissed, but without costs.

Hindu Law—Debts—Son's liability—Surety debt by father—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 14—Decree on basis of hundi—Security bond creating mortgage for satisfying decree—Decree-holder, if precluded from executing decree by O. XXXIV, r. 14.

Under the Hindu Law of the Mitakshara School a son is liable for the debts of his father on account of suretyship for the payment of money.

Where the decree obtained is on the basis of a hundi and a mortgage is created by a security bond for the purpose of satisfying decree, the decree-holder is not precluded from executing the decree by O. XXXIV, r. 14. 33 Ind. Cas. 922 (1) and 149 Ind. Cas. 1104 (2), relied on.

S. A. from the decision of the Second Sub-Judge, Saharanpur, dated September 2, 1936.

Sir Syed Wazir Hasan and Mr. B. N. Misra, for the Appellant

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Respondents.

Bajpal, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants before us. The facts giving rise to the suit out of which this appeal arises may be briefly stated. It appears that there were three brothers. Onkar Prasad, defendant No. 2 Piarey Lal, defendant No. 3, and Lachmi Narain who is not a party to the present suit. Lachmi Narain had certain dealings with the Benares Bank Ltd., Saharanpur, defendant No. 1, and Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal, his two brothers, had given a letter of guarantee to the Bank guaranteeing the payment of such sums as might be due by Lachmi Narain to the Bank. There was a settlement of accounts and on July 22, 1926, a 'hundi' was drawn up. Lachmi Narain was the drawer of the 'hundi.' Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal were the drawees of the 'hundi' and the Benares Bank was the payee. Suit No. 164 of 1927 was brought by the Bank on the basis of this hundi against Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal and a decree was obtained. The decree was put in execution and then a security bond was drawn up by Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal. This was on February 20, 1930, and execution was stayed. The decretal amount not having been paid up the Benares Bank sought to sell the property mentioned in the security bond and then the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs who are the sons of Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal, plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 being the sons of Onkar Prasad and plaintiff No. 4 being the son of Piarey Lal. The suit was for a declaration that the property in dispute was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree in Suit No. 164 of 1927. The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit and hence this second appeal by them before us.

Three points were agitated before the lower Appellate Court and the same three points are urged before us. In the first instance it is submitted that the sons of Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal are not liable to pay the amount of the decree inasmuch as there was no consideration for the 'hundi.' There is no substance in this plea inasmuch as the 'hundi' was drawn up in pursuance of the contract of guarantee by which Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal had promised to reimburse the Bank for such sums as might be found due to the Bank from Lachmi Narain. The advance of moneys to Lachmi Narain was a sufficient consideration so far as Onkar Prasad and Piarey Lal were concerned. Under the Hindu Law of the Mitakshara School a son is liable for the debts of his father on account of suretyship for the payment of money and there is no force in the contention that the son is not liable for such suretyship debts. In the Mayne's Treatise on Hindu Law and Usage, Edn. 10, the following passage occurs :

"According to Brihaspati, there are four different classes of sureties : (1) for appearance, (2) for confidence or honesty, (3) for payment of money lent, and (4) for delivery of goods or articles of the debtor. Yajnavalkya recognizes the first three classes alone. It is now settled that the obligation in regard to the first two classes is purely personal to the sureties and that the sons are not liable. But in the case of sureties for payment of money or for the delivery of the debtor's assets or goods, the sons are also liable."

A number of cases are cited in support of the proposition that in the case of suretyship for payment of money the sons are also liable. There is thus no force in the contention that the present plaintiffs are not liable for the suretyship debts of their fathers. The next contention is that the decree which is sought to be executed must be deemed to be satisfied by the execution of the security bond. We have the security bond before us and after having considered it carefully we have come to the conclusion that the security bond did not satisfy the decree, rather it was for the satisfaction of the decree that the security bond was executed. The words digreedar ne matalba digree maskur ke liye zamanat talab kiya hai, and the words matalba digree haza men bataur zamanat makful kardi, and again the words matalba digree mai kharcha wa sood sarah maskoor bazariye nilam clearly show that the decree was meant to be kept alive and the security bond was not executed in satisfaction of the decree, but in order to secure the payment of the decree which remained intact.

The third contention is that the property in dispute cannot be attached and sold in execution of the decree in Suit No. 164 of 1927, but that another suit should be instituted on the basis of the security bond and proceedings in execution are barred under O. XXXIV, r. 14, Civil P. O. This contention also seems to be without force in view of the decision of this Court in Mukta Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (1) and Mool Chand v. Lalta Prasad (2). No decree in the present case has been obtained for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under a mortgage. From what we have said above it would appear that the decree that has been obtained in the present case and which is sought to be executed was on the basis of a 'hundi' and the mortgage was created for the purpose of satisfying this simple money decree and the two cases mentioned above go to show that O. XXXIV, r. 14, Civil P. C., does not stand in the way of the defendant Bank. On the whole in our judgment there is no force in this appeal and we dismiss it with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Money paid under void contract repaid to vendee—Suit by him for damages for breach of contract—Claim for interest on ground of negligence of vendor—Article of Limitation Act applicable—Interest from date of payment of money to date of suit, if can be granted in absence of proof that money earned interest during such period—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 36, 37, 62.

The second part of s. 65, Contract Act, namely "or to make compensation for it," only comes into play when the advantage cannot be restored. Interest on sum paid under void contract would only be payable after the advantage has been refused to be restored.

The claim for interest on the ground of negligence on the part of the vendor in overlooking the provisions of the law, cannot be granted as it is equally the vendee's duty to know the law. For this reason also the claim for interest is not sustainable. Further, the claim for interest based on negligence of the vendor is governed by Art. 36, Lim. Act and not by Arts. 97 or 62. 184 Ind. Cas. 130 (2), relied on.

Where a contract of sale is found to be void and the amount paid under it is repaid by the vendor to the vendee, the vendee is not entitled to any interest on the amount from the date of its payment to the date of the institution of the suit for damages by the vendor for breach of contract if it is not proved that the amount had earned any interest in the hands of the vendor. 71 Ind. F. A. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Ferozapore, dated August 29, 1938.

Malik Barkat Ali and Mr. Sant Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Jiwan Lal Kapur, for the Respondents.

Addison, J. — The plaintiffs sued for recovery of Rs. 10,000 on account of breach of contract due to the negligence and misfeasance of the defendant, the District Board of Ferozapore. The Board invited offers in 1934 for the purchase of its Rest House at Moga. On April 15, 1934, the plaintiffs submitted a tender, offering to buy the Rest House for Rs. 35,100. The District Board confirmed the sale on September 24, 1934. Thereafter the plaintiffs paid Rs. 5,000 on October 1, 1934 and Rs. 30,100 on October 5, 1934. On April 16, 1935 the Commissioner of Jullundur Division refused to sanction the transaction, and it is not disputed that his sanction was essential before the contract could be entered into. On August 19, 1935 the plaintiffs were requested to take their money back but they did not do so till April 14, 1936. Thereafter, on August 26, 1937, they instituted this suit. The Board pleaded that there could be no contract of sale without the Commissioner's sanction and that no mis-statement had been made by it to the plaintiffs. It was further stated that the plaintiff had suffered no damage and that their money had been returned to them. Finally, it was said that the suit, being based on tort, was time-barred.

The trial Judge held that there was no contract and that the defendant was bound to restore the advantage it had obtained under s. 65, Contract Act. It was further held that plaintiffs had sustained damages by reason of the negligence of the Board in overlooking the imperative provisions of law which made the Commissioner's sanction essential; while the plaintiffs were not in fault. For this reason the trial Judge allowed the plaintiffs as damages for this negligence interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of the receipt of the money by the defendant up to April 14, 1936, the plaintiffs took the money back. This amounted to Rs. 3,211-10-0 which sum has been decreed. Against this decision the defendant has preferred this appeal while the plaintiffs have put in cross-objections, claiming a further sum of Rs. 6,788-10-0.

It was not disputed before us that there was no contract as it could not be entered into without the Commissioner's sanction. It was the duty of both parties to know the law. The defendant was however under the provision of s. 65, Contract Act, bound to restore any advantage it had obtained under the agreement, and this has been done. Section 65, Contract Act, is to the effect that when an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it. It is admitted that the defendant has restored the full amount, which was the only advantage it obtained under the agreement. It has not been proved that this money earned any interest in the hands of the defendant. The second part of s. 65, namely "or to make compensation for it," only comes into play when the advantage cannot be restored. In this view no interest was allowable to the plaintiffs. In a similar case, namely Har Nath Kuer v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council only allowed interest on the sum found to have been paid from the date of the institution of the suit and not from the date when the money was paid. In the present case, the money was repaid before the suit was instituted and notice was given to the plaintiffs to take it after the Commissioner had refused his sanction. This decision supports the principle that interest would only be payable after the advantage has been refused to be restored.

(1) 45 A.179; 71 Ind. Cas. 629; A.I.R. 1922 P.O. 403; 50 I.A. 69; 26 O.O. 223; 9 O & A L.R. 270; 9 O.L.J. 652; 44 M.L.J. 489; 37 C.L.J. 346; 27 C.W.N. 949; 18 L.W. 383; 33 M.L.T. 216; 5 P.L.T. 281; 2 Pat. L.R. 237 (P.O.).

The claim for interest has been decreed on the ground of negligence on the part of the Board in overlooking the provisions of the law, but it was equally the plaintiffs' duty to know the law. For this reason also the claim for interest is not sustainable. Further, the claim for interest being based on negligence of the Board is time-barred under Art. 36, Lim. Act, which allows two years from the date of the malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance for a suit for compensation for such malfeasance etc., "independent of contract and not herein specially provided for." Article 97 has obviously no application and this finding of the trial Court was not supported by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs. Their case before us was that Art. 62 applied. This Article gives three years' limitation for a suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. Obviously also that Article has no application. In Ghulam Haider v. Iqbal Nath (2). Article 36 was applied. For the reasons given, we accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. The cross-objection are also dismissed. The parties will have to bear their own costs throughout.

MAUNG TUN PE AND ANOTHER—

—RESPONDENTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250—Complainant to pay compensation to each of several accused—Proper order for imprisonment in default—Accusation must not only be false but also frivolous or vexatious.

Where a complainant has to pay compensation to each of several accused the imprisonment which the Magistrate orders in default of payment should be ordered in respect of default of payment to each of the accused.

It is only when the Magistrate is of opinion that the accusation against the accused was not only false but also either frivolous or vexatious that he can act under s. 250, Criminal P. O. The reason is that this section is not to be applied except in cases which are frivolous or vexatious. It is not intended to be applied in serious cases which are to be dealt with under the provisions of s. 211, I. P. O. It is for this reason that a Magistrate must find that the case is frivolous or vexatious before he has jurisdiction to deal with the matter under s. 250.

Or. R. for the review of the order of the Township Magistrate, Kyaunggon, dated July 3, 1939.

Order.—The applicant Ma Pu was ordered by the Township Magistrate of Kyaunggon under s. 250, Criminal P. O., to pay compensation of Rs. 10 to each of the two respondents Maung Tun Pe and Maung Tun Saing. The order of the Magistrate was that she was to pay compensation of Rs. 10 each to the two accused, in default she was to suffer 30 days' simple imprisonment. Where a complainant has to pay compensation to each of several accused the imprisonment which the Magistrate orders in default of payment should be ordered in respect of default of payment to each of the accused. Consequently the order in this case should have read "I direct Ma Pu to pay compensation of Rs. 10 to each of the two accused Maung Tun Pe and Maung Tun Saing under s. 250, Criminal P. O., in default of payment in each case she will suffer 30 days' simple imprisonment."

The complaint of Ma Pu was that she had loaned her two bullocks to Tun Saing for 55 baskets of paddy to be payable when the paddy sheaves were collected on the threshing floor, when the bullocks were to be returned. On December 26, 1938 she went to Tun Saing's farm in company with Maung So Pe and demanded the return of the bullocks. The two bullocks were apparently in the kwin close by. She says that Tun Saing permitted her to take them away and that she and So Pe each taking a bullock proceeded to move away. They were immediately followed by Tun Pe, Tun Saing and Tun Saing's two coolies, Kala and Leik Khun, who proceeded forcibly to remove the leading strings of the bullocks from their hands and to take them away. Tun Saing said that he would not return the bullocks unless debt was paid.

Tun Sain's defence was that the two bullocks had been pledged to him as security for debt of Rs. 63 and that it had been agreed that if the money were not returned by the harvest the bullock would become the property of Tun Saing. The Magistrate believed the evidence offered by Tun Saing to prove this allegation and he held therefore that the case of Ma Pu had been shown to be a false one. He acquitted Tun Pe and Tun Saing (having previously discharged Kala and Leik Khun as there was no evidence against them), and in his order of acquittal he directed that the complainant Ma Pu should show cause why she should not be punished under s. 250, Criminal P. O. Ma Pu furnished a written explanation. The Magistrate then recorded the following further order :

"I have read the written explanation of Ma Pu and find it unsatisfactory. I therefore direct that the accused Ma Pu do pay compensation of Rs. 10, etc."

It is obvious that the Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of s. 250, Criminal P. O. It is only when the Magistrate is of opinion that the accusation against the accused was not only false but also either frivolous or vexatious that he can act under s. 250, Criminal P. O. The reason is that this section is not to be applied except in case which are frivolous or vexatious. It is not intended to be applied in serious cases which are to be dealt with under the provisions of s. 211, I. P. O. It is for this reason that a Magistrate must find that the case is frivolous or vexatious before he has jurisdiction to deal with the matter under s. 250. In the present case the Magistrate has merely found that the case was a false one. Next, the Magistrate in directing that compensation should be paid must record his reasons. Here the Magistrate has merely said that the written explanation of Ma Pu (which he has not considered in any way) was unsatisfactory—and he does not explain in what way it is unsatisfactory. Nor does he explain why he thought that this was a case in which compensation ought to be awarded to the accused. For these reasons alone the order of the Magistrate must be held to be invalid.

Apart from this, however, it is clear that the Magistrate did not have sufficient reason for holding that the case was a frivolous or vexatious one. Although several witnesses were offered in the defence, only two witnesses spoke to the actual episode and they are Kala and Leik Khun, the two coolies of Tun Saing who had themselves been co-accused. The Magistrate himself has said that it is hard to believe their evidence. We are left therefore with the story of Ma Pu and her witness So Pe. So Pe is not a relation of Ma Pu and there is absolutely no reason why his evidence should be disbelieved. From this it is quite clear that the story that Ma Pu and So Pe went to Tun Saing's farm and took the two bullocks away but in so doing were restrained by Tun Saing and his friends who removed the bullocks from their custody is a true one. They say that Tun Saing gave permission to them to take the bullocks away and that evidence has not really been rebutted. Certain of the defence witnesses, namely Chan E and Maung Tin, say that they had asked Tun Saing to come along with them for a certain purpose, but as they were about to leave somebody shouted to him to come back. He went away for a time and on his return told them that Ma Pu had asked for the return of her bullocks but that he had told her that he could not return them. Of course this evidence is of no assistance to the defence. It therefore appears to be no more than the truth that the bullocks were forcibly removed from Ma Pu and So Pe's possession.

I have no doubt that the trouble has arisen because Ma Pu on the one side and Tun Saing on the other regard the transaction in regard to the bullocks in different lights. Ma Pu seems to think that she has merely loaned the bullocks to Tun Saing for a certain period for a certain amount of paddy. On the other hand Tun Saing considers that he has given Ma Pu a loan and is entitled to keep the bullocks as security. Possibly the money representing the hire of the bullocks was paid at an early date in advance. Ma Pu chooses to regard the payment merely as the amount of hire and Tun Saing chooses to regard it as a loan. Which is the truth of the matter I do not know. At any rate it is quite clear that Ma Pu's complaint can be deemed to be neither frivolous nor vexatious, for she appears genuinely to have thought that she was entitled to the custody of her bullocks, and Tun Saing, so far as the evidence goes, appears at first to have thought that she was entitled to their custody. Possibly, Tun Saing on second thought held that his loan represented more than a reasonable amount for the hire of the bullocks and that if Ma Pu took the bullocks back she ought to pay him the difference. For these reasons I set aside the order of the Magistrate passed under s. 250, Criminal P. O., and direct that the compensation paid by Ma Pu be refunded to her.

Order set aside.

Hindu Law—Adoption — Authority — Testator by will authorising both widows separately to make adoption—Construction of will.

Where by a will the testator authorises both his widows separately to make adoption the instrument should be construed on the assumption that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was, if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practised among Hindus. The testator cannot therefore be intended to have authorized simultaneous adoptions by the widows. It must be inferred that he must have contemplated following the ordinary rules of Hindu Law whereby the refusal to adopt by the senior widow or her consent would be a necessary preliminary to a valid adoption by the junior widow. Where there is no such refusal or consent by the senior widow, the adoption by the junior widow is invalid. Akhoy Chunder v. Kalapahar Haji (1) and 14 Ind. Cas. 17 (3), relied on.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Salem, in A. S. No. 9 of 1935.

Mr. D. R. Krishna Rao, for the Appellant
Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and D. Ramaswamy Iyengar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises the question of the validity of an adoption. The properties in question formed part of the estate of one Sampanghi Rame Gowdu who had a son Byre Gowdu. The father and the son separated and it was agreed as one of the terms of the partition that the father's estate should be held during his lifetime by his second wife Lakshmakkal and on her death should go to Byre Gowdu, the son by the first wife. Lakshmakkal during her lifetime transferred those properties to her nephew, defendant No. 1. Byre Gowdu had two wives, the first was the plaintiff and the second was one Ramakkal. Neither of them had any children. Byre Gowdu died in 1909 leaving a will which concludes with the following sentence :

"...If after my lifetime, both of you (i. e., the two wives) do not agree to live together dividing the said properties into two equal shares, you shall separately make adoptions....."

Apparently this was regarded as giving each of the widows power to adopt without regard to the other. At any rate in 1909, shortly after the death of Byre Gowdu, the junior widow Ramakkal adopted defendant No. 2. There is no doubt about the fact of the adoption which is embodied in a deed, Ex. 2. At the time of the adoption, the two wives who are sisters were living together. The plaintiff made no objection to the adoption; but it has been found as a fact that she did not consent to it. The adopted son lived with the two widows for many years without his status being questioned. However, after defendant No. 1 got a transfer of Lakshmakkal's property, he also got a surrender from defendant No. 2 of the latter's interest therein. Ramakkal died in 1930 and Lakshmakkal died in 1932.

Byre Gowdu's father had died long before. So that at the time of the suit there were living, the plaintiff who is the senior widow of Byre Gowdu, defendant No. 2, adopted by the junior widow Ramakkal, and defendant No. 1, the nephew and transferee of Byre Gowdu's father's second wife.

We are no longer concerned with the plaintiff's right to the half of Lakshmakkal's property which goes to her as the widow of her husband. The appeal relates only to the right of the plaintiff to the half of the property which would have devolved upon Ramakkal had she been alive when Lakshmakkal died and is now claimed to have devolved upon defendant No. 1 by reason of the surrender by defendant No. 2, the adopted son of Ramakkal. The main question in the appeal is whether this adoption was valid. Fortunately there is no longer any difficulty about the facts and the only trouble relates to the effect of the provision in Byre Gowdu's will. Ex. B, which has already been extracted authorizing each of the widows to adopt. It seems to me that this difficulty can be resolved by reference to authorities. The Privy Council in Akhoy Chander v. Kalapahar Haji (1), dealing with a case in which two widows were each authorized to make adoptions, and in pursuance of that authority made simultaneous adoptions, held firstly that the instrument should be construed on the assumption that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was, if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practised among Hindus. secondly their Lordships held that simultaneous adoptions by two widows were contrary to law.

Next there is the case in Bijoy Krishna v. Ranjit Lal (2), the decision being confirmed in appeal by the Bench whose judgment is reported in Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy Krishna (3). That case concerned an instrument which authorized two widows to act according to their religious tenets by adopting three sons successively. It was held following the Privy Council decision just cited that the instrument must be read not as authorizing an illegal simultaneous adoption but as giving power of adoption to the widows successively and that this being so the elder widow had the prior right to exercise the power of adoption and that the younger widow had no right to adopt before the elder widow had exhausted her right or refused to use it. The reasoning is that such a construction is not contrary to the terms of the instrument and is in accordance with the ordinary rule of Hindu Law, which may be assumed to have been in the mind of the person giving the authority at the time when the instrument was drafted. The confirming decision has been quoted with approval in a Madras case Venkatappa Mayaniam Bahadur v. Ranga Rao (4), though the point actually arising in that case was rather different.

It seems to me that these decisions dispose of the contention that the adoption of defendant No. 2 by Ramakkal was valid. Exhibit B on its face might be read as authorizing each of the widows to make an adoption either simultaneously or one after the other, in which case there might be living contemporaneously two adopted sons to one man a notion repugnant to Hindu Law. Similarly it is contrary to the ordinary rule of Hindu Law that when there are two widows they should be permitted to include in an unseemly scramble for priority in adopting a son to their deceased husband, the rule being that in such a case the senior widow should have the right which will only pass to the junior widow if the senior widow refuses to adopt or consents to an adoption by her co-widow. Applying this rule to the construction of Ex. B, we must, I think, infer an intention to authorize each of the widows to adopt, the procedure contemplated being that prescribed by the ordinary rules of Hindu Law whereby the refusal to adopt by the senior widow or her consent would be a necessary preliminary to a valid adoption by the junior widow. On the findings of fact it must be held that there was no such refusal to adopt by the plaintiff nor was there any consent to the adoption. It follows that the adoption is invalid. It has also been contended that defendant would be entitled to the property if not as an adopted son at least as a persona designata. There is no force in this contention. The deed of adoption Ex. 2 makes it clear that the rights thereby conferred upon defendant No. 2 are conferred solely and only by virtue of the adoption made under it. It is not the case of a gift to an individual with an erroneous description of that individual but a case of the performance of a formal act by virtue of which the rights in the property would accrue. The formal act being invalid no rights can pass under it. In the result therefore the appeal is dismissed with costs of respondent No. 1 (plaintiff). Leave to appeal is refused.

Will—Will traced to possession of deceased and last seen there not forthcoming after his death—Presumption arising therefrom—Evidence—Appreciation—Nervous witness, value of.

If a will traced to the possession of the deceased and last seen there is not forthcoming on his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself; and that presumption must have effect unless there is sufficient evidence to rebut it. The presumption will be more or less strong according to the character of the custody which the testator had over the will. Allan v. Morrison (1) and Anwar Hossein v. Secretary of State (4), relied on.

A witness's evidence should not be rejected merely because he has appeared nervous in the witness-box.

F. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated January 8, 1937.

Mr. B Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J.—This is an appeal by an objector to an application for probate. The applicants presented an application for probate of the will of one Sita Ram alleged to have been executed and registered by him on May 3, 1929. That Sita Ram who died on February 22, 1934, did execute a will on May 3, 1929, does not, in our judgment admit of any doubt whatever. The learned District Judge who heard the application for probate has upon a consideration of the evidence held that the will, a certified copy of which only has been produced was executed by Sita Ram on that date. The two attesting witnesses had died by the time the application came before the learned Judge for final disposal. One of these witnesses, Baldeo Prasad, however had made at an earlier stage of the proceedings a declaration which is referred to in the application itself. The declaration is as follows:

"I, Baldeo Prasad, one of the witnesses to the last will and testament of the testator mentioned in the above petition, declare that I was present and saw the said testator affix his signature thereto."

Furthermore the scribe Chandu Lal gave evidence and deposed that the will in respect of which probate is sought was executed by Sita Ram. The endorsement shows that Sitaram was duly identified before the Sub-Registrar. It is unnecessary to refer further to the evidence on this point. We see no reason whatever to differ from the conclusion which has been reached by the learned District Judge. The applicants having failed to produce the original will it was for them to show that the will had not been revoked by the testator before his death. In this connection it is appropriate to refer to the provisions of the will. In the will the testator declares :

"I have arrived at an age of sixty years, I have no male or female issues, my wife has died. I have purchased out of my own hard earned money, two houses.....I am not living in my houses and carry on business separately for a long time. I have no co-sharer or co-partner in my movable and immovable property and both the houses have not been transferred in any way or stand hypothecated anywhere. I think it proper that I should make some proper arrangement of my property in my life time so that after my death my property may not be wasted. I, therefore, while in a sound state of body and mind and in the full enjoyment of my senses, without compulsion and coercion on the part of anyone else and of my own accord I have executed, after due consideration and in consultation with my well-wishers, the will in the following terms. So long as I, the executant, shall remain alive, I shall be the owner in possession of all my movable and immovable property outstanding debts, household goods, ornaments, cash, utensils and clothes. I shall have every proprietary power to bring the things to my own use and make transfers in respect thereof. After the death of me, the executant, Sri Thakur Krishnaji installed in the temple in house No. 19-127 situate in Patkapore Bazar, Ram Narain, city of Cawnpore shall be the owner in possession of my movable and immovable property, household goods, outstanding debts, ornaments and cash, etc."

It will be seen that by the aforementioned provisions the testator made an endowment of his entire property. The later provisions in his will make provision for the creation of a trust to manage the endowed property. Eight trustees were appointed, the first named being Maiku Lal one of the petitioners. It is alleged by the petitioners in their petition that the original will had been mislaid since the testator's death. The evidence adduced by the petitioners in regard to the disappearance of the will was directed to proving that one of the trustees mentioned in the will namely Shri Kishan appropriated the will on the day after the death of the testator and had refused to make it available. In the course of his evi-

"He (the testator) himself until his death managed the property on behalf of Thakurji. In the interval between the execution of the will and the testator's death I did not see the will. When the testator's property was examined after his death no list was drawn up. The household property was left as it had been. The money and documents were found by the idol of Thakurji. Shri Kishan opened the door next day in my absence and took the money and the will away. I read out the will aloud in front of all present after the testator's death. I asked Sri Kishan for the will four or five days later. He said he had it under lock and key and would let me have it later. After that I asked for it several times but he always made excuses saying he would give it to me later. This went on for two or three months. I then gave up asking for it. Two or three months after that he gave me the key. I then opened the Kothri in the absence of Sri Kishan but in the presence of others, that was two or three months after the death of the testator and the day after I had been given the key. The Kothri is in the same house as mandir. Various things were found of which a list was made. I and others signed the list. The will was not found. I have the list but not with me at the moment. There was no note on the list that the will was not found. The will was not asked for from Sri Kishan after that."

On the point of the finding of the will on the day of the testator's death Maiku Lal is supported by the witnesses Ramanuj and Dr. Suraj Narain. (After dealing with the evidence of these witnesses their Lordships proceeded further.) We would observe in the first place that a witness's evidence should not be rejected merely because he has appeared nervous in the witness-box. Many witnesses are nervous when giving evidence in Court. In the second place it is to be noted that nowhere in his evidence has Suraj Narain deposed as the learned District Judge seemed to think he did that he had seen Sri Kishan remove the will. What the witness said was :

"In the morning Sri Kishan in my presence took the money and gave it to Sheo Mangal. He left the will himself."

We have examined the original deposition and it appears that what the witness stated was that "he kept the will himself." We do not see any inconsistency on this point in the evidence of Maiku Lal and Dr. Suraj Narain. According to the evidence of Maiku Lal after the will was read it was given into the custody of Sri Kishan. Later apparently the money which was also given to Sri Kishan was handed over to Sheo Mangal. The will was kept according to Suraj Narain by Sri Kishan. There is nothing therefore in Dr. Suraj Narain's evidence to justify the observation that he had stated that he saw Sri Kishan remove the will. In regard to the learned District Judge's criticism of the statement of the witness that he had been often shown the will by the testator we would observe that this was an answer given in cross-examination and it may well be that the witness simply agreed to an answer suggested by the cross-examiner. We are satisfied after a review of the evidence of the witnesses adduced by the petitioners and in the light of other considerations to which we shall now refer that there is no reason not to accept their testimony. The learned District Judge upon the question of the discovery of the will after the testator's death appears to have accepted the evidence of Sri Kishan who denied that there was a will discovered after the testator's death. The learned District Judge however appears to have overlooked the statement made at an earlier stage of the proceedings in his Court by Sri Kishan. The statement is as follows :

"The fund relating to the property dedicated by Sita Ram Halwai, resident of Patkapore, to Sri Radha Krishnaji, is not with me, it is with Shao Mangal. He might have spent something out of it but the remaining amount is with him. He might be having about Rs. 800 with him."

There is clearly an implied admission in this statement that there had been a dedication by Sita Ram; this dedication could only have been by the will executed on May 3, 1929. Whilst rejecting the evidence produced by the petitioners and accepting in part at least the evidence produced by the objector the learned District Judge has nevertheless granted probate. At the conclusion of his judgment he observes ;

"I have not been enlightened on the law on the subject, and I have probably got it wrong; but it appears to me that in circumstances such as these where execution of a will some years prior to the testator's death is proved and the will is not forthcoming and nothing whatsoever can be said further about the will, the proper presumption to make is that the will was still subsisting when the testator died. It is of course possible in such circumstances and therefore in the present case that the testator himself cancelled the will by destroying it. But that is obviously only one of several possibilities, and I do not see why the Court should be called up to presume that that is actually what happened. At all events as I have already said, I have not been referred to any law to that or indeed to any other effect. It appears to me that the more proper presumption to make in the absence of any evidence on which it can be held that the testator cancelled the will by destroying it or otherwise, is that the will continued to subsist and to remain in full force up to the testator's death."

The learned District Judge has misdirected himself in law. The law upon the question is well settled and it is not as the learned District Judge has stated it. On this point reference may be made to the case in Allan v. Morrison (1). This was a case decided by the Privy Council and in the course of their judgment the Board observe :

"It was not denied that there is a presumption, to use the language of Lord Wensleydale in Welch v. Phillips (2), that if a will traced to the possession of the deceased and last seen there is not forthcoming on his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself; and that presumption must have effect unless there is sufficient evidence to rebut it. Whether this should be called a presumption of law or fact does not seem material. It may of course be rebutted, and as said by Cockburn, C. J., in Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards (3), the presumption will be more or less strong according to the character of the custody which the testator had over the will."

Reference may be made further upon the point under discussion to Anwar Hossein v. Secretary of State (4), in which the law on the subject was exhaustively discussed. In the present case however there is evidence which satisfies us that the will was in existence at the time of the testator's death. As we have observed we do not see any reason to reject the testimony of Maiku Lal, Dr. Suraj Narain and Ram Anuj. Further, there is no evidence whatever to justify the conclusion that the testator had changed his intention in regard to the disposition of the property as that intention was embodied in the will which he executed on May 3, 1929. On the contrary the facts and circumstances point to the continued intention of the testator that his wishes as embodied in that will should be given effect to. It was the testator who had established the idol in his own house. This is a matter upon which there can be no question. He, right upto the day of his death, resided in the house and maintained the idol. Furthermore it is plain from the terms of the will itself that its execution was not the result of hasty decision. The testator was a comparatively old man, he had no issue and he desired in these circumstances to make provision for the disposal of his property in the event of his death. There is nothing to indicate that there was any reason for his departing from his intention by revoking his will. The revocation of the will would no doubt be to the benefit of the objector who is a distant relation, but there is nothing to show that the testator changed his mind and destroyed the will with the intention that the property should go to his heirs. The facts that the testator up to the day of his death maintained the idol in his house is quite inconsistent with a departure from the intention that his property should be dedicated to the idol after his death.

We would further observe that the objector has produced no evidence in respect of the averment contained in his written statement "that the deceased had great affection for the objector and his son Manna and the relations continued to be very cordial." As observed the objector is a distant relation and in the course of the will the testator has referred particularly to the fact that he had no male and female heirs. There is no reference in the will to his distant relations. After a full consideration of the evidence upon the record we are satisfied that the will a certified copy of which has been produced is the last will and testament of Sitaram and that the will was in existence at the time of the testator's death. In these circumstances the applicants who are trustees appointed by the testator to manage the endowed property are entitled to probate. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

NARHARI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Mst. MAHARANI—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT

O. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 109—Succession to tenure of protected thekedar, how governed—Hindu holder—Idea of notional jointness.
Succession to the tenure of protected thekedar is governed under s. 109, O. P. Land Revenue Act by the personal law of the deceased thekedar. The law which is to be applied is the ordinary law of Hindu succession as modified in minor details by s. 109, and irrespective of any idea of notional jointness which might arise from the principle that the tenure is impartible.

Hence where a person who after expressly denying the status of jointness with his deceased brother who was the last holder of the tenure, subsequently puts forward a claim as reversioner on the death of the widow of his deceased brother and not as a survivor, he is not entitled to succeed to the exclusion of the daughter of the last holder. In such a case no question of notional jointness arises. 126 Ind. Cas. 237 (1), distinguished.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the District Judge, Raipur, dated September 14, 1937.

Mr. R. B. Choudhri, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's second appeal from an affirming judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff sought a declaration that an order passed in the Revenue Court regarding mutation in the name of a protected thekedar, which mutation had been effected in the name of one Mst. Maharani, was null and void, and that he was entitled to the status of protected thekedar.

The last protected thekedar was his brother Jagatram. The defendant is Jagatram's daughter by Mst. Laxmi. Originally the plaintiff joined with him in the plaint his nephew Kangalu on the ground that they were joint and had been joint with Jagatram and his widow Mst. Apurna and that on Apurna's death he was entitled to succeed and that Mst. Maharani was not Jagatram's daughter and her mother had not been married to Jagatram. He stated that the thekedari rights had originally been conferred on Tilkho, the father of Jagatram and himself. The defendant asserted her legitimacy and her paternity and denied that Narhari, the plaintiff, was joint with the rest of the family. She also asserted that her father Jagatram had been the first protected thekedar. It will thus be seen that the plaintiff based his claim (from the fact that both he and his nephew were co-plaintiffs) on jointness and survivorship and also denied the defendant's legitimacy and descent from Jagatram. He, however, definitely abandoned this position and in an oral statement made before the commencement of the trial it was stated on his behalf as follows:—

"As plaintiff No. 1 alone is the heir of Jagatram as his reversioner and inherited the protected thekedari rights of the village on the death of his widow Annapurna the question of jointness or separateness of the plaintiff with Jagatram is not material and is not pressed any further as plaintiff claims no interest on that account. It is denied that Lakshmi was the married wife of Jagatram or that the defendant is the legitimate daughter."

The plaintiff therefore made it clear by abandoning his co-plaintiff and by stating that he was Jagatram's reversioner that he did not rely at all on his status as being a joint member of the family with his deceased brother Jagatram, and on his reiteration of the defendant's illegitimacy the suit went to trial on this latter question alone. It has been found in both Courts that Mst. Laxmi was the married wife of Jagatram and that the defendant was his legitimate daughter. In addition to an attempt to contest that finding of fact in second appeal the plaintiff-appellant now puts forward the contention in law that as the estate was impartible and he had not renounced his right to succeed, he must be held to be notionally joint with his deceased brother Jagatram all along, and as the nearest male relative he was entitled to succeed in accordance with the principles laid down in Ram Sundar Mal v. Collector of Gorakhpur (1) (the decision in this case was reversed later by their Lordships of the Privy Council but only on the question of the registration of a document, and the decision was upheld on the points of Hindu Law). This point found no mention in the memorandum of appeal preferred in the lower Appellate Court, but the point was raised in that Court in the course of argument, and it was held that as the plaintiff had specifically renounced his claim on the ground of jointness, it was not open to him to raise the question again.

In Ram Sundar Mal v. Collector of Gorakhpur (1) it has been laid down that in the case of an impartible estate held originally by a common ancestor of the contesting parties, on the failure of a male descendant of the last deceased holder the nearest male of another branch will succeed to the exclusion of the widow of the last holder and that unless there has been an express proof of renunciation by such male claimant or his ancestor, the notional jointness among the male members of the family continues despite prolonged separation in residence, worship and social intercourse. Now, it is clear that in the case which I am now considering, even on the assumption that the first protected thekedar was Tilkho, the plaintiff's father, and not Jagatram, his brother, a fact which the trial Court assumed without putting the disputed matter in issue, the law as enunciated in Ram Sundar Mal v. Collector of Gorakhpur (1) has no application to the present case, which is governed by s. 109 of the Land Revenue Act. It is true that the tenure of protected thekedar is declared to be impartible. The plaintiff claims that the succession has not been determined according to law. It is, however, laid down in s. 109 that the succession shall be regulated by the personal law of the deceased thekedar subject to certain conditions which to some extent modify the ordinary personal law applicable to Hindus,

(1) 52 A 793; 126 Ind. Cas. 237; (1930) A L J 724; Ind. Rul. (1930) All 797; A I R 1930 All 797.

The scheme of succession laid down in s. 109 (1)(b) demonstrates that any question of notional jointness through a common ancestry is to be excluded; I refer in particular to the proviso to cl. 2 of sub-s. (b) which states that of such persons bearing the same degree of relationship to the deceased thekedar one who is joint in estate at the time of his death shall be preferred to one who was not so joint. There is thus a clear distinction between a joint and a separated brother as understood in the ordinary Hindu Law of succession. Also there is provision in the case of more than one widow, which of the widows is to succeed. If the law in Ram Sundar Mal v. Collector of Gorakhpur (1) applies to this case, there would be no provision for widows at all.

It follows, then, that the law which is to be applied is the ordinary law of Hindu succession as modified in minor details and irrespective, since it is so provided in the statute, of any idea of notional jointness which might arise from the principle that the tenure is impartible, and there can be no doubt that this is the view which the plaintiff himself took in the trial Court where he claimed as a reversioner on the death of the widow of the last holder and pinned his case on his ability to prove that his deceased brother had left no legitimate issue. The claim that the Courts below have failed to take into consideration the fact that his father was the first thekedar and that by the oral statement he did not renounce his right as a member of the joint family, entitled to succeed by survivorship on that account, is thus untenable, and if this claim was in the plaintiff's mind and he genuinely had no desire to relinquish it, the oral statement on his behalf would certainly have been differently worded. The statement there made was a correct exposition of the law that the succession to the tenure was governed by the personal law of the deceased thekedar with such modifications as would prevent more than one person succeeding to the tenure. That being so, the plaintiff-appellant can only succeed on the supposition that the defendant is not the legitimate daughter of the deceased, a daughter being a nearer heir than a separated brother. That the plaintiff was a separated brother of the deceased admits of no contradiction; he himself has claimed as a reversioner rather than as a survivor, having expressly denied the status of jointness, and indeed it has been shown that more than 10 years before he admitted that he was separated from his brother.

Similarly, turning to the question of the defendant's legitimacy, we find that at the same time to which reference has just been made, the plaintiff in addition to admitting that he was separated from his brother admitted in the course of mutation proceedings that Laxmi was his brother's wife and that the defendant was their daughter. This, in addition to the findings of fact that the parents were married and that the girl is the legitimate issue of that marriage, forms an effective bar to this question being raised in second appeal. Reference has been made to a remark in Russell's Tribes and Castes on Koltas, to which caste the parties belong, that Girls should be wedded before maturity, as among most of the Uriya castes, and if no suitable husband is forthcoming a nominal marriage is sometimes arranged with an old man, and the girl is afterwards disposed of as a widow. It is contended that this marriage is one of that kind. Apart from the fact that the findings on record preclude any discussion as to the possibility of such a marriage, it is evident that the custom cited by Russell clearly postulates that the marriage is a nominal one without intercourse and without children. It has been held as a fact that a child of this marriage was born.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1895), s. 145—Magistrate, if and when can cancel his order under s. 145 (1) or terminate proceedings.

Sub-sections (4) and (5) of s. 145, Criminal P. O., are not exhaustive and are not intended to prevent a Magistrate from terminating proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., when he is satisfied that the very cause and reason of proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., has ceased to exist. The Magistrate can cancel his order under sub-s. (1) or terminate the proceedings when, upon other information, or, it may be, on his own information he is satisfied that no dispute likely to cause a breach of peace exists. However as proceedings are instituted upon some information, so they should be terminated likewise upon some information and ordinarily it is desirable before a Magistrate terminates proceedings of this sort in the exercise of powers which by necessary implication, the section confers, that he should have on record a Police report or other information to the effect that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. But where, the diary shows that the parties attended the Court from time to time, talked about a compromise and then finally stayed away and did nothing for months, that might be said to constitute information which would justify a Magistrate in his opinion that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed any longer and would justify his order terminating the proceedings. 91 Ind. Cas. 399 (2) and Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Barada Kanta Chowdhury (3), relied on.

Or. Ref. by the Additional Sessions Judge, Sukkur, recommending setting aside the previous order.

Mr. P. S. Shahani, for Opponents Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6 and 7.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge, Sukkur, in which he recommends that we set aside an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Shikarpur, directing that proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., which were before him should be terminated. The learned Sessions Judge is of the opinion that as an order had been passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 145 (1), Criminal P. O., the only method in which the proceedings based upon that order could be terminated was by an order on an inquiry under sub-s. (4) or by an order under sub-s. (5) cancelling the order under sub-s. (1) and that it was not open to the Magistrate to terminate proceedings merely because on his own information or on the ground of lapse of time he was of the opinion that no dispute as to a breach of peace any longer existed. But we do not think that sub-ss. (4) and (5) are exhaustive and were intended to prevent a Magistrate from terminating proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., when he was satisfied that the very cause and reason of proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., has ceased to exist. At first sight it would appear that the words of sub-s. (5) are peremptory. An order passed under sub-s. (1) can be cancelled only under provisions of sub-s. (5) and that indeed appears to be the principal argument of the learned Judge and of the ruling in Sastu Sahu v. Nathuni Thakur (1) on which he relies. But sub-

(1) A I R 1924 Pat. 689; 83 Ind. Cas. 665; 26 Or. L J 105; 6 P L T 258.

s. (5) clearly is not exhaustive. It begins in this way:

"(5) Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend, or any other person interested, from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed"

It merely provides that nothing shall prevent the party required to attend under the order passed under sub-s. (1) from showing that there is no such dispute to justify the order. It also permits any other person interested to do the same, but it does not say that if the Magistrate himself is otherwise satisfied that the reason for the proceedings no longer exists, he should be compelled to continue with the proceedings which have lost their purpose; and when sub-s. (5) goes on to say that "subject to such cancellation the order of the Magistrate under sub-s. (1) shall be final," it means, we think, merely that in the special case to which sub-s. (5) has reference the order of the Magistrate under sub-s. (1) shall be final under certain circumstances; but it does not mean that in all other circumstances it shall also be final; it does not mean that the Magistrate cannot in fact cancel his order under sub-s. (1) or terminate the proceedings when, upon other information, or, it may be, on his own information he is satisfied that no dispute likely to cause a breach of peace exists. To hold otherwise would be to arrive at an absurd conclusion; for instance, after a Magistrate issued an order under sub-s. (1) of s. 145, Criminal P. O., the parties may come to an amicable settlement. They may never come near the Magistrate's Court or his camp again; is a Magistrate, then, to have no power to terminate proceedings taken in the interests of public peace, and which clearly have lost their purpose? We do not think it can be said that a Magistrate's power is limited in any such way or that sub-ss. (4) and (5) set out all the circumstances under which proceedings under this section can be brought to a close and in support of this view reference may be made to the case in Narasayya v. Venkiah (2) and the case in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Barada Kanta Chowdhry (3). The Madras case followed the Calcutta case and in the Calcutta case this point was put thus:

"A party to a proceeding under s. 145 is not in the position of a plaintiff in a civil suit who has set the Court in motion and has a right to require a decision upon the question raised by him. If a Magistrate either refuses to make an order under sub-s. (1) of s. 145, or, having made such an order, subsequently cancels it on the ground that a dispute does not exist likely to cause a breach of the peace, no private person has any status to contest the propriety of his refusal to make an enquiry into the question of possession."

In the Madras case the learned Judge said:

"It must be borne in mind that proceedings under s. 145 are not taken in the interests of private parties but for the preservation of the public peace and if the Magistrate is satisfied that the likelihood of a breach of the peace either did not exist or that it has ceased to exist, it is the proper duty of the Magistrate to drop proceedings under s. 145 and withdraw from interfering with the rights of parties in the property."

The learned Judge also points out that s. 145 (5), Criminal P. O., provides for a special case and that the existence of this sub-section does not prevent the Magistrate himself from terminating the proceedings if he is satisfied there is no likelihood of the breach of the peace and we would only add this: We think that even though the proceedings relate to a breach of the peace, it is desirable that as a certain formality is required in the institution of these proceedings, so they should be terminated by the learned Magistrate likewise with some formality. And as proceedings are instituted upon some information, so they should be terminated likewise upon some information and that ordinarily it is desirable before a Magistrate terminates proceedings of this sort in the exercise of powers which, by necessary implication, we think, the section confers, that he should have on record a Police report or other information to the effect that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. But where, as in this case, the diary shows the parties attended the Court from time to time, talked about a compromise and then finally stayed away and did nothing for months on end, we think that might be said to constitute information which would justify a Magistrate in his opinion that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed any longer and would justify his order terminating the proceedings. It may be, the information on which he acted was derived from the Court diary and the conduct of the parties, but under the circumstances that information is as good as any other and we can say that as proceedings were started upon some information under sub-s. (1) so also they were terminated by the Magistrate upon some other information sufficient to justify the exercise by him of those powers which the section by implication necessarily confers. We think therefore this is not a

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 10 of 1939

April 4, 1939

ROBERTS C. J. AND BRAUND, J.
TAN BA CHENG AND ANOTHER—

versus

REGISTRAR, ORIGINAL SIDE, HIGH COURT—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Jurisdiction of Court to make complaint of abetment of offence under s. 205, Penal Code—Discretion as to making complaint under s. 476 exercised by single Judge of High Court—Interference with, by appellate Bench in appeal.

A complaint of abetment of forgery is a complaint of an offence punishable under one of the sections of the Code named in s. 195 (1) (b) namely s. 205, I. P. O. Moreover, the phrase in s. 476, Criminal P. O., "any offence referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b)" must mean any offence to which s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) has reference. The Court therefore has jurisdiction to make a complaint of abetment of an offence under s. 205, I. P. O.

The power to lay a complaint under s. 476, Criminal P. O., is a discretionary power, and an appellate Bench of the High Court would not interfere with the exercise of his discretion by a single Judge of the Court unless it could be shown that the discretion had been exercised under some misapprehension or error which was plain on the face of the record.

O. Misc. A. from an order of the High Court, in Civil Misc. Case No. 12 of 1939.

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Myint Thern, The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Roberts, C. J.—This is an appeal brought against the Registrar on the Original Side of this Court, who has drawn up two complaints against both and one of the appellants respectively, in accordance with an order of the learned Judge on the original side, passed on January 21, of this year under s. 476, Criminal P. O. The material words of that section, for the purpose of this appeal, read as follows:

"When any Civil Court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), which appears to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed (in the case of the High Court) by such officer as the Court may appoint, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate."

The suit in question was one in which the two present appellants were the plaintiffs. It was of a complicated nature and in the course of a protracted hearing the learned Judge came to the conclusion that a forgery had been committed and that, although the appellants had not committed it themselves, they had aided and abetted its commission. If that be so, they had committed an offence punishable under s. 205, read with s. 100, I. P. O. He also came to the conclusion that appellant No. 2 had committed perjury, punishable under s. 193. Accordingly, he formed the opinion that it was expedient that, in the interests of justice, an inquiry should be made into the commission of those two offences.

The first point which is taken before us is that the words of the section say that the Court has jurisdiction, where it thinks that an inquiry should be made "into any offence referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b)" to make a complaint; and it is said, and said rightly, that the offence of abetment is not specifically mentioned in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), Criminal P. O., although by sub-s. (4) of s. 195 it has been enacted that the provisions of sub-s. (1), with reference to the offences named therein, apply also to criminal conspiracies to commit such offences and to the abetment of such offences and attempts to commit them. It is clear that under this section a Magistrate can take cognizance; not only of the offence under s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), upon the complaint in writing to the Court in relation to which the offence is alleged to have been committed, but of all cases in which the abetment of such offence has been proved. If therefore a Court decides that it is expedient that an inquiry should be held and that a complaint should be made against a person for the commission of forgery contrary to s. 205, I. P. O., and such a complaint is heard by the Magistrate, he plainly has jurisdiction to convict that person of abetment of forgery merely if he has arrived at the conclusion, after hearing the evidence, that the accused was not a principal but an abettor. It is said that, although this is so, where the Court has arrived at that conclusion it cannot make a complaint against an abettor merely, because the offence of abetment is not specifically mentioned in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b). I cannot help feeling that this leads to an absurd conclusion and, although the statute is a penal one and must be construed strictly, I find it impossible to assent to an argument which is based upon these premises. If two persons in two different Courts in the same building on the same day were found to have been prima facie guilty of exactly the same offence in relation to a proceeding before the Court, namely the abetment of forgery, the Judge in one Court, having ground at first to suppose that the suspected person might be the principal offender, might act under the jurisdiction conferred by s. 476, and the Magistrate, finding him an abettor only, might send him to prison, whereas in the second Court the Judge realizing that there was no possible ground for saying that the person suspected was a principal but that he was an abettor merely, according to Mr. Owasjee's argument, would be powerless to proceed against him for exactly the same offence as in the other Court. This, I think, would reduce the administration of criminal law to an absurdity.

When one looks at s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), it seems to me that a complaint of abetment of forgery is a complaint of an offence punishable under one of the Sections of the Code named therein, namely s. 205. It is quite true that it is only punishable under s. 205 when read with s. 109; but if there were no s. 205 it would not be punishable at all. If therefore it is not punishable without the existence of s. 205, I feel that it is an offence punishable under that section of the same Code, even though that section has to be read with other sections in order to find exactly in what the guilt consists and what the measure of punishment may be.

Moreover, I think, that the phrase in s. 476, Criminal P. O., "any offence referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b)" must mean any offence to which s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) has reference. The provision that I am quoting does not say "any offence specifically mentioned in s. 195, sub-s. (1) cl. (b)." It says, "any offence referred to..." Now, what are the offences to which s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) has reference? They are these named offences and then, by way of explanation sub-s. (4) says that the provisions of sub-s. (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to the abetment of such offences and attempts to commit them. In my opinion, therefore, on all these grounds—and, be it noted, if one only of these arguments is sound, it suffices—that case comes within the jurisdiction of the learned Judge. It seems to me impossible to think that the provisions of the criminal law can be construed in such a way as to exclude from the ambit of his powers the making of a complaint in relation to an offence less incriminating, generally speaking, than the principal offence, and deprive him of the power to make a complaint of an offence to a Magistrate, who has full jurisdiction to deal with that offence whether it is one committed by a principal offender or by an aider and abettor merely.

Having disposed of this matter, we next have to consider whether the learned Judge exercised his discretion in a matter in which we have now held he had jurisdiction. I am of opinion that his discretion in this case was properly exercised; and in saying this I desire to be most careful in avoiding any expression of opinion as to whether he was right upon the facts or not, or as to whether I should have myself exercised the discretion in the same way; in so saying I desire neither to criticize the learned Judge nor to offer to the Magistrate who will try this case the least assistance as to what my view, if I have had material to form any view in relation to it, may be. Dunkley, J., in a case in which I was sitting with him, in Rash Mohan Shaha v. The Registrar, Original Side of the High Court at Rangoon, Civil Misc. Appeal No. 9 of 1938 said:

"The power to lay a complaint under s. 476, Criminal P. O., is a discretionary power, and an Appellate Bench of this Court would not interfere with the exercise of his discretion by a Single Judge of the Court unless it could be shown that the discretion had been exercised under some misapprehension or error which was plain on the face of the record."

There is a right of appeal given against complaints made by a Court under s. 476, Criminal P. O.: so is there a right of appeal given on mere questions of fact to Appellate Courts. It has been laid down by this Court over and over again and following the English practice and the judgment of Viscount Sankey, L. C., in Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home (1), that the Appellate Court will consider most carefully the tribunal whose decision upon facts it has to review and will only interfere when it is certain upon the facts that there was a real misapprehension of it. We have to apply the same principle, as it seems to me, in dealing with s. 476, Criminal P. O., as we apply in relation to appeals. It is well-known that in an appeal on a pure question of fact from the original side of this Court the Appellate Court shows great reluctance to interfere with a Judge of experience who has had the opportunity of investigating matters at first hand for himself. Nonetheless, Appellate Courts often, for the benefit of Subordinate Courts, give directions by way of general guidance to Judges as to how they should ascertain the facts and as to the proper manner in which evidence is to be appreciated. Here we have an appeal from an order under s. 476, Criminal P. O., made directly by a High Court Judge upon the original side in a case which came before him. And speaking for myself, I am disinclined to think that he is likely to have been wrong, not in the view which he took of the facts, but in the exercise of his discretion by reason of the fact that he may not have observed all the rules which Courts from time to time have said ought to be borne in mind by Subordinate Judicial Officers when considering the desirability of making complaints under this section.

Whenever the machinery of the criminal law is set in motion, regard must be had to the particular facts of the case. It is impossible to say when a complaint ought to be made under this section and when it ought not: no hard and fast rule in this case can be laid down. And I am perfectly satisfied from a reading of the learned Judge who made the order, that he has carefully considered the matters before him and whether he was right or wrong with regard to the fact (as to which I express no opinion), he has exercised the discretion which is required of him in making the order. I think, for the purposes of this judgment, I need no more than make two quotations from what the learned Judge has said. He said:

"The minute book was vigorously attacked by the learned Advocate for the defendant trustees. The book therefore was one of the utmost importance in the suit, and the question as to who wrote the entries in that book was equally important. It is in that regard that Mr. Chin Hone On said that he actually saw Mr. Tan Ba Cheng writing the entries in it and we now know that that is false."

And he had previously remarked in relation to the other matter:

"It necessarily follows from the mere fact that the plaintiff were co-plaintiffs in a suit under s. 92, that they agreed together, the one with the other to do this thing, namely to cause to be done an illegal act, that is to say the commission by a person, whose identity has not as yet been established, of an offence punishable under s. 205, I. P. O."

He reviewed the evidence with some care and said:

"I am not now deciding whether or not the plaintiffs have in fact committed all or any of the abovementioned offences. My present function is merely to consider whether a prima facie case has been made out. It seems to me that there is a reasonable foundation for a charge under all the abovementioned sections of the I. P. O."

And he adds that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction. Whether he is right or wrong as regards the last matter is quite beside the point. He then says, having examined s. 476;

"I am of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the abovementioned offences in regard to both the plaintiffs."

And he sent the case for inquiry and trial to the District Magistrate. We have looked at the form of the order drawn up by the learned Registrar and we are of opinion that it is expedient, that orders under this section should be carefully drawn up and that it is desirable, and we accordingly direct that the learned Registrar should attend in Chambers before my brother Braund in order to supervise the drawing up of this order. It is important to see that the complaint which is lodged follows the directions laid down in s. 476, Criminal P. O., with care and that it omits from its contents any reference which might be construed by the Court before which the proceedings are taken as a pressing invitation to record a finding adverse to anyone charged with an offence. All that the learned Judge does is to exercise his discretion and in the exercise of it to decide that the criminal law should be put in motion and that he has done in this case: and I am by no means disposed to put a spoke in that machinery so as to injure its motion. The case must go on in the usual way and the learned Magistrate who tries it must try it as he would do a complaint of an ordinary kind and must remain completely unaffected by any consideration of its origin. It is for him, and for him alone, to try whether either a prima facie or a satisfactory case has been made out against any of these accused persons and if there is no ground for the complaint which is lodged, no doubt it will be his duty as well as his pleasure to acquit them both. There will be no order as to costs.

Braund, J.—I agree. So far as the question whether this Court ought, in appeal, to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge under s. 476, Criminal P. O., is concerned, there is very little I have to add. As in all cases of appeal:

which involves the discretion of a subordinate Court, the limits within which the Appellate Court ought to act must be very closely circumscribed and it seems to me to be in the first place essential to appreciate what it is that the appeal lies from. There is a world of difference between an appeal from a decision of fact by a subordinate Court and a decision from the exercise of a discretion. In this particular case all that was required of the learned Judge was that, upon the evidence which he had available to him and upon his own individual appreciation of it, he had to come to a formal opinion—it has to be observed that it is his opinion that was material about two things; first whether there appeared to him to have been committed an offence in relation to the proceedings that had gone on in his Court, and secondly, whether it was in the public interest, or rather, in the interest of justice, that he should put in motion what my Lord the Chief Justice has described as the machinery of the criminal law. And all we can do in appeal is to look at such available record as we have of what the material was in the Court below and to try to see whether the learned Judge carried out that duty. We are not in the least concerned to decide here whether, if the same material had been before us, or either of us, we or either of us should have come to the same conclusion; all we have to do shortly, is to see whether the learned Judge in fact exercised the jurisdiction that the Act vested in him. Now, what do we find? After all the best test of what the learned Judge has done is to see how he has himself described his own mental process. He said in his judgment that he appreciates that he is not deciding whether or not the plaintiffs had in fact committed the offences in question. He says:

"My present function is merely to consider whether a prima facie case has been made out. It seems to me that there is a reasonable foundation for a charge under all the abovementioned sections of the I. P. O. and that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction."

Now, the learned Judge made that statement after a long process of taking evidence and after a very careful consideration of the evidence himself and it seems to me, at best, that it would be impossible to say that on the face of the record there has been any failure at all by the learned Judge to exercise a discretion upon those principles which s. 476 requires him to use. So far as the major charge, that is to say, the charge of forgery is concerned, it relates to both the appellants and there was material upon which the learned Judge could come to some such conclusion as the one he reached. I must not be misunderstood as weighing up the evidence on either side, because I certainly would not allow myself to express any opinion as to whether a case is likely to be made out against the appellants or not; all I am concerned with is to point out what the material was. The learned Judge had a case which the plaintiffs had started and in which they pressed, among other things, for the appointment of a number of new trustees. And the learned Judge in effect says this:

"I find in the course of these proceedings that there are a number of trustees put forward as new trustees. I find that they took very little interest in the proceedings. They did not even attend Court. They have not approached the Advocate who has been instructed; and in short, they were content to let matters take their own course."

On the other hand, Mr. Cowasjee points out that there is no evidence that any of these proposed trustees were nominees of the plaintiffs. The learned Judge himself has, in his judgment, considered these facts. He says:

"None of the others was sufficiently interested ever to enquire from the Advocate whom they had instructed, at any time during the fifteen months or more which elapsed between their signing the written statement and my giving judgment in the suit, how the case was going, and at no time throughout the somewhat lengthy hearing did they attend the Court. Defendant No. 37 did come to Court during the hearing and was called as a witness by the plaintiffs themselves. But he said in cross-examination that he himself did not want to be a trustee. It is quite clear that he is really a puppet of the plaintiffs."

All I am pointing out is that it is wrong to say that there was no material before the learned Judge from which he could conclude as he did; but, by that I must be very careful not to give the impression that I endorse any finding against the plaintiffs in that respect. It seems to me, therefore, for those reasons and the other reasons which my Lord the Chief Justice has given, that it is impossible to say here that the learned Judge has exercised no discretion.

As regards the other point, as to whether the Court has jurisdiction or not, it is a point which at one time gave me, I confess, a good deal of difficulty. The point is a very short one; it can be simply stated. I think in these terms; whether in s. 476, Criminal P. C., the words "referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c)" require that the offence in respect of which the complaint is ultimately laid must be one of those which are mentioned specifically in s. 195, sub-s. cl. (b) or cl. (c), or whether it is sufficient that the offence is one to which those clauses apply or have reference. It has to be conceded that, if the words, "referred to in" are construed in their strictest possible sense, it would mean that the offence has to be one of those which are to be found within the four corners of s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c). And it is that circumstance that at one time gave rise to considerable difficulty in my mind, coupled with the circumstance that, on ordinary principles, one has to construe a penal provision in a statute strictly—strictly, that is in favour of the person who is liable to be penalized by the Section. But that does not mean, I think, that where a Section of a penal statute admits of one reasonable interpretation only we are not to be entitled to give it the only reasonable construction we can give it because it does some slight violence to the natural meaning of the words. Here, it seems to me that there is only one way in which the words "referred to in" can be construed so as to give a reasonable construction at all to the scheme which is envisaged by s. 476. And I find a passage in "Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes" (at p. 240) which seems to support that view. He says:

"The rule of strict construction, however, whenever invoked, comes attended with qualifications and other rules no less important, and it is by the light which each contributes that the meaning must be determined. Among them is the rule that that sense of the words is to be adopted which best harmonizes with the context and promotes in the fullest manner the policy and object of the Legislature. The paramount object, in construing penal as well as other statutes, is to ascertain the legislative intent, and the rule of strict construction is not violated by permitting the words to have their full meaning, or the more extensive of two meanings, when best effectuating the intention. They are, indeed, frequently taken in the widest sense, sometimes even in a sense more wide than etymologically belongs or is popularly attached to them in order to carry out effectually the legislative intent, or, to use Lord Coke's words, to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy."

Now, returning to s. 476 read with s. 195, we have to observe that the offence of abetment is dealt with only in sub-s. (4) of s. 195. By that sub-section it was added as an amendment that the provisions of s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), were to apply to an abetment. And in that sense quite clearly s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) is made to have reference to an abetment. It is clear that unless we construe the words "referred to in" as meaning "to which s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b), is applicable" there would be no way in which the offence of the abetment, when it arises in relation to an offence connected with proceedings in Court, could ever be made the subject of a complaint. Section 195 (1) (b) read in conjunction with sub-s. (4) in effect says that no complaint relating to an abetment of an offence under s. 205 shall be laid except on the complaint in writing of a Court. That is quite plain. If, it seems to me, you are going to paralyze the only means by which a Court can lay a complaint by excluding from it abetment, it amounts, in my view, to paralyzing the whole machinery; or, to put it in popular language, it seems to me to make complete nonsense out of the clear intention of the Legislature that the machinery shall apply to abetment.

I have given a careful consideration as I can, to this point because, admittedly at one stage it did worry me. But I can see no escape from the alternative either of reducing the Section to complete meaninglessness or else to giving to the words "referred to in" the construction which I have indicated earlier in this judgment. It seems to me, therefore, for these reasons, that there was jurisdiction in the learned Judge to lay the complaint as he has done in respect of the offence of abetment read in connexion with s. 205. For all those reasons, I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that this appeal must be dismissed. I only desire to add that whoever hears the criminal case which is now liable to follow, must be careful to approach the matter afresh and not to allow himself in any way to be influenced by the views which the learned Judge has expressed. No question of fact nor of law has yet been found against either of the appellants so far as the charges against them are concerned. It will be best, in this as in all other cases of the kind, if the Magistrate who ultimately tries the case does not even read the judgment out of which the complaint has arisen.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 39, O. XXI, rr. 5, 8 — Transmission of decree for execution to Sub-Court — Application for execution, when lies—Decree has to be sent to District Court under O. XXI, r. 5 only for transmission.

An order transferring a decree to another Court takes effect from the date on which it is passed and the transferee Court has jurisdiction to entertain application for execution from the date of the passing of the order of transfer. 144 Ind. Cas. 923 (1), relied on.

The decree under O. XXI, r. 5, Civil P. O., has to be sent to the District Court for mere transmission to the transferee Court and therefore no application lies to the District Court and O. XXI, r. 8 does not apply to such a case. Debi Dial Sahu v. Moharaj Singh (2), dissented from.

Mr. N. Vasudeva Rao, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and G. Chandrasekhara Sastry, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is, we think, clearly wrong. It is opposed to the decision in Modali Ademma v. Venkatasubbaya (1). With respect, we are unable to agree with the decision in Debi Dial Sahu v. Moharaj Singh (2). Rules 5 and 8 of O. XXI, Civil P. O., are distinct and independent. Under s. 39, Civil P. O., the Court which passed the decree may send it for execution "to another Court..." The Court which passed the decree in this case had power to send the decree for execution to the Sub-Court, Vizagapatam, and in fact that was the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Guntur, on August 29, 1936. The decree, under r. 5, O. XXI, had to be sent to the District Court, Vizagapatam, for mere transmission to the Sub-Court, Vizagapatam: vide O. R. P. No. 139 which forbids the decree-holder to make any application to the District Court. Rule 8 of O. XXI applies only to those cases in which the decree is sent for execution to the District Court in another district, (or for that matter in the same district). In such cases, the District Court is not obliged to execute the decree itself but may transfer it for execution to any Subordinate Court having jurisdiction. If the decree is not sent for execution to the District Court, the District Court cannot execute it but must merely transmit it to the Court specified in the order of the Court which passed the decree: vide s. 38, Civil P. O., which shows that the only Courts competent to execute a decree are (1) the Court which passed it, (2) the Court to which it is sent for execution.

Following Modali Ademma v. Venkatasubbaya (1), we hold that the order of transfer in this case took effect from August 29, 1936, that the Sub-Court, Vizagapatam, had jurisdiction to execute it thereafter and that the decree-holder's application on August 31, 1936 was not barred by limitation. JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 183, 181—Application to bring legal representatives of deceased judgment-debtor on record falls within Art. 183—Decree-holder may apply at any time within 12 years of decree or revival of decree—Right to bring such legal representatives on record, when arises—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII—Applicability to execution proceedings—Right to execute decree, if abates on failure to bring legal representatives of deceased judgment-debtor on record—Execution—Transfer of decree to another Court—Transmitting Court, if loses seisin of decree.

An application to bring legal representatives of deceased judgment-debtor on record is one to enforce a judgment or decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act and if made within 12 years it is within time.

The death of a judgment-debtor does not enlarge or decrease the period of limitation prescribed for the execution of a decree. To enforce a judgment passed by High Court the decree-holder must apply for execution at any time within 12 years of the passing of the decree or of the revival of the decree. If the judgment-debtor be dead the decree-holder must still apply within this period. He need not take any steps to bring the judgment-debtor's heirs on the record at any anterior period; if he does it within this period of 12 years prescribed for the execution of the decree he will be in time.

The right to bring the legal representatives on the record does not arise on the death of the judgment-debtor; it arises only when an application for execution is made.

Order XXII, Civil P. O., has no application to execution proceedings and the right to execute a decree does not abate or get extinguished by reason of the fact that the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor have not been brought on the record within any specified period.

When a decree has been transmitted for execution to another Court, the transmitting Court does not lose entire seisin of the decree. So far as the Court of transfer is concerned, it continues to have jurisdiction over the execution proceedings until such execution is withdrawn or stayed or until it certifies to the Court which passed the decree either that the decree has been executed or if it fails to execute the decree the circumstances attending such failure. 109 Ind. Cas. 417 (1), relied on.

Mr. D. N. Sen, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. N. Ghose, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an application by a decree-holder for recording the deaths of certain judgment-debtors and for leave to execute the decree against their legal representatives. Notice of this application has been served on all these legal representatives. One of them has appeared and opposed the application. His name is Samarendra Narain Saha. In his affidavit in opposition he takes up the position that the decree is over 12 years old and that its execution is barred by limitation inasmuch as there has been no revivor of the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act, within 12 years of this application. At the hearing, Counsel on behalf of Samarendra Narain Saha took up a different position. He admitted that there had been revivors of the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act, the last one being on September 29, 1926, when the decree-holder received a part payment of the decretal amount pursuant to an order dated August 11, 1926 passed by this Court, directing that the part payment should be made. He took up the position, however, that the present application was not an application to enforce a judgment and that, therefore, the limitation of 12 years provided by Art. 183, Lim. Act, would not govern this application. He contended that this application is one to which the residuary Art. 181, Lim. Act, which prescribes a period of three years limitation applies inasmuch as no period of limitation has been fixed for such an application by any other Article of the Lim. Act or by s. 48, Civil P. C. He next points out that this application has been brought more than three years after the death of the persons whose heirs are sought to be substituted and argues that it is barred by limitation. It will be convenient for a proper understanding of the contentions of both parties to set out certain facts.

The decree was passed on May 19, 1913 against Durga Narain Saha, Ram Narain Saha, Hriday Narain Saha and Kristodhone Saha. The plaintiff was Gobinda Nath Saha Chowdhury. Gobinda Nath Saha Chowdhury died leaving certain heirs. These heirs by two deeds of assignment transferred their interest in the decree to the petitioner Janada Sundari Dassi. On September 11, 1919 the petitioner obtained an order from this Court in execution of this decree whereby the sum of Rs. 20,000 lying to the credit of Suit No. 766 of 1913 was attached. In 1921 another attachment was levied with respect to a sum of money lying to the credit of an execution case in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Foruth Court, of Mymensingh, and a sum of Rs. 2,200 was received in part satisfaction of the decree. On September 29, 1926, Jnanada Sundari received a sum of Rs. 3,783-11-11 out of the sum lying to the credit of Suit No. 766 of 1913, pursuant to an order of this Court. It is admitted that the decree has been kept alive and that the period of limitation of twelve years prescribed for the execution of the decree will commence to run from September 29, 1926. On March 3, 1938, that is to say within twelve years of the date when the decree was last revived, the petitioner applied to this Court for transmission of the decree to the Court of the District Judge of Dacca for execution. On March 7, 1938, the decree was transferred to Dacca. On March 11, 1938 the petitioner applied before the Subordinate Judge of Dacca for execution of the decree and the case was marked "Money Execution Case No. 27 of 1938." She also applied there for substitution of the names of the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtors Hriday Narain Saha, Ram Narain Saha and Kali Narain Saha. I might mention here that the original judgment-debtor Durga Narain Saha died leaving him surviving Kali Narain Saha, Surendra Narain Saha and Brojendra Narain Saha as his heirs, and that Kali Narain died on November 10, 1930 leaving him surviving Amarendra Narain Saha and Samarendra Narain Saha as his heirs and legal representatives. Hriday died in 1930 and Ram in 1926.

When this application was made before the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, the heirs sought to be substituted objected on the ground that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to make the substitution and contended that the application should have been made to this Court which had passed the decree. Upon this objection being raised, the learned Subordinate Judge on September 10, 1938 directed the petitioner to obtain orders from this Court and kept the execution case pending. Thereafter the petitioner on November 7, 1938 made the present application. The November 7, was the date on which this Court re-opened after the puja vacation.

It is conceded that if this application is governed by Art. 183, Lim. Act, then this application has been brought within the period of limitation inasmuch as the petitioner would be allowed the period during which the Court was closed. The contention, however, is that this application for leave to execute the decree against the legal representatives of the judgment-debtors is not an application to enforce a judgment and that it is governed by Art. 181, Lim. Act. It is argued that as it has not been made within three years of the death of the judgment-debtors whose heirs are sought to be brought on the record it is barred by limitation. In my opinion this contention cannot be given effect to. In support of this argument learned Counsel cited certain cases which dealt with the question of what amounted to a revivor of a decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act. His argument was that if this application did not amount to a revivor it could not amount to an application to enforce a judgment. In my opinion it is not necessary to consider on this application whether the present application would or would not revive the decree or whether every application for enforcing a judgment must necessarily revive the decree. That is not the question which has to be determined now. What has to be determined is whether the present application is one which is barred by limitation.

It is admitted that the application for execution made before the Subordinate Judge of Dacca being within twelve years of the last revivor of the decree is within time, but it is said that the present application is not an application for execution and that, therefore, it is barred. If this argument is given effect to, it will lead to rather strange results. The death of a judgment-debtor does not enlarge or decrease the period of limitation prescribed for the execution of a decree. To enforce a judgment passed by this Court the decree-holder must apply for execution at any time within 12 years of the passing of the decree or of the revivor of the decree. If the judgment-debtor be dead the decree-holder must still apply within this period. He need not take any steps to bring the judgment-debtor's heirs on the record at the anterior period; if he does it within this period of 12 years prescribed for the execution of the decree he will be in time. Order XXII, Civil P. O., has no application to execution proceedings and the right to execute a decree does not abate or get extinguished by reason of the fact that the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor have not been brought on the record within any specified period. If effect is given to the contention of learned Counsel for the respondent that an application to bring the legal representatives of a judgment-debtor on the record must be made within three years of the death of the judgment-debtor, the effect will be in this case to cut down the period of limitation for execution of decrees which is prescribed by Art. 183, Lim. Act. Again if this contention be pushed to its logical conclusion the death of a judgment-debtor may in certain cases operate to enlarge the period of limitation by three years.

There is another difficulty in the way of the respondent. What would be the starting point for the period of limitation if this application be governed by Art. 181? The right to bring the legal representatives on the record does not arise on the death of the judgment-debtor; it arises only when an application for execution is made. In this view the application is within time. I am of opinion further that the contention of the respondent cannot be given effect to as it is in conflict with the provisions of law prescribing the period of limitation for the execution of decrees and also for the reasons which I state below.

What has happened in this case is this. The decree-holder applied to this Court to transmit the decree to the Dacca Court for execution there. The decree-holder did not then make any application in this Court for bringing the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtors on the record. I do not think that she was bound to do so as the application here was for transmission of the decree and not for execution of the decree. The application for execution was made before the Subordinate Judge at Dacca and at that time the decree-holder applied to bring the legal representatives on the record in the execution case. The learned Subordinate Judge, having regard to the provisions of s. 50, Civil P. O., very rightly directed the decree-holder to apply to this Court for the determination of the question as to who were the legal representatives. S. 50 says that the Court which passed the decree is the Court to which application should be made to execute a decree against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. The executing Court, if it is not the Court which passed the decree, is not the proper Court to decide whether execution should proceed against the legal representatives. The decree-holder has therefore come to this Court and has asked this Court to substitute the legal representatives of the judgment-debtors in the execution proceedings which are still pending before the Subordinate Judge. When a decree has been transmitted for execution to another Court, the transmitting Court does not lose entire seisin of the decree. So far as the Court of transfer is concerned, it continues to have jurisdiction over the execution proceedings until such execution is withdrawn or stayed or until it certifies to the Court which passed the decree either that the decree has been executed or if it fails to execute the decree the circumstances attending such failure (s. 41, Civil P. O.)

In this connection I would refer to the case in Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India Ltd. (1) at p. 233. In the present case the execution case is still pending in the Dacca Court and the present application is for an order from this Court that the execution may proceed against the legal representatives of the judgment-debtors. The application is in the circumstances of the present case an application to enforce a judgment or decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act and as it has been made within 12 years it is within time. No other objection is raised by the respondent. I therefore allow the prayer of the petitioner with costs. Certified for Counsel.

U MIN SIN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 3—"Immovable property" includes benefits to arise out of land—Assignment of rents and profits of land can be made only by registered instrument.

Immovable property is not defined in the T. P. Act, which merely says that it does not include standing timber, growing crops or grass; but it is defined in s. 2, sub-s. 29, General Clauses Act, and this definition applies to transfers of property. According to this definition "immovable property" shall include land, and benefits to arise out of land. Hence the assignment of rents and profits of the land can only be made by a registered instrument. 15 Ind. Cas. 32 (1), referred to.

S. S. A. from the judgment of the District Court, Yamethin, in O. A. No. 58 of 1938.

Mr. Anklesaria for the Appellant.

Mr. Beecheno, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant, Daw Yon, sued the brother of her deceased husband, U Min Sin, for recovery of twelve "rent documents," or in the alternative, for Rs. 1,500 damages. The plaintiff's case was that she got the property in question, some three hundred acres of paddy land, at a partition of her deceased husband's estate, and as she had no previous experience of letting lands to tenants, she asked the defendant to have lease deeds printed and lease her lands for her. The defendant however got the lease deeds printed with his name as lessor and collected the rents. She claimed in her plaint that she had collected the bulk of the rents herself, and it appears that the valuation of the suit was based on an order of the District Court in its Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1937, the record of which is not before the Court. It is not argued that that valuation was not correct. The defendant in his written statement claimed that he had spent Rs. 5,000 on behalf of the plaintiff in the previous litigation by which she obtained partition, and that though he did not ask for repayment, the plaintiff wanted to show her gratitude, and as she could not pay him she requested him to let out the lands in his name and take the rents for himself, more particularly since, as she had only just succeeded to the property, the tenants would not be likely to pay her the rents. The plaintiff claimed, and the defendant's agent, U Maung, in his evidence admitted, that the plaintiff, in the two months between the filing of the suit and the date of the plaintiff giving evidence, had succeeded in collecting the rents. The plaintiff however was entitled to go on with the suit in any event, because after she filed this suit the defendant sued all the tenants for rent, and of course, if he won in those suits, she would have to indemnify those tenants. It is obvious however that she should have impleaded the tenants in this suit, and sued also for a declaration against both U Min Sin and them, that she was the beneficial owner of the leaseholds and was entitled to the rents. Under the circumstances however a decision has to be arrived at on the case as it stands and on the relief claimed.

The Judge of the trial Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and rightly in my opinion held that she was altogether unlikely to have made a gratuitous offer of so large a sum of money when she herself had nothing and had to pay the taxes, and he said that if the agreement had been as the defendant said it was, there was no reason why the tenants should not have paid him the money. A previous agreement between the parties is Ex. 1, which recites that U Min Sin had advanced this five thousand rupees in question, and it also says that he was not going to make any claim whatever for it; so it does not help the defendant. There is no other proof of the matter. The learned District Judge reversed the judgment of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the burden of proving agency was on the plaintiff and that the tenants were likely to side with her as they were interested to do so, and that there was no other evidence to prove her case. In my opinion, the whole case can be decided on an issue of law which has been raised in this appeal (ground No. 3). The transfer in question is alleged to have been an oral one, made by Daw Yon at U Min Sin's house; she herself admits that she spoke of the arrangement there. The assignment made is supposed to have been one of the rents and profits of the land and, in my opinion, it could only be made by a registered instrument. Immovable property is not defined in the T. P. Act, which merely says that it does not include standing timber, growing crops or grass; but it is defined in s. 2, sub-s. 29, General Clauses Act, and this definition applies to transfers of property. According to this definition, "immovable property" shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth.

The transaction in question was claimed by the defendant to be one of assignment of the rents for one year only, the Burmese year 1293. The defendant does not claim that he got a lease of the land itself from the plaintiff. Had he got a lease for one year, that lease could have been made by an oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession (s. 107, T. P. Act). Delivery of possession, of course, means delivery of possession of the immovable property dealt with in the section, that is to say the land itself. In such a case the lessee is under certain liabilities set out in s. 108 of the Act, even if he makes sub-leases [s. 108, sub-s. (j)] including liabilities to keep the property in good condition and restore it in such condition, and other liabilities mentioned in this section. It is argued for the defendant that the transaction was in effect such a lease, but he does not claim this in his written statement; he merely says that he was to be allowed to take the rents and profits which were assigned to him for this old debt. Nor do his witnesses support such a case. If it were possible to treat the assignment as a usufructuary mortgage or one year for this old debt, then it could not be made orally, being of property worth over one hundred rupees (ss. 58 and 59, T. P. Act).

A somewhat similar case was Babu Lal v. Bhawani Das, 15 Ind. Cas. 32 (1), where the property was the rents of a bazar leased by the mortgagee in possession to another. It may be said that in that case the tenants were already in possession and there could be no question of sub-leasing, and the position of the lessee was unequivocal, for he could only be the lessee of the rents, and not of the shops; whereas in the present case the arrangement was for U Min Sin to grant the tenancies as well as to receive the rents. It appears that he gave tenancies in some cases to old tenants and in others to new tenants. I conceive that this fact that U Min Sin was to lease the lands does not make any difference, and that the transaction set up here was that he was to let out the land instead of the plaintiff, and that the rents were assigned to him.

If the transaction set up by the defendant is, as in my opinion it is, to be considered as one by which the plaintiff assigned these rents, then I consider that the defendant is out of Court. As already said the defendant did not take up the position that the land itself was leased to him. He did not plead and it would have been futile to plead that he was to make the leases on behalf of the plaintiff, and collect and keep the rents, for that would still have been an assignment of future rents—immovable property—which could only be effected by registered deed. In any case on the evidence I think that the plaintiff succeeded in proving that the defendant was merely her agent for the purpose of leasing out the land, and that she did not agree or intend to assign to him or to let him retain the rents at all. (After examining the evidence regarding this, his Lordship continued.) The initial burden of proving the plaintiff's case that Min Sin was merely her agent to lease the land for her was on the plaintiff, and I consider that her evidence and the probabilities of the case were sufficient to establish it. Had the defendant been allowed in law to prove his case that the plaintiff permitted him to lease out the lands in his own name and keep the rents for himself—that was an extremely improbable case, and in my opinion he failed to prove it. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will therefore be reversed, and the decree of the trial Court restored with costs throughout.

BRIJLAL PRASAD—APPELLANT

Mahant LALDAS—RESPONDENT

Defamation—Suit for — What plaintiff must allege — Privilege—Statements in written complaint found to be false—If protected—Practice—Relief—Variance between pleadings and proof.

A plaintiff in a case of defamation ought to allege not only the publication, and set out not only the words, but that they were published or spoken to, at any rate, some named individuals at a particular time and place specified in the plaint. 96 Ind. Cas. 89 (3), relied on.

In a civil action for damages for defamation in respect of statements made by a person in a written complaint to a Magistrate the statements are privileged though they are found to be false. 141 Ind. Cas. 382 (4) and 45 Ind. Cas. 540 (5), relied on.

Although parties should be kept to their pleadings it is not every variance between pleading and proof that is fatal. But this cannot militate against the fundamental principle that no plaintiff should obtain a decision on facts which he has not pleaded and which were not put in issue at all. 121 Ind. Cas. 204 (2), relied on.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated January 13, 1936.

Mr. W. Dutt with Messrs. Sen and Adhikari, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, who is the respondent before me, brought a suit for damages on account of alleged defamation against the appellant. The plaintiff had complained that in order to harass him and to bring him into disrepute in the eyes of his neighbours the defendant had drafted a complaint under ss. 352 and 323 of the I. P. C., alleging that the plaintiff's servant had struck him at the direct instigation of the plaintiff who was present, and that while doing so the plaintiff had abused him filthily. This complaint together with an application for a transfer of the case to any other Court than that of the Honorary Magistrate at Sheorinarayan where the parties resided, was presented to the District Magistrate who directed that it should be heard by Mr. Tak, a Subordinate Judge with magisterial powers. The complaint was as a matter of fact withdrawn and the case dismissed under s. 203 of the Criminal P. C. The plaintiff also averred that after this action by the defendant the latter had repeated the defamatory statements to various persons. The defendant pleaded that the statements were true and admitted having made the complaint and presented it to the District Magistrate, but he denied that he had repeated the allegations to people of Sheorinarayan. The trial Court found that the statements made by the defendant were defamatory and untrue, but that in so far as they were contained in the complaint which was presented to the District Magistrate, they were covered by absolute privilege and that it had not been proved that oral statements amounting to slander had been made at all. If they had been proved, the trial Judge was prepared to hold that the plaintiff would have been entitled to damages to the extent of Rs. 500. The claim was dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed and the defendant put in cross-objections in so far as the findings were against him, namely, on the question of the truth of the allegations and the burden of proof. These facts were found against the defendant-respondent in the lower Appellate Court and the cross-objections were dismissed. The finding of the trial Court to the effect that the libel contained in the written complaint was covered by absolute privilege was upheld. Neither was the finding that there had been no publication, as deposed to by the witnesses whom the trial Court had disbelieved, disturbed. The lower Appellate Court nevertheless came to the conclusion that publication of oral statements had been proved both at Sheorinarayan and at Bilaspur on the strength of certain statements made by the defendant himself as a defence witness, D. W. No. 9. These admissions were to the effect that after the alleged assault by Kaloo, the plaintiff's servant, the defendant had reported the incident to his master Baijnath and also that on coming to Bilaspur he had made a written report to, according to the learned Additional District Judge, the District Superintendent of Police, but according to the evidence to the Assistant District Superintendent of Police and according to the document on which the Appellate Court relied to the Deputy Superintendent of Police. The exact grade of the Officer is immaterial, although this inaccuracy should not have occurred. The Court held that on these admissions there had been oral defamation both at Sheorinarayan and at Bilaspur and holding that the plaintiff had established his case, awarded him a decree for damages for Rs. 500. The defendant has preferred a second appeal.

The appeal must succeed, and there can be no doubt that the lower Appellate Court has reached conclusions on allegations unwarranted either by the plaintiff's pleadings or by the issues in the case. There can be no question that the alleged assault is said to have taken place on April 17, 1933. After reciting that a false complaint had been made and quoting the relevant words in the complaint on which he relied in para. 3 of his plaint, the plaintiff goes on to say in para. 7:

"The defendant did not only commit this act in the Court alone, but he also orally told all these false things to several gentlemen, so that they might form a bad opinion about the plaintiff."

Again after stating that he only claimed Rs. 500 damages as, if he had claimed damages according to his status, he had no hope of recovering them from the defendant, the plaintiff goes on to say in para. 9 of the plaint:

"The cause of action accrued at Bilaspur within the territorial jurisdiction of the said Court on April 18, 1933 and April 20, 1933 when the complaint and the application were drafted and presented and when a few days thereafter the defendant made verbal statements to several persons."

Later in an oral statement in which the plaintiff was allowed to supplement his pleadings, it was stated on his behalf:

"The plaintiff cannot give the exact words of the defamatory oral statement made by the defendant to the people at Sheorinarayan in the last fortnight of the month of April 1933. The plaintiff does not wish to disclose at this stage the names of the persons to whom or in whose hearing the oral defamatory statements were made by the defendant."

Now, it will be observed that the cause of action is not based on any statements that were made prior to April 18, 1933. The defamatory oral statements alleged are definitely alleged to have taken place after that date. The statement made, according to the defendant's own admission in the witness box, to his master Baijnath was made immediately after the alleged occurrence and was therefore made on April 17. Neither the plaint nor the pleadings made any reference whatever to any defamation uttered to an Assistant District Superintendent of Police or to a Deputy Superintendent of Police, and this matter was not put in issue at all.

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the variance between pleading and proof must not be construed with undue severity and relies on some observations in Ananda Chandra Chukerbatty v. Braja Lal Singh (1). No doubt, as there stated, although parties should be kept to their pleadings, it is not every variance between pleading and proof that is fatal. But this cannot militate against the fundamental principle that no plaintiff should obtain a decision on facts which he has not pleaded and which were not put in issue at all. If any authority for this fundamental proposition is required, it is to be found succinctly stated in Siddik Mohammad Shah v. Saran (2). Even if it were to be held that the allegation that an oral defamatory statement concerning the plaintiff was made to a Police Officer of Bilaspur could be looked into, there is an entire absence of proof as to what that statement consisted of. The statement itself has not been produced, the Police Officer concerned has not been examined, and the only reference to its existence is the sentence in the plaint that a report to that effect has been made to the Deputy Superintendent of Police and the admission by the defendant in the witness-box that he had drafted a complaint to the Assistant District Superintendent of Police (the contents of this complaint are not specified), that his Pleader took it to the Police Officer who told him to make a complaint and that he accompanied the Pleader. There is no evidence whatever that the defendant said a word to the Police Officer, and nevertheless the lower Appellate Court has found that the defendant orally expressed the substance of the defamatory matter at Bilaspur. No reference was made apparently in the lower Appellate Court to the report which was made to the local Sub-Inspector at Sheorinarayan, no doubt because the officer who was called as a witness for the plaintiff had no recollection of any complaint having been made against the plaintiff although there was one against his servant, and the credit of this witness could not easily be impeached since he is admittedly not prejudiced in favour of the defendant who had been under surveillance and for whom he was looking very shortly after the complaint had been made.

On the question of the establishment of the publication of the slander at Sheorinarayan the learned Counsel for the respondent argues that this matter was put in issue and that there has been a finding on it in the lower Appellate Court in his favour and that this finding cannot be disturbed. The issue in question runs: "Whether the defendant orally expressed the substance of the defamatory statements in the complaint to any person of Sheorinarayan?" Strictly speaking, this issue would appear to relate to persons who reside in the village wheresoever the statement was made; but the statement made on the plaintiff's behalf in continuation of his pleadings would indicate that the object of the issue was to decide whether the slander was published at Sheorinarayan. The witnesses who were called on behalf of the plaintiff to establish this contention were disbelieved, and the lower Appellate Court did not see fit to differ from the decision reached by the trial Court. Nevertheless on the defendant's own admission in the witness-box that he made a statement to Baijnath it has been held that there was publication of the slander at Sheorinarayan. I have already pointed out that the plaintiff's case both in the plaint and in the oral statement which followed it was that any oral statements of which he complained were made subsequent to April 18 and 20, 1933. It has been shown that the statement to Baijnath such as it was—and what was actually said has never been elucidated—took place on April 17, and it is also quite apparent from a perusal of the evidence of the discredited witnesses, P. Ws. Nos. 5 and 6, that they were deposing to incidents which according to them took place on April 17, as well. There is therefore not one shred of evidence on the issue whether there was a slanderous statement at Sheorinarayan at the material time to support the decision which has been given in the plaintiff's favour.

The decision, then, of the lower Appellate Court is based on no evidence at all and is given on grounds which the plaintiff has not even pleaded. The plaint and the subsequent oral statements are vague and, in my opinion, deliberately vague. I am in entire respectful agreement with the opinion expressed in the Allahabad High Court in Nannu Mal v. Ram Prasad (3), to the effect that a plaint in a case of defamation ought to alleged not only the publication, and set out not only the words, but that they were published or spoken to, at any rate, some named individuals at a particular time and place specified in the plaint. Here the words alleged to have been spoken are not given; the plaintiff stated in his pleadings that he was unable to give them, and he deliberately declined to disclose the names of the persons to whom or in whose hearing the slanderous statements were made. Even in the evidence he did not call as witnesses persons to whom the statements were made, but only persons who overheard them. It is impossible for a plaintiff to succeed on vague allegations of this nature. The statements made in the written complaint have been found to be false, but in a civil action for damages for defamation in respect of such statements there can be no doubt that the defendant is in a privileged position, as found in both the Courts below and as held by me in Manmohan Singh v. Thakur Bishal Singh (4) and also by the Allahabad High Court in Chunni Lal v. Narsingh Das (5).

In addition to the unwarranted result reached in the lower Appellate Court, I must also comment on some exaggerated and careless statements in the course of the appellate judgment. At the end of para. 9 the learned Judge has stated:

"Therefore even if the witnesses examined by the plaintiff to prove slander are not believed, the statements of the defendant himself afford evidence that he told persons at Bilaspur and also at Sheorinarayan that the plaintiff instigated Kaloo to beat him. It is not conceivable that when the defendant goes the length of coming to Bilaspur for medical examination of his injury and moves heaven and earth to make a complaint against the plaintiff, he would not proclaim the complaint in his own village."

The sole basis for thisrodomontade is that the defendant stated in cross-examination that he made a statement of some kind to his master Bijnath and that immediately on coming to Bilaspur he made a complaint (the nature is of which unproved) to the Police and was advised to make a complaint in the Criminal Courts, which he did. Again in para. 6 the learned Judge has stated:

"That Kaloo did beat the defendant is a fact, which the plaintiff's own witness, P. W. No. 7 states."

(5) 40 A 341; 45 Ind. Cas. 540; A I R 1918 All. 69; 16 A L J 360 (F B).

This statement is entirely untrue. The plaintiff's witness, P. W. No. 7, deposes to an altercation and states that it was the defendant who beat Kilo and not Kilo who beat the defendant. An error of this kind which states the exact opposite of what the witness deposed is a blemish which should not appear in the record of a Judge of such standing.

The result is that the appeal succeeds, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the trial Court restored and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. The plaintiff-respondent will pay the defendant-appellant's costs throughout.

Workmen's Compensation Act (III of 1923), s. 3 (1) — "Out of employment" — Onus is on applicant — Accident held did not arise out of employment and no compensation could be awarded to dependent.

In claiming compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, the onus lies on the applicant to prove that the accident arose out of the employment, and if the evidence is not sufficient to establish this, the claim fails. Warner v. Couchman (5), relied on, [p. 769, col. 1.]

An accident arises "out of" the employment where it results from a risk incidental to the employment, as distinguished from risk common to all mankind, although the risk incidental to the employment may include a risk common to all mankind.

The deceased workman used to be employed at various times in the work of jungle cutting and similar operations at the mine. On the day of his death, the deceased was employed in the work of clearing jungle along a boundary of the mine for the purpose of survey. While the workmen were going back to their camp in the same mining area, a dead tree on the way fell on the deceased and killed him. The tree was at some distance from the place where the deceased actually had to work. The accident was of the kind which anyone who happened to pass by the tree at the time would have met with:

Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment of the workman and hence no compensation to dependent could be awarded.

[Case-law referred to.]

O. Misc. A. against an order of the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Tavoy, dated April 25, 1939.

Mr. Chan Htoon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Eunoose, for the Respondents.

Mya Bu, Offg. C. J.—This is an appeal against an award of compensation made by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation in favour of respondent No. 2, a daughter and defendant of one Maung Lu Lwin, who met with an accident, as a result of which he was killed on the spot on November 23, last. The appellant is a mine owner, and the deceased used to be employed at various times in the work of jungle cutting and similar operations at the appellant's mine known as the Hlegataung Mine. On the day of his death, the deceased was employed in the work of clearing jungle along a boundary of the mine for the purpose of survey. The work gave over at three o'clock, when the check roll of workers for that day was called. Thereafter, while the workmen were going back to their camp in the same mining area, a dead tree on the way fell on the deceased and killed him. It appears that some appreciable time had elapsed from the time that the workmen left the place where they had been working and the deceased had covered quite a substantial distance from that place when he met with this accident. The learned Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation held that the accident occurred in the course of the employment because, although the workmen were discharged from their work at three o'clock when the roll of workmen was called, yet they had to go back to their camp where they were to deposit the implements which they had brought, at the workshop on their arrival back at the camp. The learned Commissioner also held that the accident arose out of the employment. It is with reference to this latter finding that the validity of the award has been mainly assailed.

In Burma Oil Co. Ltd. v. Ma Hmwe Yin (1) it was pointed out that under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, an accident must not only occur "in the course of," that is to say during, the employment, but in addition must arise "out of" it, and that an accident arises "out of" the employment where it results from a risk incidental to the employment, as distinguished from a risk common to all mankind, although the risk incidental to the employment may include a risk common to all mankind. In that case a drilling coolie of the Burma Oil Company, who had his quarters provided by the company some four miles distant from the well where he worked, left his quarters for work on night shift early to see a friend on the way, choosing one of the three roads—longer one—and on the way he was bitten by a snake on the road and lost his life. The cooly had to make his journey to the well after dark because he was on night shift at the time. It was held that the accident which caused the death of the workman did not arise "out of" or "in the course of" his employment. On the question as to whether the accident in this case arose out of the employment, that case affords a parallel to the present one. In Charles R. Davidson & Co. v. M'Robb or Officer (2) Lord Finlay observed, (p. 317) :

"In order to come within the statute an accident must not only occur 'in the course of,' that is to say during, actual employment, but in addition must arise 'out of' it. In other words, there is required to be shown something in the nature of a causal relation between the accident and an order, expressed or implied, given by the employer."

In the same case Lord Dunedin expressed the view that "in the course of employment" was a different thing from "during the period of employment," while Lord Atkinson remarked: "In my view the words 'arising out of' suggest the idea of cause and effect." In Kelly v. Kerry County Council (3), where a workman engaged on the road during a storm whose duty was to clean out the gulleys to prevent the water flooding the road was struck dead by lightning, it was held that the death was not occasioned by accident arising out of the employment. This case is useful as drawing a distinction from that in Andrew v. Fairclough Industrial Society, Ltd., (4), in which a brick layer while working on a scaffolding twenty-three feet in height was struck by lightning and there was evidence that the position of a man on a scaffolding twenty-three feet high was one of special danger from lightning, and it was held that, as the man's employment necessitated his occupying that place of peculiar danger, and as the accident occurred in consequence of his dangerous position, the accident was one arising out of his employment. In Dennis v. A. J. White and Co. (5), the House of Lords upheld the claim for injury to a boy in the employment of a firm of builders who was ordered to go through the streets of London on a bicycle to fetch some plaster, and came into collision with a motor car and was injured. The observations of Lord Finlay L. C. and Lord Parker of Waddington afford an instructive guide as to the principles according to which the question as to whether the accident arose out of the employment should be determined. Lord Finlay observed :

"There are of course cases in which it is necessary to enquire whether the nature of the employment specially exposes a workman to a risk of a general nature. In the case of injury by lightning it is very material to inquire whether the work involves special exposure to the danger of being so struck, as in the case of employment upon a steeple or elevated scaffolding. In the case of injury by a bomb thrown from hostile aircraft the fact that the workman was engaged on work in a building brilliantly lighted so as to attract the notice of the enemy crews might be most material as showing that the injury by the bomb was one which arises out of the employment. In the case of sun-stroke or frost-bite it is material to show that the work involves special exposure to the heat or the cold."

"It requires no direct evidence to prove that a boy employed to ride a bicycle through London traffic runs the risk of injury by collision with other vehicles. The risk is inherent in the nature of the employment or to put it in another way, if a collision occurs, a causal relationship between the employment and the collision can be properly inferred, and in default of further evidence, in my opinion, ought to be inferred by a judge of fact. Most employments have peculiar risks inherent in their nature. A person employed to break stones runs the risk of being injured by a flying splinter. A person employed to climb a ladder runs the risk of injury from a fall. In neither case would positive evidence be necessary to prove that the injury by accident arose out of the employment. That it did arise would be a legitimate inference from the nature of the employment coupled with the occurrence of the accident causing the injury. There may, of course, be risks so general that without further evidence no such inference would arise. Every one is liable to be struck by lightning, to be frost-bitten, or to be injured by bombs dropped from hostile aircraft. In such cases it may be necessary to establish the causal relationship implied in the expression "injury by accident arising out of the employment" by positive evidence; such, for example as proving that the circumstances of the employment exposed the employee to a greater risk than that run by persons not so employed, or not so employed under the same conditions."

In the present case the falling of the tree on the deceased cannot be said to be inherent in the nature of the employment, namely cutting and clearing jungles or bushes, or even trees, and the causal relationship between the employment and the falling of the tree cannot be properly inferred in default of further evidence. The tree was at some distance from the place where the workman actually had to work. The accident is of the kind which anyone who happened to pass by the tree at the time would have met with. The onus lies on the applicant to prove that the accident arose out of the employment, and if the evidence is not sufficient to establish this, the claim fails: See Warner v. Couchman (6). There is no circumstance which indicates in this case that the employment, namely the cutting and clearing of jungles, bushes and even trees, exposed the deceased to the danger of a falling tree at some other place, although that place might happen to be on the premises of his employer. The causal relationship of the employment has not been established. The award made by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation must therefore be and it is hereby set aside: no order as to costs.

Spargo, J.—The finding of the Commissioner was that the accident happened while the workmen were returning to the camp where they had to deposit their tools. We were asked to say that the accident arose out of the deceased's employment because his work was that of cutting jungle and felling trees and therefore that brought him within reach of the danger of trees falling upon him. But the trees that fell upon him was not one of those that the deceased's duty caused him to fell, but was a dead tree which apparently fell because it was dead. The employment of the deceased did not expose him to any more danger from that than any other person who happened to be there would have to run. In Burma Oil Co., Ltd., v. Ma Hmwe Yin (1), at p. 561* there occurs this passage:

"An employer is not liable to compensate a workman for an injury that has been caused by reason of the workman being exposed to a risk to which all persons who happened lawfully to be present at the time and place of the accident would be subjected, unless the workman at such time and place was exposed to an exceptional risk of sustaining the injury by reason of the work which he was engaged by the employer to carry out.

I agree that the accident is not proved to have arisen out of the employment, and the order for compensation must therefore be set aside. I agree that there should be no order as to costs.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—Mere failure to record examination of accused does not result in miscarriage of justice when Magistrate has considered the statements.

When a Magistrate has considered the statements of the accused they cannot possibly be prejudiced by the mere fact that he did not reduce those statements to writing in the proper column provided in the summary register. It would therefore be absurd to say that the mere failure to record the examination has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. 90 Ind. Cas. 434 (1), and 158 Ind. Cas. 129 (2), distinguished.

L. Basheshar Nath, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Raja Singh, for the Crown.

Order.—This case has been reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Peshawar. The petitioners Khan Mohamed and Afridi were convicted at a summary trial of an offence under s. 448, I. P. O., and were fined Rs 20 each. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has reported the case on the following grounds:

"The Magistrate was bound to examine the accused under s. 342, Criminal P. O., and was bound to record this examination on his record and he has failed to do so."

The order of reference does not make it clear whether in the opinion of the Additional Sessions Judge the Magistrate had failed both to examine the accused and to record their examination or whether he had merely failed to record the examination. An examination of the record shows that the accused were actually examined, for in the column of the register provided for, the finding of the Magistrate, there is a specific reference to the defence set up by the accused. The question therefore for decision is whether the failure of the Magistrate to record that examination is fatal to the accused. Learned Counsel for the petitioners has relied upon a case decided by a Full Bench of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court reported in Emperor v. Nabu (1). The learned Advocate-General on the other hand relies on a case decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in Sia Ram v. Emperor (2). In the Sind case it was ruled that failure to examine an accused person under the provisions of s. 342, Criminal P. O., at a summary trial was fatal to the prosecution case, but from a perusal of the judgment in that case it appears to have been held that the accused had not actually been examined. In the Allahabad case some doubt as to whether the accused had been examined or not was expressed but there was definitely no record of the examination and it was there laid down that the mere fact that the examination had not been recorded did not show that the accused had not actually been examined and it was further held that even if the accused had not been examined under s. 342, Criminal P. O., it would not be fatal to the case for the prosecution unless it were also shown that the failure to examine him had in fact occasioned a failure of justice. The facts of the present case are slightly different from either of the reported cases, for in the case before me there can be no doubt that the convicts were actually examined and the only irregularity committed by the Magistrate was that he did not record that examination. In my opinion it would be absurd to say that the mere failure to record the examination has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The Magistrate considered the statements of the accused and they cannot possibly have been prejudiced by the mere fact that he did not reduce those statements to writing in the proper column provided in the summary register. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order of the Magistrate must be upheld and dismiss the application of the petitioners.

Sir T. Strangman, K. O. and Mr. A. G. P. Pullen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. N. Pitt, K. O. and V. K. Krishna Menon, for the Respondent.

Lord Atkin—This is an appeal from the High Court at Lahore who reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Delhi in favour of the plaintiffs, the present appellants. The circumstances in which the plaintiffs' claim arose are as follows. The defendant was chairman of The Delhi Sugar Mills Limited, an Indian company which carried on business at New Delhi. The company, before December, 1933, had had dealings with a Belgian company Messrs. Atelier de Construction de J. J. Gillains, who may be called the contractors, who had been engaged in providing equipment for the company and held shares in the company. Apparently in December, 1933, it was desirable for the company to obtain further financial assistance as they were contemplating making an addition to their factory, and for that purpose were acquiring a lease of a site which it was proposed should be mortgaged presumably to the contractors. Negotiations were opened between the defendant and the plaintiffs, a Belgian bank. The plaintiffs were bankers of the contractors and were represented at New Delhi by Mr. Van Campenhout, the general attorney of the bank, and Mr. Delait, the Manager of their office. The contractors were represented by Mr. Palante who was their general attorney in India, and was also a director of the company. On December 27, 1933, a meeting took place at the bank's office at Delhi at which Mr. Van Campenhout and Mr. Delait, representing the bank, Mr. Palante, representing the contractors, and the defendant were present. Terms were arranged and were expressed in a letter signed by the defendant and addressed to Mr. Van Campenhout. The letter is in the following terms:

"Delhi:

Dated December 27, 1933.

A. J. Van Campenhout, Esquire, Attorney of Societe Belge
de Banque, S. A., Bruxelles:
Swiss Hotel, Delhi.

DEAR SIR,

In continuation of our conversation regarding the question of the transfer of shares held by Messrs. J. J. Gillains in the Delhi Sugar Mills Limited, in favour of Societe Belge de Banque S. A. (which question is being dealt with separately), I have the pleasure to inform you that I agree to sell 250 fully paid-up shares standing in my personal name to your bank on the following conditions:—

(i) That this sum of Rs. 25,000 will be expended.

by you, in securing the lease of the factory site and in paying the Company's half share of the costs of securing the mortgage-deed of the factory, etc., in favour of Messrs. J. J. Gillains and the cost of the transfer of the said shares. Whatever balance is left over will be paid to the Delhi Sugar Mills, Limited.

(ii) The sum of Rs. 25,000 stated above, will thus be treated as a loan to the Company from me.

(iii) That an interest of 6½ per cent. will be paid by the Company on this loan which will be transferred to your Bank.

(iv) That the Bank will not be entitled to any dividend on these shares and will have only the right to the interest as stated in cl. (iii).

(v) That I guarantee to re-buy at the same price these shares within six months and that the Bank will guarantee to re-sell to me these shares at any time I like within the stipulated period of six months.

(vi) Should I fail to re-buy these shares by the end of this period, and/or to pay the interest, the Bank will have the right to sell the shares to anybody else, and to claim from me damages, if any, and to keep the dividend. The dividend, if any, earned on these shares within the next six months will be transferred by the Bank to me after the same has been received from the Company.

(vii) That you will obtain Messrs. J. J. Gillain's consent to this transaction.

Yours faithfully,
GIRDHARI LAL."

The letter was acknowledged by a letter of the same date signed by Mr. Van Campenhout and handed personally to the defendant. Mr. Palante had at the meeting assented to the transaction. The acknowledgment is as follows:

"Delhi :
Dated December 27, 1933.
Girdhari Lal Chaudhary, Esquire,
Chairman,
Delhi Sugar Mills, Limited,
New Delhi.

DEAR SIR,
I beg to acknowledge with thanks your letter of date, and to confirm that the S. A. Societe Belge de Banque S. A. agree to purchase from you 250 fully paid shares standing in your name of the Delhi Sugar Mills, Limited, on the following conditions:—

1. That the purchase price of Rs. 25,000 for the said shares will be expended by us in securing the lease of the factory site and in paying the Company's half shares of the costs in securing the mortgage-deed of the factory, etc., and the cost of the transfer of the said shares. Whatever balance remains after the above expenditure, will be paid to the Delhi Sugar Mills, Limited.

2. The said sum of Rs. 25,000 will then be treated as a loan to the Company from you.

3. The Company will pay interest at the rate of 6½ per cent. on the said loan and this interest will be transferred by you to our Bank.

4. You guarantee to buy back at the same price the said shares within six months and the Bank guarantees to re-sell the same to you at any time you like within the stipulated period of six months.

5. The Bank will not be entitled to any dividend on the said shares during the period of the six months, but will only have the right to the interest as provided in the cl. (3).

6. Should you fail to re-buy these shares by the end of this period and/or to pay the interest the Bank will have the right to sell the shares to anybody else and to claim from you the damages if any, and to keep the dividend. The dividend, if any, earned on these shares within the next six months will be transferred by the Banque to you, after the same has been received from the Company.

7. That we will obtain Messrs. J. J. Gillain's, consent to this transaction.

8. The above transaction of purchasing the shares and paying the price of 25,000 will be carried out and completed after the draft mortgage has been approved and is ready to be engrossed and after the draft lease has been approved by the lessor, the Company and ourselves, and is ready to be engrossed.

Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) A. VAN CAMPENHOUT, Belge de Banque, duly authorised agent."

On the same day a receipt for the letter was given by the defendant signed by the secretary of the company. By letters of the same day signed by the defendant as chairman for the company and addressed to Mr. Palante the company agreed to the assignment by the contractors to the bank of their rights against the company and also of their shares in the company. Both letters concluded that they were subject to the payment by the bank of Rs. 25,000 in terms agreed between Mr. Girdhari Lal and the bank. On the same day also the defendant addressed to Mr. Van Campenhout a letter in which he says "will you please pay to the Delhi Sugar Mills Limited a sum of Rs. 4,000 out of Rs. 25,000 which has been earmarked for securing the lease of the factory site and for obtaining the mortgage-deed." The letter went on to say that it was understood that the remaining sum of Rs. 21,000 would be enough to meet all these expenses; but that if there should be a shortage the defendant guaranteed that it would be made good by the company. The bank duly paid the Rs. 4,000 to the company who credited the sum to the defendant. At later dates they paid to the defendant Rs. 17,440-12-9 for payment to the assignor of the lease, a sum which is again credited in the books of the company to the defendant. They paid further sums for the stamp on the assignment and costs of its preparation and for stamps on the mortgage-deed. The latter sum they eventually recovered, so that they finally expended on this transaction Rs. 22,259-12-9. In the meantime the bank had been pressing the defendant to transfer to them the 250 fully paid shares which were the consideration expressed in the letters for the above payments by the bank. On January 12, 1934, they tendered a draft transfer deed to the defendant asking him to have it engrossed with the number of the shares. It appears that at the date of the letters the shares issued to the defendant were not fully paid. Difficulties arose as to this: a certificate for 500 fully paid shares was said to have been issued by the company on March 12. It purported to be signed by the defendant and the secretary, and also it is said by Mr. Palante, but Mr. Palante is said to have erased his signature and for that reason it was at one time said that it became impossible for the defendant to transfer 250 shares. Eventually after interviews and several letters asking for performance the plaintiffs in a peremptory letter dated May 9, required the defendant to settle the matter within 24 hours. No reply was forthcoming and on May 11, the plaintiffs by their solicitors wrote cancelling the agreement and claiming the money they had paid under it. Credit for the mortgage stamp returned was not then available. The present suit is brought for the nett sum paid by the bank, and in the circumstances narrated it appears difficult to see how the defendant could succeed. The chief point made by the defendant which found favour with the Subordinate Judge and the High Court was that there never was a concluded agreement. Clause 8 of the bank's letter of December 27, 1933, it is said introduced a new term which prevented the letter from being an acceptance of the defendant's offer, and there is no evidence of an acceptance of the bank's counter offer. Without dealing with the last contention, against which there appears much to be said, their Lordships are satisfied that the paragraph relied on stated no new term but merely expressed what was necessarily implicit in the defendant's offer. How could the bank expend an unascertained amount in securing the lease of new premises until the terms of the lease had been approved between the lessor and the company? The approval of the terms by the bank in the circumstances was in contemplation of everyone. How could the costs of the mortgage be ascertained until the draft mortgage had been approved? Every circumstance points to the necessity of the condition expressed in the paragraph being necessarily intended by the defendant in his offer. It seems certain that money could not be paid for a lease unless the lessor and the lessee had come to a final agreement as to terms. But it was said the bank were asked to promise to expend part of the Rs. 25,000 "in securing the lease"; and, this involved an absolute promise by them to obtain the lease: hence a term that the expenditure was conditional upon the parties agreeing to the terms of the lease converted an absolute promise into a conditional one. The answer is that the promise asked for was not an absolute promise. This is a financial arrangement with a bank. How could they negotiate still less promise to succeed in negotiating a lease for a factory site in which the lessor as well as the lessee must always have the final word? "Expend in securing" obviously means expend "the money required to pay for" the lease. Their Lordships are therefore unable to agree with the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge accepted by the High Court in answer to the first issue that there was no concluded agreement. Their Lordships find it difficult to believe that there was not some misunderstanding; on appeal as to the acceptance by Counsel for the bank of all the trial Judge's findings. But if Counsel did accept such a finding it could only amount to an admission of a point of law which cannot be binding upon a Court; and their Lordships do not consider themselves precluded from deciding the rights of the parties on a true view of the law.

If then there was a concluded agreement it seems to matter little whether it was an agreement of purchase or of loan. Despite the initial words of the agreement which indicate purchase it seems difficult to resist the conclusion that the transaction was in truth a loan. The provision for payment of interest to the supposed purchaser on his supposed purchase price together with the agreement to buy back the shares in 6 months at the same price and the stipulation that the supposed seller is in the meantime to enjoy the profits of the property supposed to be sold point strongly in this direction. And it is to be noticed that in the correspondence the reference by the bank is to advances while in evidence the manager for the bank more than once styled the payments advances without any demur by the opposite party. But Mr. Pritt for the defendant, insisted that the transaction was one of purchase. If grown up men, he said, choose to call a transaction a purchase then it is a purchase, however, inconsistent with such a legal conception are the agreed terms. But if it was a purchase then, in the circumstances of this case, the plaintiff's remedy is as simple as if it were a loan on security. The purchaser had paid the purchase price to the seller while the seller refused to deliver the goods agreed to be sold. On cancelling the bargain the purchaser was plainly entitled to recover the money he had so paid. And obviously it makes no difference whether the price had been paid to the seller direct or to third persons by his direction. If the transaction were a loan the borrower agreed to borrow money on the security of shares which he undertook to deliver to the lender. He refused to deliver them and the lender in cancelling the transaction is entitled to recover the money which he has advanced.

In the view of the transaction which has been adopted above it becomes unnecessary to consider the legal results which would follow if the negotiation had still remained open. Their Lordships must, however, not be taken to concur in the conclusion arrived at by the High Court, and they may remark that the provisions of s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act seem to have been overlooked in both Courts. They can find no ground for styling the alleged contract a contract of guarantee as was stated in the High Court judgment. The letters and all the material documents indicate that the defendant and the defendant alone was to be the principal debtor.

In the result their Lordships agree with the decree passed by the trial Judge though for a different reason. They will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court at Lahore dated November 1, 1937, be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi dated December 22, 1936, be restored. The defendant must pay the costs of the appeal to the High Court and to His Majesty in Council.

Appeal from the Bombay High Court

March 7, 1940

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM, LORD PORTER AND

SIR GEORGE RANKIN

SIR JAMSHEDJEE JEEJIBHOY,

BART, AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

SORABJI BYRAMJI WARDEN

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Executor—Liability—Executors of deceased debtor giving security by equitable mortgage over asset of deceased's estate to one of creditors in respect of debt due from estate—Personal liability of executors—Security given in consideration of creditor's forbearance to sue for two years and promising to pay interest for that period—Executors held personally liable for interest for aforesaid period, but not for whole debt.

If the executors of a deceased debtor think fit for consideration to give security by deposit of title deeds over an asset belonging to his estate to one of his creditors in respect of a debt due from the estate, the transaction may or may not be one to which other creditors or persons can take exception. But if it is not intended that the executors should assume personal liability for the secured debt there is nothing in the T. P. Act or in the law of India to make them so liable by reason that they have granted the security or by reason that they have done so by deposit of the testator's deeds.

Where in consideration of the creditors' forbearance to sue for a period of two years the executors gave security for the testator's debt by equitable mortgage of the right, title and interest of the testator making it clear at the time that the payment to the creditor was conditional upon the sufficiency of the assets and depended upon the future of land values and the executors also undertook to pay interest on the debt for the aforesaid period of two years:

Held, that the promise to pay interest not having been expressly qualified, in the context there was not enough to show that the promise was intended as conditional upon the sufficiency of the testator's assets having regard to the limited period of time (two years) to which it extends and the circumstances of the transaction. The executors not having made it clear that their words of promise were not to be taken in the direct and simple sense of a personal covenant, made themselves personally liable for the interest which accrued during the two years with interest thereon. [p. 777, col. 2.]

Held also that the fact that the executor was to assume liability for the interest alone and that only for a defined period did not impose a liability for the whole of the debt. [p. 778, col. 1.]

Messrs. Ronald F. Roxburgh, K. C., and R. J. T. Gibson, for the Appellants.

Sir Thomas Strangman, K. C. and Mr. S. P. Khambatta, for the Respondents.

Sir George Rankin.—This is an appeal by the representatives of the original plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage by deposit of title deeds. The suit was brought on the Original Side of the High Court of Bombay on January 7, 1936, by an old lady named Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh.

Her daughter Meherbai had married one Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden, father of the defendants. Byramji had died on October 26, 1924, leaving a will whereby he had appointed the defendants, his four elder sons, to be his executors. Probate had been granted to them in 1925.

By his will dated October 6, 1922, (codicil of August 19, 1924), Byramji declared (cl. 11) that his immovable properties were generally mortgaged and that it would take a long time before they could be sold at the best price after paying the mortgage debts. He accordingly authorised his executors to postpone the sale for any period not exceeding five years from the date of his death. He referred (cl. 12) to the fact that Bai Jaiji (the plaintiff) and a number of other persons held his promissory notes, stating that he ordinarily renewed them yearly or at longer intervals and paid them interest monthly or at times at longer intervals. He directed that the amount due to these creditors should be paid with interest by his executors and he authorised his executors to renew these notes with interest. After making provision for his daughters, for a fifth son named Rustomji and for certain other persons, he directed that at the end of seven years after his death the residue of his property should be divided into four equal parts, each part to be held in trust for one of his four elder sons (the present defendants-respondents) for life and on such son's death for his children.

At his death the estate of Byramji, which consisted mainly of shares in companies and immovable properties in Bombay, was valued by the Collector for the purposes of the duty payable on obtaining probate at about 8½ lacs of rupees and the debts of Byramji were returned at about 6 lacs. The debt due to Bai Jaiji was entered as amounting to Rs. 25,780 for principal and Rs. 620 for interest. That the solvency of the estate would depend entirely upon the condition of the property market in Bombay has at all times been plain and after the death of Byramji his executors found it difficult to realise his properties. By 1923 the fifth son, Rustomji, was threatening steps to realise the sum of Rs. 50,000 which had been settled upon him by his father's will and in this year several mortgages were given by the executors over immovable properties of the estate to creditors of the testator. In particular, on August 10, 1928, an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds was given to Bai Jaiji and the registered memorandum set forth the terms thereof as follows:—

"Memorandum of agreement made and entered into at Bombay this August 10, 1928, between Sorabji Byramji Warden, Hirjibhoj Byramji Warden, Jamshedji Byramji Warden and Pestonji Byramji Warden all the four of Bombay Parsi inhabitants, Executors and Trustees of the last Will and Testament of the late Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden of the one part and Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh of Bombay Parsi inhabitant of the other part whereas the said Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden, was during his lifetime indebted to the said Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh in a certain sum, which with interest up to date exceeds the sum of Rs. 30,000 and whereas the said Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden, died in October 1924, leaving a Will dated October 6, 1922, probate whereof has been issued by the High Court of Bombay in its testamentary jurisdiction to the said Sorabji, Hirjibhoj, Jamshedji and Pestonji, the sons of the said Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden and Executors and Trustees of the said Will and whereas the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh, has called upon the Executors to pay off the debt due to her by the estate and in default, threatened to proceed further in a Court of Law, and the Executors having at present no cash available for the satisfaction of the said debt, offered to give security to the extent of Rs. 30,000 by giving an Equitable Mortgage of the right, title and interest of the said Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden in the immovable properties described in the Schs. A, B and C hereto by depositing their respective title-deeds described in the Schs. D, E and F which the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh, the Creditor, has agreed to accept and not to sue, till such time not exceeding two years as the depression in the property market in the opinion of the Mortgagors passes off, and whereas the said Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden was entitled to the entirety of the immovable properties in the Schs. A and B and to a half share in the immovable property described in the Sch. C hereto. Now it is hereby agreed that the deeds and documents specified in the Schs. D, E and F relating respectively to the immovable properties described in the Schs. A, B and C this day been deposited by the said Sorabji Byramji Warden, Hirjibhoj Byramji Warden, Jamshedji Byramji Warden and Pestonji Byramji Warden, with the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh with intent to create an Equitable Mortgage upon the said immovable properties for securing to her the said Jaiji repayment with interest of the sum of Rs. 30,000, (Thirty thousand) this day due to her by the estate of the said deceased Byramji Hirjibhoj Warden, represented by the Executors of his Will the said Sorabji, Hirjibhoj, Jamshedji and Pestonji, such sum to be repayable at any time within two years from the date hereof, such time to be selected by the said Executors and that they will in the meantime pay interest every month on the first day of each English month at the rate of six per cent. per annum with compound interest at the same rate with quarterly rests on all arrears of interest not paid on the due date, and it is hereby further agreed that the said sum of Rs. 30,000 is repayable in Bombay, and until so repaid with interest as aforesaid, the said deeds and documents and the respective properties to which they relate will be held by the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoj Parekh as an equitable security and that the executors will, if so require by the said Jaiji, insure the structures on the lands comprised in the said security in a sum not exceeding Rs. 30,000 at the costs of the executors."

Having received no payment whether on account of principal or interest, Bai Jaiji brought her suit as already mentioned on January 7, 1936. She asked for the usual preliminary decree for sale but added a claim that if the proceeds of sale should be insufficient, the defendants be held personally liable to make up the deficiency, contending that by the memorandum of August 10, 1928, the defendants had made themselves personally liable for the repayment of the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 and interest thereon. This was a very proper question to be decided at the trial. Barlee, J., as trial Judge found against the defendants both as regards principal and interest, proceeding on the view that an executor must perform a promise made by him as executor de bonis propriis unless he has expressly excluded his own liability and that this he does not do by the mere use of the word executor. By his preliminary decree (August 5, 1936), he gave liberty to the plaintiff to apply for a personal decree against the defendants in the event of the net sale proceeds being insufficient to satisfy in full the plaintiff's claim for principal, interest and costs. While the defendants' appeal to an Appellate Bench was pending, Bai Jaiji died on December 25, 1936, and the executors of her will (the present appellants) were substituted in her stead. At the hearing of the appeal, Beaumont, C.J. and Blackwell, J., construed the memorandum as imposing no personal liability on the defendants. Their decree dated September 28, 1937, negatived the plaintiff's right to apply for a personal decree against the defendants but gave liberty to the plaintiff to lodge a claim for any deficiency against the estate of Byramji but without prejudice to any question whether such claim was maintainable.

The evidence called at the trial has little bearing upon the true construction of the memorandum of August 10, 1928. The second defendant, Hirjibhai, who appears to have been the most active of the executors, gave evidence that he had advanced some money for paying off debts of the estate, that several creditors had been paid off chiefly out of monies of the estate, that some legacies had been paid out of monies advanced by him including a legacy left to one of his sisters which was paid on her marriage. He stated that the promissory notes held by Bai Jaiji carried interest at 6 per cent. with quarterly rests and that these had been handed over to him at the time of the mortgage transaction of August 10, 1928, and destroyed. He admitted that the income of the property in suit was collected by him after the granting of the mortgage on August 10, 1928, just as before. His evidence is that whatever might have been thought possible at the date of his father's death in 1924, by 1928 he had no longer any hopes of taking anything by the residuary legacy, since the utmost that could then be expected was that the debts of the estate might be cleared if land values improved. The only other witness called by the defendants was the solicitor who drew up the memorandum of August 10, 1928. He stated that he did so on the instructions of the second defendant who wanted to protect his grandmother, but that he did not himself see or consult the lady nor were any instructions taken by him from her though the second defendant was in communication with her throughout. Bai Jaiji herself gave evidence giving her age as 40 years: she said that Byramji had paid her the interest in his lifetime but that after his death the second defendant had not done so in spite of demands but had asked her to wait two years. She denied that she had handed over to him the promissory note.

Before the Board Mr. Roxburgh, for the appellants, in a clear and careful argument, examined separately three possible answers to the question whether the defendants had rendered themselves personally liable to Bai Jaiji, (1) that they were so liable both for principal and interest; (2) that they were so liable for interest alone either (a) for two years from the date of the memorandum, or (b) until repayment; (3) they were not so liable at all. In the High Court the learned trial Judge had taken the first view and the Appellate Bench the third; their Lordships agree, however, that the second must be carefully considered. It was further contended for the appellants that personal liability might be brought home to the defendants either on the footing that they have agreed to pay or on the footing that they have admitted assets. Upon the second of these alternatives it was suggested that the learned Judges in India do not seem to have disputed the applicability of the principles of English Law and that the English decisions, some of which were followed by Barlee, J., are particularly strong to the effect that an executor may incur liability by making a statement about the assets of the testator which amounts to an admission of assets. Their Lordships, however, for reasons which will be indicated later in this judgment, are not prepared to give unqualified adherence to the view that English Law as to admission of assets is law in India either within or outside of the Presidency towns.

In the present case it is to be observed that in the plaint the personal liability of the defendants was put entirely upon the memorandum of August 10, 1928. It was not pleaded that the defendants had become liable by reason of any admission of assets dehors the memorandum whether by conduct or by words. Indeed admission of assets as distinct from agreement to pay personally was not in the plaint put forward as a ground of claim at all. In these circumstances while the memorandum must be given its true effect in law, it is not open to the appellants, for the purposes of this appeal, to rely on statements made in evidence by the second defendant as to his sister's legacy having been paid or other creditors having been paid or having been given security. If, however, the appellants should at any time get judgment against the defendants for any sum to be realised out of the assets of the testator, it may be that in execution proceedings it will still be open to them on the basis of some such facts to make a case (under sub-s. (2) of s. 52 of the Code) that the defendants have not duly applied all the assets which came to their hands.

The only matter upon this appeal is the nature and extent of the liability incurred by the defendants under the memorandum of August 10, 1928. The defendants are in the opening words described as executors and trustees of the will of Byramji. The recitals do not contain any details of the debt due from Byramji's estate. The dates of the loans, the rate of interest, the sums outstanding for principal and for interest are not given: all that is said is that up to date the debt exceeds Rs. 30,000. The recitals do, however, purport to disclose in terms that the executors had no cash available wherewith to pay the debt, that their only prospect of paying depended on the state of the property market which was at that time depressed, and that they were giving security in order to gain two years' time. There is here no suggestion that the defendants as executors had been in default in any way or were admitting that they had assets out of which they might and should have paid. Their offer to Bai Jaiji as recited is an offer to give her security for the testator's debt to the extent of Rs. 30,000 by equitable mortgage of the right, title and interest of the testator. Though the second defendant deposed that the debt originally carried interest at six per cent. with quarterly rests, the learned trial Judge was not prepared to believe that compound interest was payable at all, the promissory notes having been destroyed. But the way in which the debt is recited in this memorandum without any distinction between what was then due for principal and interest is, in their Lordships' opinion, some corroboration of the defendant on this point and there is no contradiction by Bai Jaiji. Their Lordships find it very difficult to make any inference against the defendants on the ground that the original terms as to interest were varied by the memorandum—a contention which seems to them to be unproved.

The operative clause of memorandum begins by creating an equitable mortgage upon the properties for securing to Bai Jaiji repayment with interest of the sum of Rs. 30,000 then due to her by the estate of Byramji represented by the executors of his will. This is followed first by a clause—"such sum to be repayable at any time within two years from the date hereof such time to be selected by the said executors"—which is no more than a way of saying that it was not to be demandable for two years. Then comes the interest clause (so to call it): "that they (the said executors) will in the meantime pay interest every month on the first day of each English month at the rate of six per cent. per annum with compound interest at the same rate with quarterly rests on all arrears of interest not paid on the due date."

By s. 58, cl. (a), of the T. P. Act it is clear that a mortgage may be given as security not merely for money lent but for any debt or liability. If the executors of a deceased debtor think fit for consideration to give security over an asset belonging to his estate to one of his creditors in respect of a debt due from the estate, the transaction may or may not be one to which other creditors or persons can take exception. But if it is not intended that the executors should assume personal liability for the secured debt there is nothing in the T. P. Act or in the law of India to make them so liable by reason that they have granted the security or by reason that they have done so by deposit of the testator's deeds. Apart from the clause as to interest, which calls for a separate discussion, the memorandum contains no covenant by anyone to repay the principal sum of Rs. 30,000, no statement that the executors would assume personal liability for it, no representation or admission to the creditor as to the sufficiency of the testator's assets to meet either the original debt or the sum of Rs. 30,000.

There is, however, a covenant to pay interest on the sum of Rs. 30,000. This is not itself qualified by any phrase to the effect that they agree "as executors" to pay it or that they are to pay it out of the assets of the testator. Nor is there any other specific expression directed to distinguish between a simple promise by the defendants to pay and a promise by the defendants, for themselves and their successors in office, to pay upon condition that the assets of the testator should permit of the payment being made thereout. The question arises whether such a qualification can be derived from the context, and on this point much depends upon the period in respect of which the promise to pay interest is made. Their Lordships think it to be reasonably plain that the words "in the meantime" have reference to the period of two years or less referred to in the words immediately preceding and that they cannot be extended to cover the whole period that might elapse between the date of the memorandum and the actual payment of Rs. 30,000 to Bai Jaiji. The defendants were to continue to collect the rents of the mortgaged property and might very reasonably have been expected, for the two years during which she gave up her right to recover her money, to see that the interest was paid to her. The recitals as to her having made demands must be taken against the defendants and it seems unreasonable to doubt that the lady would feel the loss of this portion of her income. On the other hand the clause is the only covenant to pay interest and the only part of the memorandum in which any specific rate of interest is mentioned. It is expressed in language which is common form in Indian mortgages, which not infrequently, as the reports show, provide expressly for the payment of interest up to the "due date" of the mortgage but omit to make provision for any subsequent period. The last clause, however, makes the property a security for the interest as well as the principal until repayment. The learned Judges of the Appellate Bench considered that the covenant to pay interest was to be read with the reference to interest in the previous part of the same clause and merely specified the interest already referred to. The question is by no means free from difficulty, but upon a careful consideration of the clause their Lordships think, the promise not having been expressly qualified, that in the context there is not enough to show that the promise was intended as conditional upon the sufficiency of the testator's assets having regard to the limited period of time (two years) to which it extends and the circumstances of the transaction.

It is to be noticed that the executors had not been paying the interest and that apparently the estate was without sufficient cash even to ensure that the interest would be regularly paid. The rate is not expressly stated to be the same rate as applied to the original debt even if it was so in fact. Their Lordships do not think that they will be applying to this Indian case a technical or unjust rule if they hold that it was for the executors to make clear that their words of promise were not to be taken in the direct and simple sense of a personal covenant, and that on a true construction of this memorandum they have made themselves personally liable for the interest which accrued during the two years with, of course, interest thereon.

It was contended for the appellants that if it be found that the defendants had made themselves personally liable to pay any interest, this finding would involve a liability on their part in respect of the whole of the debt both principal and interest, at all events if the obligation which they undertook differs in any way from the original obligation of the testator. It was said that the sum of Rs. 30,000 was only a part of the testator's debt and that the testator was not shown to have been liable for compound interest. Hence, on the facts of the present case, the principle was invoked that a promise by an executor to pay interest differing in any particular from the testator's own obligation involves admission of assets and renders the executor personally liable for principal also. As authority for this proposition, reference was made to Bradley v. Heath (1) and Childs v. Monins (2),

These were both cases in which executors appear to have qualified their promise to pay the testator's debt by the words "as executors" and yet were held personally liable on the construction of the instrument as a whole upon the ground that they promised to pay in the future with interest for which the testator was not liable. In Bradley's case (1), the matter was entangled with further debts incurred by the executors to the creditor after the testator's death. In Childs' case (2), the instrument was a promissory note, the promise was joint and several and was to pay on demand. These cases disclose reasons why the words "as executor" will not in all circumstances be sufficient to show that the payment is only to be made "out of the estate."

In India as in England it is open to an executor in consideration that a creditor of his testator will forbear to sue to make himself liable for the debt whether the assets of the testator be sufficient or insufficient. The forbearance will be consideration to support the promise. It may even be that where there is an agreement by the creditor to give time, the executor will readily be regarded as intending to make himself personally liable. This must, however, in all cases be a question either of fact (what the agreement was) or of construction, if the agreement was reduced to writing: though their Lordships know of nothing in the law of India which warrants any presumption against the executor in this regard, his words of covenant will prima facie be given their ordinary meaning. If the truth be that the executor has obtained time not by promising that he would pay but by granting to the creditor a mortgage or charge over assets of the testator in respect of the debt or part of the debt, there is no rule of Indian law which alters or enlarges the agreement of the parties. And if it be, as in the present case, part of that agreement that the executor shall assume liability for the interest alone and that only for a defined period, to impose a liability for the whole of the debt would be all the more pointedly in conflict with the intention of the parties. It is good sense to infer when a person makes himself liable indefinitely for the interest on a debt that he means to assume liability for the principal since if the debt be never paid the interest would run for ever. It is also true that
